"Our reservations about implementation arise out of the problems that have occurred in putting into effect the 1976 Act outside London and the proposals that implementation within London should be by the 32 London Boroughs allowing for wide differences in requirements."

Other hon. Members, including the Minister, have referred to that point.

It is ridiculous that 32 boroughs should apply different standards and introduce different systems and procedures. London is an entity. It is not a collection of 32 self-governing islands. It needs a uniform system and, if such a system is to be brought in, it should come after the most careful investigation by the Department of Transport and through Government legislation rather than legislation from the boroughs.

I am somewhat surprised that the London boroughs should be seeking these additional powers. Most local authorities are busy telling us with every breath that they can muster that they cannot use the powers they have because they do not have enough resources. Here they are in London, apparently looking for new powers—powers that need resources. We have already heard that they will not have access to criminal records so as to carry out the careful scrutiny of minicab drivers that many of us think is essential in any system of regulation.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman said that he finds it strange that the 32 London boroughs are asking for extra powers, and I agree. However, there is a possible reason why they have been driven that way—the absence of a Greater London council. We have all agreed—even the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley)—that there is something wrong with the minicab trade in London. It is conceivable that the authorities, also agreeing, thought that somebody had to find some method of control and have come up with this, which is little more than a dog's dinner. They are trying to make a seven-course dinner out of a pan of boiling water. They are searching for some control, but that control should be exercised by a Greater London authority.

Mr. Cartwright: The hon. Member makes a fair case. It would have been a more persuasive case had the boroughs concerned been willing to agree to a standard system that each would have operated on a voluntary basis. It may have been easier to have it imposed by a supra-London authority, but if the 32 boroughs had wanted an effective system, it would have been better if they had got together and agreed that they would do it the same way. Sadly, that has not happened.

If the boroughs are to do the job effectively, they will need resources. They will have to take on staff, set up administrations and check vehicles. I doubt whether they will check them three times a year, which is what the Bill provides for, but if they are to do the job properly, duties will fall on them and extra costs will be incurred. We know that the boroughs will not get extra money from the Government, and I find it hard to believe that they have the money already. My local authority—poll tax-capped as it is—will have to cut its spending in the current financial year by £10 million. I cannot believe that it will have enough spare resources to take on this additional responsibility. We may be told that this scheme will be self-financing and that the income from licences will be sufficient to meet all the costs involved. Having been in local government for quite a few years, I am suspicious of anything presented as self-financing, because nine times out of 10 it turns out to be nothing of the sort.

Although this proposal is well meaning, it will create the impression of regulation whereas any system that flows from clause 4 will not provide the stringent and effective enforcement for which the public has every right to look. Therefore, I urge the sponsor of the Bill to withdraw clause 4.

8.58 pm

Mr. Steve Norris (Epping Forest): I begin by echoing the commendation of my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley). My hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes has had to plough a difficult furrow in sponsoring the Bill. Much of the Bill is unexceptionable, however, and there is no doubt about his bona fides when it comes to clause 4, which has detained us this evening. It would be churlish not to admit that one of the greatest mistakes that one can make in politics is to let the perfect be the enemy of the good. My hon. Friend presented an interesting case that suggested exactly that —he said that we should allow some change to be made to the regulations on minicabs in London but less than that which many of us who intend to oppose clause 4 would wish. His intentions are clearly honourable and commend him greatly to all those who are concerned about the safety and regulation of the cab trade in London.

The rumours about the imminent move of my hon. Friend the Minister from one tower of Marsham street to another are rife. This evening, he handled the "on the one hand, on the other hand" argument with great dexterity. He proved the greatest of all adages in politics, which is that if someone cannot ride two horses at the same time he should not be in the circus. I have no doubt that on his move to the Department of the Environment to take up new duties, he will, if the appointment is confirmed, demonstrate dexterity as a bareback rider comparable to that of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer as a trapeze artist.

The title of the Bill is the London Local Authorities (No. 2) Bill, not the London taxi Bill. I say that because I am especially interested, as my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes is, in clause 6, which relates to the crime prevention powers of local authorities. There is a respectable pedigree for the inclusion of the clause in the Bill by the authorities, not least the eighth Home Office circular of 1984. That circular stressed that the police alone could not be expected to be responsible for preventing crime in the community. It stated, in effect, that crime in the community could be prevented only when the community as a whole accepted that crime is its problem. As part of that, everyone has a responsibility, personal and corporate in his individual life and business life, to do something about crime.

The most telling illustration was that even the Department of Energy is responsible in part for the prevention of crime. In many London estates, the most frequently committed crime is that of breaking into utility meters. Coinless meters eliminate that offence, but the speed with which that sort of meter is installed is, or has been in the past, the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. There is a link with crime, even with a Department that is as far removed from it, ostensibly, as the Department of Energy. With local authorities, the link is even more powerful. The authorities have a key role in the prevention of crime, and one of my greatest regrets is that in general debate we do not recognise that local authorities, whether or not they are guilty of mini-imperialism, and whether or not it is right to restrict them to the provision of a number of basic services or to regard them as having a more general duty, have a unique status as enablers in the community to ensure that effective crime prevention measures are developed to the benefit of everyone.

Crime Concern is the charitable trust that I established in 1988, with Home Office support, to promote voluntary crime prevention. I am delighted by the interest that is being shown by my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker), who is a Government Whip. The trust has been working with many local authorities on the establishment of area crime reduction programmes, which are an effective implementation of the safer cities initiative. There are co-ordinators in post in Luton, Sandwell and Solihull, and recruitments are in hand in Kirklees, Halton, and Suffolk. Programmes are agreed in Peterborough, Plymouth, Walsall and elsewhere. It is being demonstrated in all these places that local authorities, hand-in-hand with voluntary organisations, and with the co-operation of the police, can be effective focal points for crime prevention initiatives.

My hon. Friend the Minister talked about the reservations that have been expressed by the Department of the Environment about the necessity of clause 6, and in some ways I share those reservations. The work to private dwellings and commercial premises described in clause 6(2) could be carried out by a housing authority, facilities for self-defence classes could be provided under education or social services powers, facilities for vocational training courses could be provided under education powers, facilities for counselling victims of crime could be, and frequently are, undertaken by local authorities or sponsored by local authorities under their social services powers, and many of the facilities necessary for the undertaking of research to aid crime prevention do not require particular funding. Many in the Home Office would argue that we suffer from a plethora rather than a dearth of research and that that is not a priority for crime prevention work.

There can be no great objection to the general move to put local authorities in the centre of the frame on crime prevention, as the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) said, but I share the reservations of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on whether the particular form of words in the Bill is necessary for the advancement of that objective.

Let me deal now with the notorious clause 4—words which must be strangely redolent to Labour Members, not to mention the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) who will in his time have entered into the odd debate on the significance of clause 4. However, I shall not embarrass him further. Suffice it to say that my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Mr. Bendall), who represents a substantial number of London black cab drivers, did an excellent job in cogently explaining why clause 4 is deficient. He was ably supported by the hon. Members for Deptford and for Woolwich.

I do not doubt that the London cab system is the best in the world. I know of no other system which provides the breadth of security, safety and reassurance to the casual user that is provided by the London taxi system. Not only is it a tourist attraction in itself, it is an ambassador at home for those here on holiday.

With some honourable and often hilarious exceptions, cab drivers are, in the main, as my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North said, charming, generous, witty, friendly, amusing and, most of all, they get to where they have to go honourably by the quickest route whether or not the passenger's first language is English.

Epping Forest is a far cry from Oxford, East where such was the surprise at my election that when I went to the drinks party afterwards my supporters said they they were delighted that I had won but that they never thought I would do it, implying that if they had thought so they would have been much more careful in selecting their candidate. At Epping Forest I learnt quickly that the constituency slogan was, "Tax are things for keeping down the stair carpet." I thought that that referred to income tax, but I later found that it had a more general application. My constituents are vigorous in their defence of free enterprise and a low taxation economy. As such, I value their opinions.

My hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes referred to his Ghanaian barrister who, after a week in Britain, decided to become a minicab driver without knowing the way to the House of Commons. I was surprised that my hon. Friend the Minister was unable to obtain sufficient evidence of the deficiencies of the minicab trade. I share the casual experience of my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes, which I venture to suggest will be familiar to most other people who have used them.

The operation of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 has been less than adequate. Although well intentioned, sadly, that Act led to the creation of no fewer than three tiers of operation. The first is the London black cab. Beneath that comes the regulated minicab, and the third tier is the unregulated minicab. It is not exceptional to find a minicab driver who does not have a clue where he is going and who charges whatever fare he thinks one can stand according to the cut of one's suit—it is more likely to be the rule. The more that I speak to people about the Bill and about minicabs in general, the clearer it becomes that the experience I describe is the norm throughout the country. It goes beyond the instances recounted by my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes.

When there is a system of using ordinary cars to which minimal alterations are made, and subject only to minimal servicing, a sub-culture is created—and that is where the danger lies. As to the attitude of the Suzy Lamplugh Trust to the Bill, my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson), who could not be present this evening, asked me specifically to make it clear that she, as a trustee of that trust, is very concerned about the operation of clause 4. As she points out, the woman who enters a minicab alone, and perhaps at night, is confronted by someone who she has never met before in her life. One can stop right there—one need not elaborate on that statement. The attendant risks if one cannot be sure that the person driving that cab is not someone whose criminal record has been examined, whose general bona fides have been scrutinised, and whose general temperament has also been tested by an examination process, are self-evident.

I move on from the assertion that one advantage of the well-regulated London cab system is that its drivers know where they are going to make the point that London cabs are safe in terms of the stringent standards applied by the Public Carriage Office. It is always amusing to hear cabbies complain in vitriolic terms about the scrupulous standards applied, but no doubt those standards operate in the interests of the general public—and they are certainly higher than the standards anticipated by the Bill.

I do not share the view that applicants for licences would flood to those boroughs where the minimal knowledge requirements applied. My belief is that they would flood to those where the least stringent servicing requirements were enforced. There certainly would be a minimum standard of minicabs—the standard of the least stringent borough in terms of inspection and servicing, which would be highly undesirable.

Not only are London cabs safe, but London cabbies are vetted.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that there is a growing practice in the west end late at night of private cars plying for hire, and that to allow clause 4 to reach the statute book would exacerbate that situation? Given the incidence of attacks with which we are already familiar, a considerable number of Londoners, never mind tourists, would be placed at considerable risk if we were to permit a badly drafted Bill and an ill-advised clause to pass into law.

Mr. Norris: I agree with the broad thrust of the hon. Gentleman's remarks. I think it was my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North who made the telling observation that one usually needs a cab just at the very moment when they all seem to disappear. In those circumstances, any port is welcome in a storm. If a cab or what purports to be a cab pulls up late at night, the human reaction is to leap aboard. That is the danger and the nub of the matter.

I now return to the way in which cabbies are vetted because some elements have not yet been mentioned. First, we have heard about the requirement that they should be knowledgeable about the routes that they will ply. I take that as a sine qua non. There is every intention of referring to that requirement in clause 4. Secondly, as I remember vividly from that wonderfully amusing play by Jack Rosenthal called "The Knowledge", part of the tortuous process which the cabbie must undergo to obtain knowledge is a personality test. An endeavour is made to ascertain whether those who wish to ply for hire as a driver have the temperament appropriate to an extremely stressful job. That is an important requirement which we should not overlook.

The third and most important requirement is the thorough vetting of the applicant's criminal record to ensure, rightly—we cannot stress this too much—that whoever holds one of those prized green or yellow badges is fit to take not only a person whom he or she has never met but property to a distant location. The present facilities in London allow for that. It is common for cab drivers to be entrusted with property to be conveyed from one point to another without the consignor having to worry about the bona fides of the driver. I have known of young children being entrusted to cab drivers to be taken from one address in London to another. That is the most marvellous commendation and one of which to be proud.

The crux of the argument is whether we should allow the perfect to be the enemy of the good. A contrary principle is also involved. It is that if we allow clause 4 into law—it would effectively mean that the standards of the 1976 Act would also apply in London—we shall live with it for many years to come. That is the reality of legislation.

[Mr. Norris]

We would deem ourselves to have dealt with the problem. That simply would not be good enough because the problem, as evidenced elsewhere in the country, and as many hon. Members know, is that the standards laid down by that Act, albeit with good intentions, simply have not created the right conditions. It is no exaggeration to say that people are less safe outside London in areas where the black cab system does not operate than they are in London when they use black cabs.

I notice the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) in his place and attentive as ever. He, too, has drivers as constituents and shares my experience and that of all London Members and London regional Members that that is undoubtedly the case. One of the greatest assets of our transport infrastructure is that we can rely on standards applied by the Metropolitan police in the licensing of London cabs. Sadly, that facility is not available to those who pick up a cab, for example, at a station in most of the major termini in Britain.

Mr. Arbuthnot rose——

Mr. Norris: I note that my hon. Friend, who has several interested constituents and who is my distinguished neighbour in Wanstead and Woodford, wishes to intervene.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Is the problem partly that we would deem ourselves to have dealt with the problem and that many female passengers travelling in London now would also believe that? They would be lulled into a sense of security that would be illusory and false.

Mr. Norris: That is absolutely correct and my hon. Friend expresses the problem well. The veneer of respectability—a phrase used by other hon. Members—would apply to minicabs if the clause was passed into law and that is the precise danger to which my hon. Friends have alluded.

The dilemma is whether we allow the perfect to be the enemy of the good and oppose the clause or accept that we cannot allow a deficient principle to pass into law. There is ample evidence elsewhere in the country to suggest that the principle is deficient. With the greatest regret and with the greatest respect for the arguments advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes, I believe that we must reject the clause.

The clause does not relate to competition and it is not a proposal designed to extend a great free-market principle to the carriage of persons about London. My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North said that between 800 and 1,000 new licences are issued every year and that the new system of licensing those from outer London in more zones than hitherto is likely to lead to an increase in the number of those licences issued. The hon. Member for Deptford also said that something is being done about that problem. We are making progress to help those who cannot currently obtain a black cab licence.

One may argue that competitive forces may, on occasions, drive down the cost of a minicab, but that is not surprising when one considers the investment required for safety in the proper London cab and the investment required in terms of time to acquire the "knowledge"—cab drivers estimate that it takes up to 650 hours. In terms of a reasonable rate of pay, the time spent to acquire it represents an investment of about £4,000.

A minicab can be cheaper than a black cab, but is it like for like? I am afraid the answer is no and my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford has not accurately observed that we would still be offering London people a two-tier system, if not a three-tier system—one which operates dangerously elsewhere. Sadly, the lower two tiers would be deficient.

I hope that many of the Bill's provisions can be retained, but, if necessary, my hon. Friends and I who live with this problem in London will be obliged to oppose its further passage. In many ways I regret that decision, but I hope that the House will accept that the price we are being asked to pay in terms of clause 4 is too high.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): This is a modest but nevertheless important Bill of a completely uncontroversial nature except in one respect.

One gives wholehearted support to the provisions in the Bill which deal with the restoration of water, gas and electricity services. Such restoration will be of concern to many of our constituents who are confronted with that problem. I welcome all that is said about crime prevention. It is vital that we should spend more time and money on counselling the victims of crime and on the other laudable crime prevention measures outlined in the Bill. I hope that all those measures will proceed—but not clause 4, which is of a different ilk. It has been hastily brought to the House, it is ill-conceived and I fear that it would have the reverse effect of that intended by the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley).

Mr. Hanley rose——

Mr. Boateng: I will give way in due course, I have a great deal of respect for the hon. Gentleman, but I fear that he has erred in this respect.

Mr. Hanley rose——

Mr. Boateng: I will give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment. Considering that good is being held back by the presence of clause 4, that clause should be allowed to disappear quietly so that the good may proceed. I commend that course to the hon. Gentleman. I give way to him in the hope that he will accept my advice, in which case I need speak no more.

Mr. Hanley: I rise simply to explain to the hon. Gentleman, who was not here earlier, that this is not a private Member's Bill. I am not its promoter. I am merely introducing it on behalf of 31 London boroughs, including all the Labour London boroughs. The hon. Gentleman should therefore not blame me for any aspects of the measure of which he disapproves. He must blame his own council, which is a sponsor of the Bill, including clause 4.

Mr. Boateng: The hon. Gentleman doth protest too much. I was not for one moment blaming him for doing what he feels that he must do.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): The hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) is being somewhat disingenuous. If in the course of this debate he would tell the sponsors of the Bill, who are usually present at such discussions, that to hon. Members who represent London constituencies—including myself—clause 4 is totally unacceptable and must be removed from the measure, he could report their view to the House before the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. Boateng: My hon. Friend is as perceptive as ever. The hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes is being somewhat disingenuous, though not for the first time.

Mr. Hanley: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman is himself being disingenuous in view of the fact that the sponsors include his local authority and that of the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith).

The Suzy Lamplugh Trust is conducting research with a grant of up to £20,500 from the Department of Transport and is endeavouring, with the Police Foundation, to raise a matching sum. I hope that that research will continue in the coming year and will result in legislation which the hon. Members for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) and for Islington, South and Finsbury will be able to support.

It is with regret, in view of their remarks, that I give an undertaking that the promoters, including the hon. Gentleman's local authority, will ask in Committee that the clause, together with schedule 2, be withdrawn.

Mr. Boateng: One welcomes those occasions when good sense prevails, particularly in the case of one's own local authority. I am delighted to hear the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes promoting the cause of my local authority so ably and effectively, and I hope that he will promote the welfare of my area on other occasions, too.

We must not overlook the serious point that is raised. I am a patron of the Suzy Lamplugh Trust, which does much good and important work, but that has not stopped me opposing clause 4 root and branch. Because I support the work of the trust and because safety and security, particularly for women, are vital, we must nurture, enhance and extend the role of the black cab rather than do anything to diminish it.

The House must review carefully the results of the research being undertaken and it may be necessary for legislation to be introduced in due course. I am sure that that will be welcomed by hon. Members in all parts of the House when it comes forward. For enabling the debate to take place, those who promote the Bill deserve our thanks.

I want us to bear in mind one fact that was put most cogently by a constituent, Mrs. Elsie Dellar of Kensal Rise, who wrote to me. The House will need to consider what she said when it considers legislation once the results of the research currently commissioned are available. She asked me and my colleagues to answer the following few, but vital, questions. First, she asked whether the licensed minicab drivers would have to give up two years to do the knowledge. She further asked:

"Would their vehicles have to have a complete overhaul once a year? Would their meters be sealed and checked? Would they be checked for any criminal offence or record? Would they have medical checks? Would they use vehicles specified by the carriage office? If to all these questions the answer is yes then by all means license them because they would be what they should be—a London cabbie."

That says it all.

Mrs. Dellar continues that if the answers are no and my colleagues and I vote for minicabs to be licensed, we will be giving the public over to any person who wants to drive a car without any effective control whatsoever over the circumstances in which they drive it and the peril that they may cause to the public. Such people must be viewed with a great deal of circumspection.

It is impossible to water down the qualities that need to be possessed by London cabbies, who are the pride not only of our nation, but of all those from wherever in the world who care about how these tasks are performed. Cab systems in the rest of the world are deficient in every respect when compared with ours. We must build on the useful debate that we have had today and of which we shall no doubt hear more so as to strengthen the black cab's position and not diminish it.

9.32 pm

Mr. Patrick Ground (Feltham and Heston): I shall make two short points because I know that many other hon. Members want to speak. First, I am not convinced of the need for a separate licensing system for private hire vehicles in London. I have used minicabs and black cabs for many years, and my experience of both has been satisfactory. I endorse everything that has been said about the standards of black cabs and accept that that is the standard for which to aim. However, I am not satisfied, from the anecdotes that have been told and the results of the review carried out by the Department of Transport, that there is sufficient hard evidence to justify the sort of system that we are being asked to consider tonight. I want to see much more hard evidence before I am prepared to be convinced about that. My hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) complained about being in a minicab with a driver who did not know the way to the House of Commons. That may happen with minicabs, but I do not regard that as sufficient hardship to require an elaborate licensing system for minicabs.

The review being undertaken by the Home Office and the Suzy Lamplugh Trust has plainly not yet finished. It appears that it will not be completed until later this year, possibly next. The case put forward by my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes shows that the consideration of the need for such legislation should await the conclusion of research that establishes the need for such a system.

Secondly, I am not convinced that, if the licensing of private hire vehicles in London is needed, individual London boroughs are the right bodies to exercise that control. We are down to 29 London boroughs now and it is very unsatisfactory to have a secondary system for London supported by only 29 boroughs. If I am right in detecting what has been said by Opposition Members, that number is likely to fall pretty quickly, so it is even more unsatisfactory that the system should enjoy such piecemeal support.

I am struck by the fact that there was no consultation between the London boroughs and the Licensed Taxi Drivers Association or the formal associations and trade representatives of the private vehicle trade in London before this legislation was begun. It is a sign of inadequate consideration and preparation. After the House had decided in 1976 not to have this particular form of control for London, surely substantial study, consultation and consideration were required before attempting to change the position which Parliament had established by a deliberate act some 14 or 15 years earlier.

I strongly oppose clause 4, and I am delighted to hear that, on the strength of tonight's debate, my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes has committed himself to withdrawing the clause in Committee; retention of the clause would have made it extremely difficult for me to support the Bill.

9.36 pm

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): Ambrose Bierce, the late 19th century American satirist, defined a taxi as a tormenting vehicle in which a pirate jolts you through devious ways to the wrong place, where he robs you. That is not a description which I would like to apply to all minicab drivers, but some of them certainly come into that category. I must be a little careful in what I say about minicab drivers because I have several minicab firms in my constituency which, being in outer London, is not very well served by the black cab. On the whole, they do an excellent job, but there are pirates among them.

I have been extremely worried about the effect that clause 4 would have had on the black cab system which is well proved, well tried and excellent—a system without peer in the world and one at which people from other countries look with envy, wishing that they had something like it.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on the way in which he introduced the Bill this evening, and I congratulate him warmly on the way in which he realised what hon. Members thought about clause 4 and decided to withdraw it. He has conducted himself extremely well tonight, and the whole House will be grateful to him.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): I join the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) in welcoming the important statement of the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) in an intervention in the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng). The decision of the hon. Gentleman and of the sponsors of the Bill to seek in Committee to withdraw clause 4 is welcome and means that we can allow the Bill to receive its Second Reading.

Some provisions in the Bill, especially in relation to the restoration of water, gas and electricity services, and to crime prevention, are welcome and we wish them good speed on to the statute book.

Clause 4 concerned me greatly. Many of my constituents drive black cabs and clause 4 represented a real threat to the black cab service in London. That threat has been effectively removed by the statement of the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes. We will want to see what happens to the Bill in Committee, but the hon. Gentleman will stand by his word and we will have seen the last of clause 4. Perhaps more considered measures can be brought before us later which will pose less of a threat to the invaluable service which black cabs provide in our capital city.

Mr. Neil Thorne (Ilford, South): The Bill has very few of its original clauses. When it started its life in the other place it had 58 clauses, but only eight are left. Some are very important and we wish to see them pass into law. Clause 4 has caused many of us difficulty. I welcome the agreement of my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) to seek the withdrawal of the clause in Committee. It was ill-advised to include it in the Bill for the simple reason that we are very fortunate in London to have such an excellent taxi service. The black cab system is the envy of the world and it would be wrong to undermine it in any way. Where it is competing with minicabs it is subject to unfair competition.

I am in favour of the law descending upon minicab firms and drivers who do not conduct their business properly, but it is not right to do it in the way suggested in the Bill. Some months ago a constituent of mine who was riding in a minicab found herself in an accident in which she was injured. The driver managed to take her out of the cab, put her on the roadside and drove off. She later contacted the office where she had made the booking but the people in the office denied any knowledge of the booking. That is typical of many minicab firms. I hope that the Government will consider requiring minicab drivers to have proper commercial insurance. They should suffer hefty fines if they fail to comply with the requirements.

I am convinced that clause 4 was the wrong way to approach the problem in the centre of London. There are not so many drivers of black cabs living in my constituency as in Ilford, North, but there are a considerable number and they have expressed concern about the measure. We have to ensure that they are properly looked after and that their taxi system is not undermined. I should be the last to say that we should not have ample competition, but certain standards must be met. Women need a safe and reliable form of transport, especially late at night. They need to know that they can get home without being molested, and that they can rely on the driver to have integrity, not to have a criminal record, to have adequate insurance and to be properly qualified in driving skills, so that they know where they are being taken. The black cab service is second to none.

I am delighted to welcome the Bill, and I wish the remainder of it a successful passage through the House.

9.44 pm

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): As a provincial Member, I had not intended to barge in on the cosy deliberations of London Members. However, I am increasingly alarmed at the terms of clause 4. Anything up to half my constituents come to London every day to work, and they are proud of the standard of service provided by the black cabs in our great capital city, but clause 4 would undermine that service.

As a west Kent Member, I have many constituents who serve as licensed black cab drivers in London. They are alarmed at clause 4. Their concern can best be summed up by a letter that I received from Mr. J. L. Rogers of Istead rise in my constituency:

> "In London we already have a licensing authority, the Metropolitan police, which produces the most envied taxi service in the world. This Bill will completely undermine this service, as people who would want to sign on to do 'the knowledge', could see a much easier option to become 'legal'.

Clearly, whether or not the promoters intended it, clause 4 would do much to destroy the quality of the taxi service in London. Therefore, I was reassured to hear from the sponsor of the Bill—my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley)—that he intends to recommend that, in Committee, clause 4 and its attachments be withdrawn. On that basis, I do not intend to oppose the Bill.

9.46 pm

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): As another outsider, I came back from my constituency tonight, as I am worried about clause 4. It must be said to the House that clause 4 must go. Anything less would not be acceptable. I must declare an interest as a member of the Transport and General Workers Union and as a practising barrister, but I have also drawn experience from my days as a member of Sheffield city council. Unfortunately, in Sheffield we did not have a large number of black cab drivers, so we had the minicab problem.

The hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) spoke about clause 6. When I served as deputy chairman of a licensing committee many years ago, I experienced the problem that it was not possible to place restrictions on where drivers went. We did not have enough knowledge about them, and, more important, we could not control their vehicles. The black cabs meet those criteria. As I said earlier, I am worried about carriage—especially at night—by persons who are not vetted in vehicles that may not be of the right standard and quality. That is a matter for further concern, and we should examine it in the near future in a wider area than London.

I see that the Minister for Public Transport is in his place. I have heard horrible rumours that he is about to move, but most Ministers are about to move in the near future, so it matters not. If he does move, perhaps his successor will mark my words: there is a considerable feeling in the House that we should examine licensing, vehicle structure and control, as it is causing increasing concern. One reads and hears of attacks on innocent members of the public by minicab drivers who adopt a "here today, gone tomorrow" approach, whose names are sometimes unknown, and whose vehicles are sometimes uninsured and probably began their first journey of the day from the scrap yard and returned to it on their last journey of the evening. Throughout the day, they place the lives of human beings at risk.

As for clause 6, I welcome the idea of crime prevention, but I do not think that the clause goes far enough. Its wording is very loose and, in Committee, I should like the Minister to reassure London local authorities that he will help to fund crime prevention. We have all been faced with rate capping in the past; my own local authority has just been poll tax-capped.

When deciding how to spend money—for instance, on supporting bodies that give assistance to victims, on neighbourhood watch schemes and so on—local authorities, when capped and when their standard spending assessments do not include money for crime prevention, cannot encourage it. I gently suggest that money is necessary for preventing crime. The Home Office does its bit for crime research, but local authorities have an enormous part to play in bringing home good crime prevention ideas locally; they in turn might just bring down the crime rate and that would enhance the quality of our lives.

However, all this requires money. Clause 6 is not broad or detailed enough, and perhaps it needs tidying up in Committee. On this important night, when local authorities are being elected and re-elected, I suggest that, before the Minister departs for other shores, he might persuade his colleagues that there could be some mileage in putting a little Government money into helping local authorities with crime prevention.

I apologise for trespassing on the affairs of London, but as an outsider who lives and works in London occasionally, I thought that some things had to be said.

9.52 pm

Mr. Hanley: The whole House has given a vote of confidence tonight to the licensed hackney carriage trade. I repeat what I said earlier: it is the best carriage trade in the world. The promoters—the 31 London boroughs—did not and do not intend any harm or insult to that trade; they merely wanted to protect the public from the deficiencies in the London minicab trade and in the minicab trade throughout the country by bringing into London legislation exactly the same as that which has served the rest of the country for the past 14 years. This legislation was perhaps to be a precursor of tougher legislation, following important research by the Suzy Lamplugh Trust.

There are many other important clauses in the Bill and it is clear from the thoughtful contributions by hon. Members on both sides of the House that people would be sad if the other clauses failed. So the promoters have reluctantly—but understanding the feelings of the House—given a firm instruction to the Committee to withdraw clause 4 and schedule 2. I hope that, in return, those who have petitioned the Committee will feel that they can withdraw their petitions so that the Bill can become an unopposed measure in Committee. I know that I have the assurance of the licensed taxi drivers' trade; I do not yet have the assurance of the TGWU——

Ms. Ruddock: I cannot give an instruction for the withdrawal of the petition, but I will certainly recommend it and expect that it will be accepted.

Mr. Hanley: I am grateful to the hon. Lady for her constructive intervention.

Mr. Bendall: I do not want to delay the House, but the LTDA will do likewise. It cannot speak for others, of course. I believe that there is a third petition.

Mr Hanley: There is a third petition. As it was only on clause 4 and schedule 2, the House would appreciate it if the petitioner would think carefully, read tonight's debate and act accordingly.

Mr. Bendall: I have had the nod from the Strangers' Gallery to withdraw the other petition.

Mr Hanley: This is a most happy but strange occasion. I am acting on behalf of 31 London boroughs and I find myself thrilled to have failed so magnificently but achieved the withdrawal of the three petitions.

The House will welcome the fact that the Bill is now an unopposed private Bill. In that spirit, may I ask that it be given a Second Reading?

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read a Second time and committed.

Railway Line (North Wales Coast)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

9.55 pm

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Môn): This is the second Adjournment debate that I have been fortunate enough to secure. On the first occasion, I referred to the town of Holyhead and its importance as a port linking Ireland with Wales, England and mainland Europe. The fact that in this debate I will concentrate my remarks on railway links, which form an integral part of the transport network linking Ireland and Europe, shows the continuing importance of the topic to my constituents and to the people of north-west Wales.

The town and port of Holyhead prospered when strategic decisions were made about the A5 across to the island over Telford's bridge and the railway link built over the Britannia bridge. In the 19th century, the Holyhead to Dun Laoghaire and Dublin link became the premier route for Irish traffic.

Almost two centuries later, Holyhead once again assumes central importance as new links are opened for European traffic. The position of Ireland and Wales on the Community's periphery makes good road and railway communications vital to our prosperity. As the House knows, our economy in north-west Wales has a weak base and in recent years has been buffeted by the economic downturn and recession, but to enable us to fight back, as we will, and to compete effectively in the Europe of big companies and financial battalions, an integrated transport network is essential.

The opening of the channel tunnel later this decade and the introduction of the open market in 1992 bring into focus the need for early decisions, as we are in the process of setting a European network of communications to serve us for the next 100 years. Any area that has no link in that network will be severely disadvantaged and in danger of becoming an economic backwater. The gap between the rich and poor regions will become even wider.

My view, which is shared by many others, as I will explain, is that the north Wales coast railway line between Holyhead and Crewe must be upgraded and electrified as part of the process of improving our communications. British Rail's current position is that the line does not have priority in its strategic planning and it is not prepared to commit itself to the investment necessary for such a scheme, although European Community funds could be available for the project. Indeed, although it has upgraded part of the line between Bangor and Crewe, it is not prepared to upgrade the section across the island of Anglesey. On parts of that section, trains are reduced to low speeds because of the condition of the track. I ask the Minister to have talks with British Rail officials on that specific issue.

Upgrading the line is a prerequisite of any electrification scheme. The track must be suitable to take the high speeds that trains can achieve on an electrified network. When the channel tunnel opens, apart from the sea crossing between Holyhead and Ireland, a passenger travelling from Dublin to either Brussels or Paris will have the benefit of an electrified line right across the system, apart from the Holyhead to Crewe section. We will be the weak link in the chain——

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

Mr. Jones: The campaign to have the rail link electrified has received a significant boost in recent months. The Dublin chamber of commerce, which represents the Irish Republic's main business community, believes that the bulk of Ireland's container loads should be carried via Dublin to Holyhead and then onwards. Currently, that route is losing business to the more circuitous routes through Larne and Belfast, at an estimated cost to the Irish economy of £56 million a year.

I ask the Minister to consider the recommendations in the report of the Dublin chamber of commerce, entitled "Corridor to Competitiveness", where many of the arguments are set out in detail. The report argues that the Holyhead to Dublin route, which is referred to as the central corridor, should become the premier route for Irish commercial traffic, both for roll-on, roll-off and for lift-on, lift-off traffic. That is ro-ro for roads and lo-lo for trains. Combined, they account for 58 per cent. of Ireland's external trade, 80 per cent. of which is destined for the United Kingdom market and the balance for the continent.

For most traffic, the central corridor offers the most potential as a reliable and efficient route, providing a short sea crossing to Holyhead and the shortest door-to-door mileage. Of the total number of units emanating from the Irish Republic, a further 125,000 could be accommodated through the central corridor given better facilities both at Holyhead and Dublin, better communications, and certain other factors. There is enormous potential for Holyhead, but clearly we must become more competitive in journey times and more efficient in port handling facilities and we must secure more frequent sailings.

The Irish business community is seeking its Government's backing for the development of a central corridor on the Irish side, with better links to Dublin and better facilities in the port. That backing will almost certainly be given, but it will be meaningless in practical terms unless both the Welsh Office and the Department of Transport are equally committed to securing developments at Holyhead and improvements in the rail network. Only 65,000 units are currently transported by rail through that central corridor. If we are to maximise Holyhead's true potential, that figure must increase significantly.

I readily acknowledge the large investment already undertaken by the Government to dual the A55 across north Wales and the recent announcement to dual the A5 across the island, which is most welcome. That will increase Holyhead's competitiveness. The shipping companies that operate from the ports, Sealink and B and I Line, estimate that those improvements will enable them to carry more commercial traffic.

However, in the end, the road could become the victim of its own success. Even now, we expect it to carry more traffic than was ever envisaged. That is why it is essential to have a rail link as an alternative, but it must be good, efficient and provide a quick service. Once the road is complete, the rail service must retain its competitive edge; unless it does so, it will lose out dramatically.

The campaign to secure the electrification of the line has, in the main, been taken on by the so-called three counties committee, representing the counties of Gwynedd, Clwyd and Cheshire. I place on record my compliments for the tremendous work done by this team in keeping the issue in the public eye and campaigning vigorously. It began its work in 1985, and subsequently commissioned a report, backed by European Community funding and the British Government, to look at the case for electrifying the line, with particular regard to the benefits for inter-city and freight traffic.

The consultants' report shows that, even by the United Kingdom investment criteria, a conditional case could be made for electrification at a cost of about £50 million. It also said that further work needed to be done to establish the opportunity for developing the Holyhead route as a principal freight route between Europe, Britain and Ireland and including an electrified link to Manchester.

The consultants' evaluation has already identified that the concentration of international freight on the line would improve the viability of electrification. The Crewe-Holyhead railway link would, after the opening of the channel tunnel, be the most direct and quick surface route between most of Europe and Ireland. It establishes further that the upgrading of the Crewe to Holyhead line is probably one of the most effective ways to reduce the peripheral status of Ireland and Wales in the post-1992 European Community.

We need to consider the prospects for that line if it is electrified. The overall market for which rail competes in the commercial sector is growing rapidly, at a rate of 5 per cent. per annum. The rail route captures 10 per cent. of the Irish-Great Britain market and a direct route from Ireland to the continent is not available realistically until the channel tunnel opens. However, the potential for increase is substantial when the current Ireland-Europe traffic is brought into the equation, and that will be the case when the channel tunnel is operational. This accounts for 25 per cent. of the total. To attract more traffic or to persuade shippers to diverge from other routes, its use must be effective in terms of cost and transit time.

The overall growth in the total market has been estimated by consultants as 33 per cent. by 1993 if present trends continue and the forecast growth estimated by the single European A is realised. Total markets will be as much as 1 million units by the late 1990s. Therefore, we must look at the potential to increase the current 65,000 units carried by rail through Holyhead, and the consultants estimate that this could increase to over 100,000 if the line is electrified. I acknowledge that this depends on better handling facilities at the port of Holyhead and more frequent sailings.

The representatives of the three counties met the European Transport Commissioner, Karel Van Miert, in October 1989 to ascertain whether European Community funding for the project would be available. The three counties' representatives asked the Commission what assistance could be made available. The Commissioner, fully appreciating the force of the European argument in relation to Ireland, was sympathetic to the electrification proposal. It appears that the Commission would be keen to promote this line as one of European significance and support it by transportation funds when they become available. However, the Commissioner pointed out that it would be possible for that European support to be secured only if an application was made by Governments, and in this case that includes both the British and Irish Governments.

The three counties committee was so encouraged by the response in Brussels that it arranged a further series of meetings with the Irish Government and representatives of the Irish business community to discuss the plan. I was fortunate enough to be able recently to join the delegation for part of its deliberations in Dublin. At a meeting with the Irish Transport Minister, the local authorities were encouraged by his response. He seemed to be an enthusiastic supporter of the project. He suggested that he was prepared to discuss the matter with his counterpart, the Secretary of State for Transport, and I ask the Minister to tell us whether any communication has been received from the Irish Government on the issue and whether the United Kingdom Government are ready to respond, or to tell us how far matters have progressed.

I have read a report by Mr. Tom Ferris, the head of the planning unit of the Department of Transport and Tourism in the Irish Republic, on the implications of the channel tunnel for Ireland. He makes it clear that for Ireland to benefit from the channel tunnel link there must be significant improvements in the quality of service from ports such as Holyhead. He reports that for rail passengers, good train communications from ports such as Holyhead are essential.

Any switch from road to rail traffic carries significant environmental benefits. Indeed, any such switch is likely to confer environmental benefits through reductions in air pollution and noise. Those benefits are unlikely to be significant, however, unless the development of the railway is accompanied by other initiatives, especially those designed to capture container traffic. I believe—I am sure that the House will accept this—that a switch to rail would also reduce accidents. British Rail's accident record is excellent. Another advantage would be a reduction in our dependence upon oil.

It is important—this is an aside from the main thrust of the debate—that consideration should be given to better rail links between north and south Wales. It causes some irritation and anger to people in north Wales that it is far easier to travel to London by train than to our own capital city of Cardiff. I ask the Minister to impress upon British Rail the need to introduce a good, fast and efficient inter-city service between north and south Wales to reduce the noisy, tacky and unacceptable sprinter trains which currently service the route.

Mr. Martyn Jones (Clwyd South-West): I thank my hon. Friend for allowing me to intervene in his precious Adjournment debate. I support everything that he said about the electrification of the north Wales line. I say as a Clwyd Member that this case is well put. He referred to a link between north and south Wales, but also to be considered is the electrification of the Crewe-Wolverhampton line via Shrewsbury. That would lead to better communications with the channel tunnel south, which is important. I shall be interested to hear what the Minister has to say in reply to that as well as to my hon. Friend's submissions.

Mr. Jones: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that intervention. I am sure that the Minister will have heard it.

The Minister will appreciate that I have set out the argument for electrifying the north Wales line in a European context. That electrification, however, would have enormous economic spin-offs for the economy of north Wales generally. It would go a substantial way towards providing us with an essential ingredient of economic regeneration of the area, which is that of good transport communications. To my constituency, of course, Holyhead is the beginning of the line, not the end of it. I believe that the case for electrification has now been set out fully. I urge the Minister to respond positively, to say that the Government are prepared to consider the matter constructively and that the Department of Transport should arrange an urgent meeting with British Rail and the three counties committee to ascertain how best the plan can be funded. With such a commitment, I am sure that British Rail would also come out in favour of the plan.

The plan is supported by the Irish Government, the Irish business community, Irish local authorities, the Welsh business community and Welsh local authorities. The European Commission is also prepared to entertain an application. All that I need to say to the Minister tonight is: join the club and invest in a worthwhile project.

The Minister for Public Transport (Mr. Michael Portillo): That is a beguiling invitation from the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones), and I congratulate him on securing the debate. I thank him most warmly for his courtesy to me before the debate, which will enable us to have a more worthwhile debate than we might otherwise have had.

I am also grateful to the hon. Gentleman for the tribute that he paid to the work that is under way on the roads programme, which has been taken seriously. To date, 50 of the 60 miles of the A55 between Chester and Holyhead have been improved to dual carriageway standard at a cost of £327 million. The three improvement schemes currently under construction are expected to cost about £269 million, and the two final schemes in preparation a further £21 million. Therefore, total expenditure on the A55 will approach £620 million, and work is expected to be completed by the end of 1993. As the hon. Gentleman said, plans to upgrade to dual carriageway standard the A55 between Holyhead and the existing dual carriageway were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, and I am pleased that that, too, was welcomed by the hon. Gentleman.

My right hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Morrison) and my hon. Friend the Member for Conwy (Mr. Roberts), through whose constituencies the north Wales coast railway line passes, would have wished to be present for this debate, but due to their ministerial duties they cannot be here. Fortunately, my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) is here, and I am delighted to see him. However, those of my right hon. and hon. Friends who cannot be here have expressed to me their interest on behalf of their constituents in this important subject. The hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) intervened in the debate, an opportunity unfortunately not open to my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury. Some of the remarks that I am about to make are of general application and will help the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West.

Improvement of railway routes, and particularly electrification, is an emotive subject on which a few outside commentators sometimes generate more heat than light. The question of the best means of traction on a particular route is, first and foremost, a matter of operational and economic significance which should be determined by BR. On some routes, the operational and economic arguments point to electrification, and on others to using diesels. The notion that somehow a non-electrified line is a poor relation—almost something to be ashamed of—is wrong, but I am aware that that feeling exists. Often, higher speeds can be achieved on some diesel-hauled lines than are achieved on other lines where electrification has taken place.

The Government are happy to give approval to railway investment wherever it makes commercial sense. Our record speaks for itself. In the past two years alone we have approved four electrification schemes totalling £90 million, and in the past 10 years 12 schemes totalling £780 million, including the largest-ever single electrification scheme—the east coast main line—costing £460 million. Electrification takes place where a case can be made for it to the Government.

I understand that BR currently sees no reason to electrify the Crewe to Holyhead line. That view is based in part on the joint study carried out with BR's co-operation by Clwyd, Gwynedd and Cheshire county councils, which so far has failed to demonstrate an economic case, but I understand that further work is being carried out to see whether other, non-user benefits can be identified. However, British Rail has plans to upgrade the line from Chester to Bangor by straightening the worst of the curves, thereby improving line speeds so as to take full advantage of the 90 mph class 158 express trains due to come into operation in the next two to three years. Those new trains will provide smoother, more comfortable rides, with air-conditioning, luggage space and tables at each seat. But perhaps the greatest benefit will be a reduction in the journey time of up to 18 minutes—another demonstration that journey times can be improved without electrification.

To answer the hon. Gentleman's specific question, I understand that on the Holyhead to Bangor section of the line, because of prevailing geological conditions, there will always be difficulties in running at very high speeds on some sectors. However, it is hoped that upgrading the line will result in an average speed of 60 mph—a considerable improvement.

I recognise that the channel tunnel is a new ingredient, and I should say something about that. As far as channel tunnel passenger traffic is concerned, British Rail's current intention is to link services from north Wales into the trains from Manchester to Paris and Brussels. It does not believe at this stage that there is a commercial case—in the short to medium term at least—for operating through services, but it will be keeping its planned services under constant review, both up to the opening of the tunnel and thereafter. It will revise its plans as appropriate, as the pattern of demand for international services and the associated commercial opportunities become clearer. It is some years before the channel tunnel will be open, and none of us really knows what opportunities it will create.

The Irish Government made the point to us that the north Wales railway to Holyhead is of great significance to Ireland in the wider European context. Correspondence has been exchanged between the relevant Irish Minister and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. The Irish Government are anxious to ensure that inadequate infrastructure or services on the line do not inhibit Ireland's ability to take advantage of the channel tunnel to facilitate speedier access, particularly for freight, to continental Europe.

We have made it clear that we are happy for British Rail to examine that aspect, to see whether any extra international traffic arising as a result of the opening of the channel tunnel would justify upgrading or electrification of the route. I am sure that British Rail welcomes the prospect of any additional freight traffic—which can, of course, be hauled perfectly well without electrification of the line.

British Rail's plans for freight are based on daily services operated from three "train operating centres" at which wagons from private sidings and freight terminals can be sorted into complete trainloads for common destinations. By those means, daily services could be provided from all over the United Kingdom to many continental centres. One of the facilities is likely to be at Crewe. Therefore, whether or not the north Wales line is electrified, all channel tunnel freight movement on the line is likely to enter the system at Crewe, and a change of locomotive traction at that point would not represent a penalty on movements.

I know that there are some Governments and important voices in the European Commission who believe that the Community should establish a large transport infrastructure fund to pay for improvements to such lines. I have to say that the Government have reservations about that approach. From the point of view of narrow national self-interest, the United Kingdom would certainly have to pay more into such a fund than it would get out of it. In effect, there is a risk that the British taxpayer would be subsidising uneconomic projects elsewhere in the Community. A quick look at the map of the Community would show that that is likely to be the case.

More importantly, projects which would not be cost-effective should not, in the Government's view, be subsidised—whatever the source of the funds. We are very happy that the line should be looked at in the wider European context, but I must sound a note of caution to any in our fellow EC countries who believe that there is, or should be, a pot of gold available to satisfy everyone's wishes.

In the same vein, it has been suggested that the European regional development fund or the existing transport infrastructure programme are appropriate sources of money. However, the sums available under either are substantially smaller than even the amount required for an electrification scheme of the type being proposed today. In the case of the ERDF, this seems to be the result of a self-denying ordinance that the Commission itself has applied to the use of those funds.

While it is true that the Community has a role in developing European transport in preparation for 1992, its role is very much one of opening up barriers to trade and facilitating access between member states. We should not be distracting ourselves with setting up unnecessary new funding mechanisms when existing institutions such as the European regional development fund or the European investment bank can perform perfectly well in those areas. Instead, we should be concentrating on the benefits to be gained in making further progress with liberalisation, technical harmonisation, and deregulation—which will themselves encourage both the efficiency of transport operations and the development of infrastructure.

Perhaps I may conclude the debate by emphasising again the need for a sense of proportion when talking about electrification of railway lines. The large costs of electrification are justified only if they produce worthwhile results. The main benefits are operational—normally in terms of reduced maintenance and operating costs to the railway operator. The direct benefit to passengers in terms of speed and comfort can be negligible—possibly a small decrease in journey time from faster acceleration. High-speed journeys, air conditioning and comfortable vehicles can be achieved with diesel rolling stock.

Whether a line will benefit from electrification depends on trends in costs, including fuel prices, and on the density of use. If an equally good service can be provided more economically by diesel traction, that is the right course. What matters is quality, reliability and journey times, and I am sure that British Rail's large investment programme is starting to produce the results that all of us wish to see, not only in north Wales, but throughout the country.

I fully understand the hon. Gentleman's anxieties about good links to and through his constituency. The Government have shown clearly their commitment to that in the road programme that I described, with its substantial investment in providing dual carriageway through to the hon. Gentleman's constituency. It is clear that British Rail, too, is intent on making improvements.

Many improvements can be made other than electrification. Electrification is not the be-all and end-all. At present British Rail does not see the case for electrification, but it is happy to continue studying it in conjunction with the councils that the hon. Gentleman mentioned.

The Government's attitude remains that if a worthwhile case is presented to us we shall be happy to approve it, just as we have been happy to approve so many cases in the past.

Question put and agreed to.

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

Orders of the Day

Computer Misuse Bill

As amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

New Clause 2

SEARCH WARRANTS FOR OFFENCES UNDER SECTION 3

To move the following Clause:—

'(1) Where a justice of the peace is satisfied by information on oath given by a constable that there are reasonable grounds for believing—

(a) that an offence under section 3 above has been, is in the process of being, or is about to be committed in any premises; and

(b) there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has in his custody or under his control or on his premises anything which there is reasonable cause to believe has been used, is being used, or is intended to be used to commit an offence under section 3 of this Act;

he may issue a warrant authorising a constable to enter and search the premises, using such reasonable force as is necessary.

(2) A warrant under this section—

(a) may authorise persons to accompany any constable executing the warrant; and

(b) remains in force for twenty-eight days from the date of its issue.

(3) In executing a warrant issued under this section a constable may seize an article if he reasonably believes that it is evidence as aforesaid.

(4) In this section "premises" includes land, buildings, moveable structures, vehicles, vessels, aircraft and hovercraft.'.—[Miss Emma Nicholson.]

9.35 am

Miss Emma Nicholson (Torridge and Devon, West): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. Speaker: With this it will be convenient to discuss the following: New clause 3—Warrants for the surveillance of telecommunication traffic—

'(1) A justice of the peace may issue a warrant requiring the person to whom it is addressed to mount surveillance of public telecommunication traffic as described in the warrant, and to record its contents; and such warrant shall require the person to whom it is addressed to disclose all the recorded material to police in such manner as described in the warrant.

(2) A warrant may only be issued by a justice of the peace:

(a) after an application supported by an information in writing, has been made by a constable, and

(b) in pursuit of sections 2 and 3 only of this Act, and

(c) a warrant issued by a justice of the peace shall be restricted to the surveillance and recording of computer transmissions only.'.

Amendment No. 9, in clause 14, page 8, line 36, at beginning insert

'Subject to subsection (1A) below,'.

Amendment No. 3, in line 36, leave out 'justice of the peace' and insert 'circuit judge'.

Amendment No. 5, in line 38, leave out

'or is about to be'.

Amendment No. 6, in line 40, leave out

'or is about to be'.

'(1A) The power conferred by subsection (1) above may be used only in circumstances in which—

(a) The nature of any material or signal transmitted from or to the premises in respect of which the warrant is sought gives reasonable grounds for believing that an offence under section 1 above has been committed in the premises in respect of which the warrant is sought; and

(b) more than one person resides or is employed at the premises in respect of which the warrant is sought.'.

Amendment No. 18, in line 47, at end insert—

'but does extend to searching the contents of a computer for evidence of the offence aforesaid, albeit that evidence may be amongst material of the kinds mentioned in section 9(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.'.

Amendment No. 16, in clause 16, page 11, line 4, leave out 'The reference in section 14(2)' and insert—

'In section 14—

(a) the reference in subsection (1) to a circuit judge shall be read as a reference to a county court judge; and

(b) the reference in subsection (2).'.

Amendment No. 7, in clause 17, page 11, line 37, at end insert—

'; and an individual cannot be authorised to access a computer by a warrent served under section 3 of the Security Services Act 1989'.

Miss Nicholson: I shall speak to new clauses 2 and 3 amendment No. 18, which stand in my name. That does not reflect upon the other amendments which have been grouped with my new clauses and amendment, which have been tabled by other hon. Members.

New clause 2 seeks to place a provision in the Bill for search warrants for viruses and for other amusingly named irritants which can be put into computer systems and which, as we all know, can cause considerable problems for their users. Current legislation has not yet caught up with the age of information technology. That is why the Bill is so welcome. I congratulate the promoter—my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin)—on the excellence of the work that he has already done. I shall make my contribution in the spirit of getting the Bill through the House on Report this morning so that it may make its way to another place. I do not do so in any delaying sense.

It would be wrong for me, however, to miss the chance of warning the House of the deficiencies of the Bill and about the concerns which Scotland Yard and I have that the Bill as it stands will be unenforceable in any practical sense of the word, and may turn out to be a short-term measure unless it is amended rapidly. Alternatively, there will have to be a follow-up Bill, which I hope will come from the Government, to put this Bill right.

As we know, the police have been struggling for a long time to combat computer-related crime with existing legislation. There has been some success under the Criminal Damage Bill 1971. Perhaps one good reason for the Bill coming before the House is the failure of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 to offer the police any help. Large losses due to computer fraud have been reported by the CBI and the City. Although those figures cannot be verified—the police cannot keep proper records, as so much of computer fraud does not come within current criminal legislation—the number of cases being reported to the police is increasing all the time. Weapons are badly needed to combat new forms of crime.

Having set the scene, I turn directly to new clause 2. I shall give a typical example of why it is badly needed. Let us imagine that the owner of a small shop employs three staff to look after his customers and to control the stock records. All the stock records are on a computer system and the staff have authorised access to the computer. The three staff naturally use it daily. Let us suppose that one of them does not have the salary that he believes he should enjoy, and he therefore becomes disgruntled.

Unknown to the rest of the staff, but in a normal scenario in today's world, he has a small computer of his own at home, and on that machine the creates a "time bomb". That is a small piece of programme and a few instructions that are destructive of his employer's system. The term "time bomb" is used to describe a piece of destructive programming which takes effect on a particular date.

The employee, in this context, copies the time bomb on a floppy diskette, takes it to his place of work and inserts it on to the hard disk of his employer's computer. That is not a difficult thing to do. On a pre-set date, his small piece of programme is triggered and it wipes out all the records on the employer's computer. Of course, the employer has a back-up for his data in the grandfather-father-son sequence, but the employee uses his employer's computer to delete that as well.

There is a financial loss to the shopowner, who must revert to his paper records for his stock keeping. He has to call in an outside computer programmer, who discovers the time bomb, disposes of it and inputs the paper into the computer to restore its files to the orginal condition. If it is a small shop, it would cost the shopkeeper the fees for couple of day's work for a computer programmer—perhaps £480. Programmers are quite cheap, at about £30 an hour, and he would need to do 15 or 16 hours work. The loss is equivalent to about a half-day's taking. However, it has caused the shop owner great anxiety and he is concerned that it might happen again.

The shop owner calls in the police to discover which member of staff is responsible so that he can be prosecuted. Of course, the police also do not know who is responsible, and they mount an investigation. None of the staff has a criminal conviction. They all have track records as reliable and trustworthy employees. The police interview the three members of staff, who all deny the offence. The police later discover that one member of staff is attending an evening course on computer programming. They then receive an anonymous telephone call from a man claiming that that same member of staff has a computer at his home address. The next day, that same member of staff complains that his salary is not high enough, and he asks for a rise.

It is obvious that one of the three staff has committed the offence. One of them is attending a computer course, but although the police have been told that he has a computer at home, that cannot be verified. He has denied the offence, but he is a suspect. It is probable that evidence of a time bomb would be found on his home computer. The police decide that they have reasonable grounds to believe that they would find that evidence if they searched his home address.

Of course, this is a hypothetical case. Let us assume that the Bill has already become an Act. The police look to the Act for the power to obtain a search warrant. Under section 14, they can apply for a search warrant if unauthorised access has been gained to the computer—but the employee in question is authorised to use his employer's computer. In addition, the power of search is restricted to searching the place where the offence took place, which is the shop. The police can find no power in the Act to search the suspect's home address to find evidence of a time bomb.

The police look to other legislation for the power to search, because without a search warrant they cannot succeed. Section 6 of the Criminal Damage Act 1971 would have given the police the power of search, but section 3(6) of the Computer Misuse Act has removed that power as the offence is no longer construed as criminal damage. The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 does not provide the power of search, because no serious arrestable offence has been committed.

The police could search the home address if they first arrested the employee. However, the employee has denied the offence and the police have no evidence to the contrary. They are unhappy about arresting the employee in the hope of finding the necessary evidence later to justify the arrest. That is a perfectly proper stance for the police to take. It would not be proper for the Computer Misuse Act to encourage the police to arrest someone purely because they believed that there might be a possibility of finding evidence. However, the Act offers them no other route. Faced with that problem, the police might write to their local Member of Parliament asking his advice about whether they should make the arrest. After all, it is the House that has given the police that ethical and moral problem. It is difficult to know what advice the local Member of Parliament should give the police.

9.45 am

Do we really want to encourage the police to arrest someone on flimsy grounds of suspicion, so that they might later obtain the necessary evidence? The evidence might not be found. The police suspicions may be incorrect. New clause 2 would solve the problem and provide the police with a lawful and proper means to obtain a search warrant. The home address could be searched without having first to make an arrest. Evidence might then be found to justify making an arrest that deprives the suspect of his liberty.

Would not that be a more appropriate way to deal with the matter? I accept that this House does not want to offer the police further search powers—or, indeed, any powers—unless it is absolutely necessary, but the alternative is even more worrying. It may not impinge upon our consciences today, but it will impinge heavily upon the police if they do not have the additional power of search at the home address because, if they wish to pursue the crime, as we have asked them to do, they will be forced to make unnecessary arrests on flimsy grounds. It is a matter of some gravity that I believe is best addressed by new clause 2.

New clause 3 deals not with the powers of physical search, but with the powers of electronic search. It seeks the power to obtain warrants for surveillance. It is a difficult and troublesome matter. I draw the attention of my hon. and learned Friend the Minister to the Council of Europe Legal Affairs Committee directive "Computer-related crime", which will come into effect in 1992. It contains the recommendation adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on 13 September 1989 and the report by the European Committee on Crime Problems, Strasbourg, 1990.

The problem may well come before the Minister, even if he and the House do not wish to examine it properly within the context of this Bill, although that is exactly where it should be examined. I accept that the vehicle of a private Member's Bill is fragile, and perhaps this heavyweight debate is too much for it to bear. That strengthens the view of myself and many others that this should be a Government Bill, so that we could discuss all related matters freely and easily. It is a highly related matter and an acutely difficult topic, but we should not duck it in the Bill.

No one would deny that cases of tapping are notoriously difficult to investigate. Scotland Yard's computer crime unit has been attempting to investigate such offences since the unit's inception in 1985. Its experience has been that the hacker often works alone—perhaps from his bedroom at home—on a personal computer, using the telephone line to communicate with other computers. The hacker can also use the international telephone network—but because that is expensive, he usually gains access first to a local computer, from which to bounce off his transmissions to other computers, which keeps his own telephone bill to a minimum. The hacker often makes his overseas telephone calls through a third party's computer line, whose owner then incurs the call costs.

The evidence of any offence that is committed travels along the telephone wires. The problem confronting the police is how to recover that evidence. The Strasbourg directive points out that there are problems in respect of "the powers of entry and search premises, the powers of seizure, the duty of witnesses to testify, the duty of witnesses to produce evidence, and the problems of wire tapping . . . In most countries it is questionable whether or not the above-mentioned traditional coercive powers are adequate for all aspects of investigations in computerised environments, since most of the traditional provisions . . . were created with respect to tangible property or telephone communications between human beings and not expressly designed for intangibles and the special needs of the computerised information society."

The fuss and bother, and the fears and concerns rightly expressed by right hon. and hon. Members in respect of freedom of information and personal privacy, do not apply to digital transmissions of computer data, which merely happen to use the same route. It is not at all the same thing as settling down to listen in to a personal telephone conversation. If the House is as concerned about the tapping of telephone conversations as the Committee considering the Bill was led to believe, surely it should address itself to the prevalence and ease of purchase of tiny devices with which any member of the public can tap into virtually any unscrambled telephone conversation in the United Kingdom.

If we are not fussed about that form of listening in to our fellow citizens' telephone conversations, why are we ultra-sensitive and over-concerned about monitoring digital transmissions of computer data, which are totally and wholly incomprehensible to any human ear? I suggest that it is merely because computer data employ as their transmission medium the same telephone lines that the rest of us use to exchange knowledge. It is the monitoring of human conversation that should concern us, not that of computer data.

The stance may be taken by my right hon. Friend the Minister, by the Bill's promoter and by other right hon. and hon. Members—though it is not my stance—that we need not worry about monitoring telephone data transmissions at this time—but if we duck that issue today, it will be put back on our plates tomorrow by the European Community, which considers it of immense importance, particularly in relation to the European convention on human rights, to monitor developments and an issue that should be considered further with a view to harmonising the various coercive powers that exist.

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside): My hon. Friend referred earlier to the Council of Europe. Was that a slip of the tongue? Did she really mean the European Commission?

Miss Nicholson: I was referring to both bodies, in respect of a joint initiative. The issue is one that concerns all countries of Europe, North America, Australia, and many others throughout the world—including the USSR, which now has its own hackers club.

In the United Kingdom, it is possible to monitor digital transmissions and capture evidence only with the use of a data monitoring cartridge. It is specially designed to record computer data, not human speech—hence the validity of my point that there is an enormous difference of perception as to whether the police should be given monitoring powers in relation to digital transmissions. The data monitoring cartridge identifies and records only computer data, not human speech.

It was strongly argued in Committee that the police can already obtain the permission of a victim to trace incoming calls and to install a data monitoring cartridge on his line. That is comparable to the arrangements relating to obscene telephone calls. If I were the victim of such calls, I could ask the police to tap my line. The problem for the police in respect of digital transmissions is proving the source of the calls. In the case of international data transmissions, are the police to request the international call carrier to trace calls made to the United Kingdom, and then the carrier in this country to complete the trace to the call's origin?

Unfortunately, that is technically impossible. Britain has two main types of telephone exchange, Strowger and system X, of which the first is the older version that uses non-automatic switching. One encounters vast problems in respect of that type of exchange. Another problem is that detection relies on the carrier agreeing to assist the police. The major telephone communications carrier in this country is British Telecom plc, but now we also have Mercury—and I am personally in favour of breaking up that duopoly, but that is by the bye.

Unfortunately, British Telecom has often proved unwilling to assist the police in computer cases, despite comments to the contrary, I justify British Telecom's stance on the ground that it is a private company and no longer a state monopoly, so it is entirely within British Telecom's capacity and good judgment whether or not it wishes to assist the police. Why should it do so, when it can no longer be coerced into co-operating because it is a state monopoly?

[Miss Nicholson]

The corollary is that British Telecom often does not assist the police, and that causes the authorities great problems if they are not given powers of search and monitoring of transmission lines by this Bill or by any other legislation. I believe that British Telecom's reluctance to co-operate is due not least to the cost incurred in mounting such an exercise, with no prospect of financial recompense.

I give an example of the difficulties that British Telecom's intransigence—understandable though it may be—cause to the police. In respect of an investigation that is currently under way at New Scotland Yard, the solicitor of the victim concerned is even now seeking an audience with the Home Secretary to discuss the appalling situation in which the police find themselves because, over a period of months, British Telecom plc has not bothered to reply to police requests for assistance.

It is often known who hackers are and where they live, but it is never know who will be their next victim. In those cases, the victim cannot authorise the police to monitor his telephone line because he does not know whether he will be, or has been, attacked.

The proper place for the data monitor cartridge is on the hacker's telephone line, as it would give crucial evidence about the hacker's activities, recording the date, time, length and duration of the call and who the victim is. Without that method of gathering evidence, the police have little, if any, chance to catch those responsible.

Let us consider the cuckoo's egg. Dr. Clifford Stoll, who met me in my constituency the other day, told me that, when he started to track the West German hackers who got into at least 20,000 security computers in NATO and into many other industrial secret places, the Federal Bureau of Investigation told him that, if the hackers came from the United Kingdom, he would have no chance of tracking them down because he would not get the required co-operation.

10. am

We live and trade in the 20th century. In this fast-moving age of information technology, we need to track down criminals who use 20th-century methods. The personal computer was invented in 1984—the computer was probably a British invention—and it is a sadness to me that we lag so far behind in methods of computer surveillance. Millions of people now own and use personal computers. Computers are on the increase. It is a sunrise industry, and hardware and software costs are dropping all the time. In a free-market system, more and more people—thousands of millions—are beginning to use computers. It is logical to infer that computer crime will increase in proportion to the number of computers in use.

If the Bill is a serious piece of legislation, the basic principle of gathering evidence must be examined in detail. If computer hacking is to be an offence, we need to allow the police a method of enforcing such legislation. In the United Kingdom, the only realistic way to do so is to allow them to be granted a warrant from a court to allow such evidence to be obtained.

If a serious crime, as defined under the Interception of Communications Act 1985, is committed, it is true that, despite the Computer Misuse Bill's weaknesses, the police can already make an application to the Secretary of State for a warrant. Does the House not realise that evidence thus obtained cannot be used in court, because the 1985 Act was not designed to capture digitalised data transmissions for computer crime? It was designed for security purposes. Thus, the 1985 Act puts the police in a hopeless situation if they want to make the Bill stick. The paper produced by the Council of Europe, related to the European Community's work on the subject, also discusses the procedural law problems in full.

New clause 3 offers the police a practical method of obtaining evidence. The courts will be able to ensure that the law is not abused, because they will decide whether to grant a warrant to obtain the evidence that they will hear in future prosecutions.

Does the House not wish that the courts—the heart of British justice—should decide rather, than that the police should have to go continually to the Home Secretary? The latter procedure is invisible to the public. That is an important point.

Mr. James Arbuthnot (Wanstead and Woodford): Is my hon. Friend suggesting that the issue of warrants in such circumstances will be open and visible to the public?

Miss Nicholson: Yes. I believe that applying for a warrant will be, as my hon. Friend says, open and visible to the public and that that is the right and proper way forward, whereas seeking an application for a warrant from the Home Secretary is slow and invisible to the public. Was that my hon. Friend's point?

Mr. Arbuthnot: Yes, although I am surprised to hear my hon. Friend's answer.

Miss Nicholson: I am aware that I have been on my feet for a long time, and I do not want to take too much time which other hon. Members may wish to use. Amendment No. 18 is designed to write into the Bill the ability to search a computer which contains confidential information. That sounds a little esoteric, but at the moment the police are properly constrained from searching through data which include confidential information.

Let us postulate that the police have received a complaint from a research establishment which says that someone has gained unauthorised access to its computer system and has deleted some of the research data. That is a common scenario. Those responsible have sent the research establishment an electronic mail message which reads, "We are the super-hackers and we'll get you again soon." That scenario is similar to the case of the university hacker who is being prosecuted at the moment, whose activities I referred to in an article in The Times last year. It is true that the research establishment has not lost any money. It has a back-up of its data, and it takes perhaps three hours of the system manager's time to restore it. Although that is time wasted, the real worry is that the establishment has no idea how the hackers managed to crack its efficient computer security, and it is immensely concerned about the possibility of another attack which would unnecessarily delay the research project.

In the same article in The Times, I referred to the CERN establishment on the borders of France and Switzerland, where security has been massive, yet hackers have planted a virus.

In our smaller British example, the systems monitor would provide the police with computer logs to show where the hacking call originated. The research establishment has a dedicated line to a local computer bureau which processes some of its data. The computer logs show that the hacking call originated from the bureau, so the police would investigate the bureau and find that it has six employees and processes data for a number of clients, including banks, solicitors, a local supermarket and a number of accountancy firms. The majority of the data held by the computer bureau is highly confidential.

The police cannot ask permission from anyone at the bureau to search the computer for evidence, because they do not know who committed the offence and they are worried that, if they ask for the search, the evidence may be destroyed immediately. As the hacker sent an electronic mail message, the police have reasonable grounds to assume that the message may still be in the bureau's computer, with other evidence of the attack—electronic fingerprinting. They look to the Computer Misuse Bill for powers to obtain a search warrant.

Clause 14 gives a power of search at the bureau because unauthorised access has been gained from those premises, but that power of search would not extend to authorising a search for materials of the kind mentioned in section 9(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. Remember that that Act was not designed with computer crime in mind, and that the type of crime that the Computer Misuse Bill seeks to identify was not a crime then.

The police know that they have to search the bureau for computer evidence, but they will clearly come up against a mass of confidential information during their search. They realise that the evidence that they require is bound to be mixed up inextricably with confidential data, because the hacker will have used a disk on which client data are already stored—that is known as free parking. No serious arrestable offence has been committed, and the police cannot use the powers under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act.

I refer again to the fact that, without new clause 2 the police lose their powers of search under the the Criminal Damage Act 1971. How can they search for evidence that leads to the making of an arrest? They cannot. Another crime will therefore not be solved, and the criminals will not be prosecuted.

My amendment solves the problem by allowing a search to be made of the contents of the computer system, despite the fact that the evidence may be contained within or held alongside confidential material. In the two new clauses and the amendment, I seek to make the point that the Bill will be only a slight vehicle without them. Unless the police have the powers contained in the new clauses and the amendment, they will be unable to identify or prosecute 99 per cent. of those whose activities will be unlawful under the Bill.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): I congratulate the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on promoting the Bill and on having provided answers and explanations for the difficult and important questions that were put to him in Committee.

The hon. Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) spoke eloquently to new clauses 2 and 3, both of which contain search powers that could be authorised by a justice of the peace. However, my amendment No. 3 would transfer that search power authorisation from a justice of the peace to a circuit judge. I believe that that would strengthen the Bill.

I shall not rehearse our debates in Committee on the extent of search powers by the police. If the Bill had contained on Second Reading the search powers that were incorporated in Committee, I suspect that there would have been much stronger opposition to it. There would have been great concern about the civil liberty implications of those search powers. Anyone who owns a computer would be open to such action and his computer could be seized. I hope that the House will decide to amend those search powers so that they can be authorised only by a circuit judge, rather than by a justice of the peace.

As clause 14 now stands, any home owner with a telephone is now under threat. There could be a knock on the door at midnight. Even if the offence of computer trespass and unauthorised access has not been committed, a search warrant could be obtained from a justice of the peace, based on the belief that an offence will be committed. The search warrant would allow search and seizure to take place within a month of that belief having been formulated. It would allow for the breaking down of a front door, under the guise of reasonable force.

I do not like that approach, and the Law Commission was unhappy about it. It referred to the need for strong evidence of the practical need for any extension of those powers. The Law Commission was not in favour of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 being used in these cases. In paragraph 4.11 of its report, it said:

> "We have already pointed out that even within the confines of the present law there are substantial and effective methods of identifying and apprehending both outside hackers and internal misusers of computers. In addition, if our recommendation is accepted that the 'ulterior intent'" hacking offence should carry a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment, that will be an arrestable offence which, in a case where there is reasonable suspicion that the offence is being committed, will under the present law attract powers of arrest, entry in order to arrest, and search of the arrested person's premises. These are substantial weapons. To go further, as some have urged, and create powers of search before arrest, even in the case of suspected basic hacking, would be in effect to extend the search provisions of Part II of PACE to cases far different from the serious arrestable offences for which that regime was designed. For such a step to be contemplated there would, in our view, have to be as a minimum requirement very strong evidence of practical necessity, which evidence has not been provided by the, admittedly limited, submissions made to the Commission."

10.15 am

Amendment No. 3 would remove the authorisation of search powers by justices of the peace and transfer it to a circuit judge. Amendment No. 16 deals with the position in Northern Ireland, where authorisation would be by a county court judge. I consider that judges would be much more rigorous than justices of the peace in examining whether the police belief that a crime had been committed had any foundation.

Justices of the peace are unpaid, they have no technical knowledge, they are often elderly and perhaps it is easier for the police to convince them than it is to convince circuit judges. There are many more justices of the peace, so the police could choose one who might be more compliant. Authorisation by circuit judges rather than by justices of the peace would ensure that the search and seizure powers in the Bill are less open to abuse. The need to convince a circuit judge rather than a justice of the peace would probably lead to the evidence presented in support of a search warrant being of a much better quality.

It would not be unusual to seek authorisation from a circuit judge. Under section 4 of the Data Protection Act 1984, when the Data Protection Registrar seeks a warrant, he has to convince a judge that it is justified. The clause 1 offence in the Bill is similar to that which the Data Protection Registrar investigates. Paragraph 1 of schedule 4 to the Data Protection Act, which provides the Data Protection Registrar with his powers of search and seizure, begins with the words:

"If a circuit judge is satisfied by information on oath supplied by the Registrar."

If such a provision is appropriate under that Act, it would be equally appropriate to apply it to the Bill.

In Committee the hon. Member for Torridge and Devon, West moved an amendment relating to the Interception of Communications Act 1985 which was rejected. She realised then that there was a problem because she wanted a circuit judge rather than a justice of the peace to sign search warrants. The hon. Lady's amendment added the words, "or a circuit judge" nine times. I hope that she will agree that, as it is clearly what she wanted then, it is also appropriate in this case. For those reasons I shall, at the appropriate time, move my amendment No. 3 calling for a circuit judge, and county court judge in Northern Ireland having the power to authorise searches, rather then a justice of the peace. That is a small but important point, and I hope that the House will accept the amendment.

Amendment No. 10 sets out conditions under which search powers are allowed. I tabled it because that argument was used in Committee as justification for the search and seizure powers in the first place. In Committee, it was stated that British Telecom had all the powers it needs to locate where somebody is using a computer in his own room to hack into a computer somewhere else. However, it was said that extra powers would be needed in case there was more than one person on the premises. That was the sole justification given in Committee as to why these draconian search and seizure powers are needed.

I tabled amendment No. 10 to call the bluff of the Bill's promoter and Minister. My amendment repeats exactly what they stated: that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the signal has come from a premises, and that "more than one person resides or is employed at the premises"

It will be most enlightening to hear from the promoter, and perhaps the Minister, why amendment No. 10 is not acceptable to them, as its contents were their sole cause for proposing the draconian search powers in the first place. I await the answer with interest.

Amendment No. 7 relates to search powers not so much as they are generally applied, but as they are specifically applied. It refers to the security services and their powers. We need some answers as to what powers they have in relation to hacking because that matter has never been discussed in the House. We did not discuss it during debates on the Security Services Act 1989 or the Interception of Communications 1985, and it has not been properly discussed during debates on this Bill. That is why I moved my amendment stating that

"an individual cannot be authorised to access a computer by a warrant served under section 3 of the Security Services Act 1989".

I was appalled to learn from the Minister, in asides in Committee—at columns 19 and 72 in the Standing Committee report—that the Security Services Act 1989, by default, legitimises hacking by the security services. I hope that that will be explained in more detail because the more I think about it the more I find it another example of how the Government keep reducing parliamentary democracy while giving unrestricted powers to the security services to do almost what they like. It is the opposite to what has been happening in eastern Europe, where the security services' powers have been curtailed and sometimes removed. Attempts are certainly being made there to make them more accountable, whereas our services are less accountable under this Government.

As the House knows, the Security Services Act legalised burglary through a warrant signed by the Secretary of State. That was highly contentious legislation, opposed by many and severely criticised by all parties, including some Conservative Members. The hon. Members for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) and for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) made strong cases against it. I am sure that most hon. Members thought that the warrant allowed the security services physically to break into premises, as long as they did not commit another offence. I emphasise the word "physically" because, as I understand it, under the terms of the warrant, the authorised person can invade premises in that way. Until the Minister spoke in Committee there was no sign that the warrant could authorise MI5 staff to hack into any computer whenever they wanted, without committing this Bill's proposed offence of unauthorised access. That power to give a warrant to legalise computer hacking was not discussed in debates on the Security Services Act. The way in which the matter is being pushed through means that the House is being deceived because we are not having a proper debate, and those powers are not being properly restrained and decided on.

Hacking, although perhaps not physical burglary, is remote burgalry. It occurs on a much larger scale than the physical burglary of premises. If someone hacks into a computer he gets all the information from it, vast amounts of which can be used or misused. That issue was raised when the Interception of Communications Bill was being debated, and the Government made the concession that any intercepted information not needed by the security services would be deleted and would not be held. That was an important concession, but there is no such concession in this Bill. Under its powers, the security services can hack into a computer, get all the information, keep it for as long as they like and use it for whatever purpose they like. They are under no obligation to delete the information.

On page 360 of "Spycatcher", Peter Wright states:

"The main interest F branch (of MI5) had in the Computer Working Party was to establish widespread computer links, principally with the National Insurance Computer in Newcastle."

The Government data network will give them wide powers and the police computer will give them vast amounts of information, as will all the private computers that they can hack into. They do not have to adhere to the data protection principals because, under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984, they are exempt from doing so. There is no code of practice about how they should use the information and the Data Protection Registrar has no powers over them.

In The Guardian on 6 April 1989 it was stated that the security services had information on the political activities of about 1 million people in this country, and I suspect that that is an understatement. Clearly, with the hacking power that they are being given, they will be able to obtain even more information, and have almost unlimited access.

In section 23.21 of its report, the Lindop committee stated that with independent supervision the security services would "be open to the healthy—and often constructive criticism and debate which assures for many public servants that they will not stray beyond their allotted functions".

Instead, the national security apparatus has been given a free hand, and it will be able to hack almost at will.

Amendment No. 7 places a temporary stop on that state of affairs and prevents the security services from misusing computers until the Government introduce primary legislation that can be debated fully.

Before the Security Services Act and the Interception of Communications Act, everybody could hack, including the security services, because it was not an offence and there was no need to obtain a warrant. Those Acts did not outlaw hacking, but now the House is saying, as a matter of principle, that hacking is not acceptable and is a criminal offence. Instead of any change being made, the Minister says that as long as a warrant is obtained hacking can continue.

Legalising a criminal activity such as burglary is wrong in principle. The security services should not be above the law. There may be circumstances in which they must break the law, but if they are caught they should be subject to the law and court action. Hacking is remote burglary and it invades personal privacy. The house is saying that it should not be allowed and that the security services should be subject to proper constraints.

The purpose of tabling amendment No. 7 is to ensure proper parliamentary consideration of the matter. I hope that the Minister will give a clear explanation.

10.30 am

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on introducing the Bill, which is an important and much needed measure.

I am pleased that the amendments to which I put my name have been joined with the two new clauses that have already been discussed by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson). She is an expert on these matters, which I most decidedly am not. It was a particular pleasure for the House to hear her discussing the new clauses with her customary elegance, charm and depth of knowledge. I thought that she did very well indeed.

I am pleased to have put my name to the amendments tabled by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). I found myself in a perhaps astonishing amount of agreement with hon. Gentleman. I can think only that there is something catching about the air in north-east London.

The Bill is extremely important. Computer misuse is increasing extremely fast. Offences, and the potential for them, are becoming worse. It is high time that we had a Bill such as this. I am rather surprised that one was not introduced earlier, because if one had been in place five years ago its provisions would have been of much use and value not only in this country but throughout the world.

Miss Emma Nicholson: Does my hon. Friend recall that I introduced a private Member's Bill last April which contained some of the measures proposed in the new clauses? Had the Government proceeded as they should have, even with only a White Paper, these crucial points and some of those made by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) would unhesitatingly have been incorporated.

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend is right. She is well known for her expertise on these matters and for her tenacity.

I am convinced that the Bill should have been on the statute book a long time ago. I must confess to some surprise that the Government have not made more of the running in this crucial matter. They should have considered it some time ago rather than leaving it to the device of a private Member's Bill.

Mr. Colvin: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way on that important point. In all fairness to the Government, they have been exercised by this grave problem for some time. One must tread carefully when extending the criminal law, which is why they instructed the Law Commission to consider the matter carefully. It was only following the commission's working paper No. 110, the discussion paper on the subject and the report of the Law Commission, No. 186, that it was decided to proceed. By the time the Law Commission's report was published, the Queen's Speech was presumably in draft. That may be a bad thing, but it is my good fortune.

Mr. Summerson: I always give the Government credit where possible. I give them credit for the fair wind they are giving to the progress of the Bill.

It is good to see hon. Members taking an interest, with perhaps the remarkable exception of the Liberal Democrats. For all I know, they are all in their places but as invisible as usual. I dare say that they are rejoicing in the defeats inflected on them yesterday and preparing to build on their losses in their inimitable manner.

The use of computers is growing among not only the security services and Departments but private users. I am not an expert on computers. My computer is an Amstrad PCW9512—I hasten to add that I have no interest in Amstrad plc—and many other similar computers are in private use. I do not know whether there are thousands or hundreds of thousands of them, but ownership is growing rapidly. Having owned one for a year, I can say with my hand on my heart that I do not know what I would do without it. Computers are environmentally sound because reams of paper are no longer necessary. All the information necessary is put on one small disk which can be accessed at any time.

Mr. Arbuthnot: In one respect at least computers are far from environmentally sound: they allow people to send reams of letters to hundreds of different people, particularly Members of Parliament. Allowing computers to continue but reducing the number of word processors might be a boon to the paper industry and the forests of the world.

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend is quite right, but he is wrong to lay the blame at the door of the computer. It is the fault not of the computer but of the operator that it produces reams of paper. All hon. Members' postbags show all too clearly that far too many people rejoice in sending huge amounts of paper, which almost invariably find their way straight into the bin and straight out again.

Miss Emma Nicholson: Perhaps I could offer my hon. Friend a virus which he could send through the post to all people who have those computers, thereby eliminating any data addressed to the House of Commons.

Mr. Summerson: That is certainly an excellent idea. If I could, I certainly would do that with all mail, with the exception of all items bearing the post code London E17. That mail already receives top treatment from me, but such a measure would enable me to give it, if anything, even better treatment.

I listened carefully in Committee to the hon. Member for Leyton speak to amendments Nos. 9 and 10 on civil liberties. We rightly give the police extensive powers to enable them to carry out their work. We should not forget that the work they have to do these days is no longer of the relatively small nature of police work a few decades ago. The village bobby would have had to investigate the pilfering of half a pound of sweets from the local sweet shop, but today it is a different matter. Crimes and criminals have become much more sophisticated, and criminals use computers in planning and executing their crimes. To fight those crimes, the police must use the same weapons. It is right that the police should have extensive powers so that they can stop an offence either before it happens or, one hopes, after it has happened.

On the other hand—there is always another hand in these matters—the rights of the individual must be protected. The hand of the law can be a very heavy hand. Sometimes it must be heavy, but at others it must be exercised in a particularly heavy way. The police may gain information from an informal source, perhaps from spending an evening in a pub. I do not say that in a derogatory way, because I know that the police often get good information from listening to people talking in pubs. The police may overhear that Mr. Jones of 1 Acacia avenue is contemplating committing an offence. They may decide to do something about it. As the hon. Member for Leyton graphically described it, there may be a knock on the door at midnight. Anyone who has read books such as George Orwell's "1984" knows that possibility all too well. The amendments are designed to ensure that the individual's rights are given as much due weight as the rights of the police.

Paragraph (b) of amendment No. 10 would ensure that if only one person lives on premises where an offence is thought to have been committed, he should be exempt. This is an important point. We are talking about an individual, not a company, a corporation or even a Government Department. I said at the beginning of my speech that the rights of the individual were important. Sometimes the individual's rights tend to be submerged under a welter of legislation and regulation. I have great faith in the ability of the British individual to rise above that, but sometimes he may feel that the odds are stacked against him. We all know that ignorance of the law is no excuse, but that does not alter the fact that this place churns out vast quantities of legislation. Every individual is supposed to know exactly what that legislation means.

Hon. Members all hold surgeries in their constituencies. We all have constituents who ask us about the operation of legislation. I am afraid that, more often than not, I have to confess that I have no knowledge of the legislation complained about. I say that I am not a lawyer, but my constituent may say, "You are a Member of Parliament, the place that produces all this legislation." It must sound pretty lame if a Member says "I am sorry, but I do not have the necessary knowledge. I shall have to take advice, look up the details, write to a Government Department," and so on. Sometimes I feel that constituents leave feeling dissatisfied because they think that their Member of Parliament has, in a way, let them down. That is often not our fault. It is impossible for us to have intimate knowledge of every piece of legislation on the statute book.

I listened with great interest to the comments of the hon. Member for Leyton about justices of the peace and circuit judges. I agreed with much of what he said. On the whole, justices of the peace are extremely worthy and hard working, but they are lay people and cannot be expected to have intimate knowledge of every matter that is brought to their attention. I must be a little careful in what I say because my mother-in-law is a justice of the peace. If she thinks that I am too derogatory about justices of the peace and their abilities, I shall be in for a hard time when I see her tomorrow, when her memory will be fresh.

Miss Emma Nicholson: I do not wish to interfere in my hon. Friend's family relationships, but would he agree, on further reflection, that justices of the peace, who are drawn from all walks of life and all backgrounds, are infinitely more likely to be conversant with modern machines, such as personal computers, and with business procedures which are computerised than outdated, antiquated judges, as shown by their comments on ordinary things in life? Does my hon. Friend think that my suggestion is valid?

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend raises several important issues. The most important issue going through my mind on the subject of my mother-in-law is who will pay for dinner tomorrow.

The Minister for Industry (Mr. Douglas Hogg): My hon. Friend will.

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend is right. I fear that I have perhaps gone too far to retrieve the situation.

Miss Emma Nicholson: Seriously, does my hon. Friend feel that in a legal system where cases are computerised, judges are the worst possible people to think that the cause of the computer is important? They do not know what they are talking about; lay people do.

Mr. Summerson: While listening to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West, I recalled the famous remark by one judge, "Who are the Beatles?" I suspect that he said with a note in his voice that implied that he knew perfectly well who they were but that he was not going to let on. I do not agree with my hon. Friend. It probably depends on the age of the justice of the peace. Some of the older ones have little knowledge of computers. They may know what an abacus is and doubtless, being of the older generation, they know their ABC—and those are necessary attributes today.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am a little surprised at the turn that the debate is taking. Does my hon. Friend accept that age is an attitude of mind? Many judges spend considerable time writing judgments on extremely sophisticated word processors. Many justices of the peace do not know nearly as much about word processors or computers as many judges. It is unfortunate for us to start stereotyping lawyers, judges and magistrates in a debate on computer misuse.

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend is a little hard. I had not started stereotyping any particular group. All I said was that the age of justices of the peace is relevant to whether they know about computers. I am in a rather unfortunate position, as I am neither of the younger nor the older generation, but somewhere in between.

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): Middle-aged.

Mr. Summerson: Yes, I may just as well admit that I am middle-aged. However, my generation is in a rather more unfortunate position. We are not old enough to be fuddy-duddies, but we are not of the generation that has used computers in schools. We have to decide whether to get a computer and, having done so, we have to learn all about programs, disks, bytes, hardware and software. We probably get them muddled up, but we hope to win through in the end. As my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) has said, many in the legal profession have come to realise that the use of computers is now essential. The days of clerks scratching away with quill pens in dark, dusty corners have long gone except, perhaps, in some dull corner of Lincolns Inn Fields. Many judges have learnt to use up-to-date technology and they find that it is very useful to them.

We have already discussed justices of the peace in some detail and I hold firmly to the view that the older magistrates remain mistrustful and even resentful of the use of computers, whereas the younger ones, especially those who are business men, know perfectly well that today, the use of computers is essential and most important in the execution of their duties.

Miss Emma Nicholson: I hasten to withdraw my comments about the stereotyping of judges. They sprang more from my irritation about judges' remarks in serious cases of child abuse. I take them back and they are not germane to the discussion.

Amendment No. 3 concerns search warrants. Does my hon. Friend agree that clause 14 provides the power to obtain a search warrant? It is not a new power, but is copied directly from the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988. I was fortunate enough to be a member of the Committee on that Bill so I know that it invests the power to grant warrants in justices of the peace. Under current legislation, all search warrants may be obtained from a justice of the peace with the sole exception of special procedure material under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. My own earlier request to class computer offences as serious arrestable offences was unacceptable to the Government, so there is no reason why the power to grant such search warrants should not remain vested in justices of the peace. What are my hon. Friend's thoughts on that?

Mr. Summerson: I wholly agree with my hon. Friend that there is a precedent which can most usefully apply. However, my hon. Friend may not have fully taken on board my points about the different capacities of justices of the peace and circuit judges. My hon. Friend, who is an expert on these matters, tends to forget that the average lay person is not an expert.

Let us consider a magistrate who does not understand computers. It would be all too easy for a police officer who understands computers to baffle that magistrate with the science of computers. I can imagine an incident late at night. The magistrate might be hauled out of bed, fuzzy from lack of sleep, with his spectacles awry and his hair over his eyes. He might suddenly be confronted by a police officer in a state of great excitement. The police officer might say that he had a search warrant and might then produce a whole lot of totally incomprehensible gibberish. The magistrate would want to get back to bed. He might just have been out to dinner and have a rough night ahead of him, yet he might have to get up early the next morning to dash off to a business appointment. He might ask where to sign and scribble his signature, after which the policeman would go off thinking that he had done a good night's work.

I suggest that that would not be such a good night's work. A circuit judge is a more appropriate authority and would have far more knowledge of what was going on. We are discussing potentially extremely serious cases. I firmly believe that the extension of police powers is a serious matter. The rights of the individual need to be protected and, in this case, the circuit judge would be more likely to ensure that the liberties and rights of the individual were preserved and upheld.

Amendments Nos. 5 and 6 are interesting. They seek to remove the possibility of obtaining a warrant to enter and search premises to obtain evidence when a computer misuse offence is about to be committed. The warrant would be available only when an offence had been committed. Here again, we are talking about the rights of the individual. It is clear that if an offence has been committed, all due resources of the law should be available and should be used. However, I am concerned about giving the police powers to enter premises where they believe that an offence is about to be committed, especially in the context of computer misuse. There are many ways of misusing computers; if there were not, there would be no need for the Bill.

Mr. Timothy Wood (Stevenage): My hon. Friend must bear in mind that some offences and the evidence relating to them are, by their very nature, transient. Although there may be clear signs that offences have been committed in the past and, as a result, that they are likely to be committed in the future, there may be no evidence available about the past offences. The only way in which one could establish the offence might be by anticipating the future offence.

Mr. Summerson: There is a difficulty here. I do not think that anticipation is necessarily enough to warrant giving the police power to enter and search premises to obtain evidence; nor do I believe that, merely because offences have been committed in the past, there is a likelihood that they will be committed in the future. After all, if a man commits offences and is brought to trial, convicted and sent to prison, when he comes out of prison it should not be thought that he will commit offences in the future.

Mr. Wood: Frequently the point at issue is that there had been no conviction for hacking. Although there may be evidence of computer interference, it may not be possible to pin that evidence on an individual unless one anticipates the possibility that he will continue his habit of repeatedly interfering with computers.

Mr. Summerson: If the evidence of an offence is already available, that is a different matter, and it can then be proceeded with. However, we are talking about anticipating a crime. We are talking about giving the police draconian powers to enter premises to obtain evidence when a computer-misuse offence is about to be committed. The matter is not sufficiently concrete. There is too much anticipation about whether it will happen. Because of that lack of certainty, I am not convinced that the police should be given power to enter and search premises.

I have already spoken at some length about the rights of individuals. An individual has the right to live at home, undisturbed and at peace with the world and his neighbours. No one in authority is entitled to come barging in—possibly at night—saying that there is evidence that a crime is about to be committed, especially when there is no concrete evidence. That is part of the problem. The nature of computer misuse is different from the example that I gave earlier—That of stealing half a pound of boiled sweets from the village shop.

Some crimes, although not insubstantial in themselves, yield no concrete evidence for charges. For example, copyright law is a morass and a quagmire. It is important and needful that we should have copyright law, but it is notoriously difficult to enforce.

Miss Emma Nicholson: My hon. Friend will know that the defence of intellectual property is difficult, but the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 contains the model of the protection of intellectual property in terms of computer software. It is the draft of the current EC directive—the work of experts, including many senior members of the British Computer Society.

Does my hon. Friend agree that it would be infinitely better for the police to have search powers to obtain evidence than to have to follow the other route—to arrest in order to obtain evidence? If so, would it not be proper for him to withdraw his support for amendment No. 5 and to support my new clause 2?

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend put words into my mouth in the first part of her intervention. I listened with great interest to her introduction of her new clauses, and perhaps she has found a solution to the problem that is better than that set out in the amendment. The House should debate that further.

The purpose of amendment No. 7 is to prevent hacking or similar activities by the security services by providing that

"an individual cannot be authorised to access a computer by a warrant served under section 3 of the Security Services Act 1989."

The activities of the security services concern us all. To some extent, they are at the root of the security of the state and that of our democratic system. It is nevertheless essential that there should be proper democratic control of the security services.

Earlier I referred to our democratic system, and observed that, sadly, it was necessary for us to have security services to protect us from enemies of this country who seek to undermine our democratic system. However, I sometimes feel that the security services are a two-edged sword. As I said, they are important in underpinning our democratic system, but they must be truly accountable.

Amendment No. 7 takes account of the worries and fears of many people that our security services may not be sufficiently under democratic control. As for computers, those peculiar machines that so many of us use but whose workings so few of us understand—with the exception of my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West—it is all too easy for the security services to make full use of computer systems, at the same time ensuring that their activities do not come to the notice of those who are rightfully in control of them.

There is concern on both sides of the House about the control of the security services. Last year the House passed the Security Services Act 1989. Rightly, the Security Service reports to the Home Office and to the Prime Minister. However, we may need more safeguards to stop the misuse of computers, and it is right that the hon. Member for Leyton should have taken the opportunity to try to introduce additional safeguards. No doubt my hon. Friend the Minister will be giving the Government's views on these important matters, and I hope that he will pay special attention to amendment No. 7. The amendment has been placed at the end of the group. I know perfectly well that that does not detract in any way from its importance: to my mind, it is by far the most important amendment in the group, and I expect my hon. Friend to devote most of his time to it.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): Why?

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend asks why. The House knows perfectly well that this is a most important and serious matter, and the debate deserves the fullest and most comprehensive reply.

Miss Emma Nicholson: My hon. Friend tells me that he is fully conversant with A, B and C, if not with hexadecimals. Would he care to explain to the House—to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in particular—how the English used in the amendment works? It is missing either a noun or a verb, or both; it simply does not make sense.

Mr. Summerson: My hon. Friend is being very hard on those who drafted the amendment. It is perfectly clear. In any case, we in the House understand each other perfectly well. We do not have to bother about putting nouns and verbs in their right places, provided that we understand what is being said. For goodness sake, this place is not a school for young girls; it is the home of Britain's full-blooded democracy. We must be heard by the people of Britain to speak in terms that they understand.

Miss Nicholson: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Summerson: With reluctance.

Miss Nicholson: Would my hon. Friend like to tell us what the amendment means? Perhaps it is only a pronoun that is missing, but the amendment is supposed to be in English and it is not.

Mr. Summerson: No doubt my hon. Friend will complain next that there is a split infinitive somewhere in the amendment. The points that she has raised are thoroughly obstructive, and not at all in the spirit of the amendment, which the whole House understands. My hon. Friend may be an expert on computers, but I suggest that she should leave to other hon. Members the business of speaking the language of ordinary people. I am certain that when my speech is televised, as I am sure it will be, my constituents will congratulate me and say that they understood exactly what I was talking about. All my hon. Friends talk about bytes and mini-bytes and disks——

Mr. Michael Brown: And viruses.

Mr. Summerson: And viruses, as my hon. Friend says. Such talk is totally over the heads of most people in this country. That is why we have a Computer Misuse Bill. It is designed to protect people from the depredations and activities of some of those who are meant to look after the interests not only of individuals but of departments, corporations and companies that use computers.

It cannot be stressed sufficiently strongly that this is an extremely important Bill. Films have been made about computer misuse and hacking. A year or two ago a film whose name I cannot remember was made about someone in America who hacked into the American defence computer. It was just a film, but that does not alter the fact that there are those among us—perhaps not in the House, with the exception, of course, of my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West—who have such knowledge of and expertise in these matters that they can do grave and irreparable damage to many of our institutions. That is why the Bill has been introduced.

11.15 am

I end, as I began, by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside on his Bill. He is doing the country a signal service and the Government are right to give the Bill a fair wind. I look forward with considerable interest to hearing what my hon. Friend the Minister has to say about the extremely important matters that have been raised.

Mr. Leigh: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I did not want to raise a point of order during the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) and so interrupt his most interesting comments, but I feel that I must do so now. I sat through the whole of last Friday's debate—I think that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, were also present—during which a series of Opposition Members raised points of order drawing attention to the community charge. Is it not strange, in the light of our result in Wandsworth last night—the Conservatives substantially increased their majority as a result of setting a low community charge—that there have not been points of order concerning the community charge today? Why such silence? Could it be that at last the message is coming home to the British people: if one votes Conservative, one votes for a low community charge?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): A few moments ago I was congratulating myself on the fact that we had reached 11 o'clock without any points of order. I am afraid that I jumped the gun.

Mr. Terry Davis (Birmingham, Hodge Hill): I had originally intended to speak at length in the debate. No doubt some hon. Members will be relieved to know that I propose to be relatively brief, although the point of order raised by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) tempts me to prolong my speech by some hours.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on his Bill. The reason why I had reservations about it was that certain changes were made in Committee. I was glad to sponsor the Bill when the hon. Member asked for my assistance, but I was most concerned about one amendment tabled in Committee, as I explained at the time. I refer specifically to clause 14, which allows a search warrant to be issued in respect of an offence which has been committed, which it is believed has been committed, or which it is believed might be about to be committed.

I share the concern of my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) about the effect on civil liberties of making possible the issue of a search warrant in respect of offences under clause 1, especially in view of the specific recommendation of the Law Commission that a search warrant would not be necessary in such circumstances, and as clause 1 covers offences which, while they might be regarded as serious by some people, would not be regarded by the courts as serious arrestable offences.

In Committee, I cited incidents in Birmingham and the west midlands that had caused me grave concern about allowing the issue of a search warrant to the police. In my experience, that power would be abused in some circumstances. I shall not repeat the examples that I gave in Committee, although I know that my hon. Friends shared my misgivings, but had there been no prospect of an amendment, I should have wanted today to describe in detail the reasons for my misgivings, and that might have prejudiced the progress of the Bill.

I strongly support the amendment tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton, which would mean that, to obtain a search warrant, the police would be required to go to a circuit judge instead of to a justice of the peace. I intend no disparagement or criticism of justices of the peace, but with a matter as important as this, entailing the potential infringement of civil liberties, we should not make it too easy for the police to obtain a search warrant.

My hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and I have suggested a compromise by proposing that, in such circumstances, a warrant should be obtained from a circuit judge. I understand that that is not unprecedented in law, and such a change would mollify those who, like my hon. Friend and me are concerned about civil rights, and would somewhat alleviate our anxieties.

I am sure that we do not want to wreck the chances of this Bill becoming law. As my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton said, we are all concerned with remote burglary, and we do not condone computer hacking. However, we are concerned about the risk of making possible other serious infringements of civil liberties in future. The House should always be careful in such matters.

I have been told that the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside intends to accept our amendment and that is why I will be much briefer than I would otherwise have been. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside for his willingness to compromise. I am aware that representations were made to him and to the Goverment by bodies including the CBI. Representatives from the CBI met me, and I was grateful for their ready recognition of the problems that I described to them in the west midlands.

I am grateful to learn that the CBI told the Government and the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside that it would be sensible in the circumstances to accept amendment No. 3. On the basis of compromise, we can proceed and pass this Bill, which has rightly been described as one that will do a great deal to stop the invasion of privacy that is the result of computer hacking.

[Mr. Terry Davis]

I was delighted to learn that the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) has been persuaded by my arguments and those of my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton. We were deprived of the pleasure of his company in Committee, but he has clearly read our proceedings and been seduced by them into support for civil liberty. He shares our passion to defend civil liberties in this country. I was much impressed by his defence of full-blooded democracy.

However, I believe that the hon. Member for Walthamstow made such a lengthy speech for other reasons. Perhaps he was more concerned with the progress of other Bills on today's Order Paper. I wonder whether he was put up to make his speech, which he had clearly written beforehand and carefully researched, to impede progress on other worthwhile measures that would otherwise have come before the House.

Those measures include the Rights of Way Bill, which is supported by Opposition Members and also by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh). That Bill is also supported by my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell) who would be most concerned if the hon. Member for Walthamstow was trying to impede the progress of a Bill which would improve and protect rights of way.

Mr. Summerson rose——

Mr. Davis: I see that the hon. Member for Walthamstow is trying to reassure me that he has no objection to the Rights of Way Bill. Perhaps he has objections to the Elimination of Poverty in Retirement Bill, which was introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn). Perhaps the hon. Gentleman is more concerned about the Fuel and Energy Provision Bill, introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Hughes). It also occurred to me that the hon. Member for Walthamstow might be anxious to stop children and young persons from being protected from tobacco.

Perhaps, like the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle in his point of order, the hon. Member for Walthamstow is concerned about the poll tax. Had we not had such a long speech from the hon. Member for Walthamstow, we might have reached other Bills on which the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle—who has just left the Chamber—might have wanted to comment. We might have heard whether the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle supported the abolition of the poll tax in discussions on the Poll Tax (Abolition) Bill, the Second Reading of which is to be moved today by my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East. Perhaps the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle might have spoken to the Poll Tax (Restoration of Individual Privacy) Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton.

After the glowing speech by the hon. Member for Walthamstow about the importance of civil liberties and human rights, perhaps he would have wanted to talk about the need to restore individual privacy in connection with the poll tax. However, as a result of his long speech, he has prevented us from considering that Bill.

Mr. Martin M. Brandon-Bravo (Nottingham, South): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Davis: No, I will not give way, because I am anxious to make progress.

The hon. Member for Walthamstow made a very long speech, which means that we will not have the opportunity to discuss the Bill on rape in marriage. That is an important crime in the moral sense. My hon. Friend the Member for Leyton should be congratulated on bringing that Bill to the House. He will be prevented from speaking on that subject. Indeed, he will be prevented from discussing the Bill to abolish hare coursing. I would have supported my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton on those Bills.

I understand that the lengthy speech by the hon. Member for Walthamstow had nothing to do with the Bills to which I have just referred. His speech about the importance of civil liberties will be marked, remembered and kept by Opposition Members, particularly by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton, who is a neighbour of the hon. Member for Walthamstow. My hon. Friend will miss no opportunity in future to quote from the speech made by the hon. Member for Walthamstow whenever issues affecting civil liberties come before the House. I am sure that the Walthamstow Labour party will also study the hon. Gentleman's speech with great interest. No doubt the Walthamstow Labour party will want to question the hon. Gentleman about the way he has voted during the short time that he has been a Member of this House, and in the short time remaining to him.

I believe that the length of the speech by the hon. Member for Walthamstow—and the length of other speeches which might be made—have more to do with the second Bill on the Order Paper today. It seems that it is inconvenient for Privy Councillors to be present later. Therefore, as Privy Councillors need to be here for us to make progress on the Rights of Way Bill, we will have to debate the Computer Misuse Bill, despite the commitment of the hon. Member for Walthamstow to full-blooded democracy, for at least another hour and a half or two hours, simply to allow a Privy Councillor to come to the House.

The hon. Member for Walthamstow, aided and abetted by the hon. Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson), will no doubt talk to other amendments. I am almost tempted to ask you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to accept a manuscript amendment. Having listened to the hon. Member for Walthamstow, I am persuaded that, instead of a circuit judge, perhaps we should have a Privy Councillor to issue search warrants.

I would have been interested to hear the views on that of Conservative Members and the Government supporters who are anxious to wait for a Cabinet Minister to be present to enable the Rights of Way Bill to make progress. I wonder, Mr. Deputy Speaker, why you have not been invited to adjourn the House so that we may pass this most valuable Bill. congratulate the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside on his initiative in bringing it forward and then go off and have a cup of coffee while we wait for a Cabinet Minister to arrive. I should have thought that that was a more sensible way of making progress.

I express my appreciation to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside for his willingness to compromise and to meet us halfway. He has accepted that there is genuine concern on the Opposition Benches about civil liberties; that was reflected in the speech made by the hon. Member for Walthamstow. He has accepted our concern about the way in which clause 14 would, on the experience of other necessary and justified provisions in other Bills, allow the police to abuse police powers. I thank the hon. Member for his compromise.

Mr. Wood: I join other hon. Members in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on introducing this important Bill. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on her work on computer misuse.

Important issues have been raised in the group of amendments headed by new clause 2. Those issues relate to the balance that must be drawn between the degree of risk in various offences and the costs that may be incurred and the possible intrusion into people's privacy in their ordinary way of life.

I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson), whom I had previously understood to be one of the great romantics of the House, was slightly uncharitable in terms of his mother-in-law jokes. He was living rather dangerously, particularly if his mother-in-law is a magistrate.

I believe that my hon. Friend's support for some of the amendments was wrong. I intervened in his speech, and I want to address that issue before I consider other points raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West.

Mr. Ian Bruce (Dorset, South): I am interested in my hon. Friend's comments about magistrates. We all appreciate the work that magistrates do, and it was good to see support of the judiciary, particularly from Opposition Members.

Many people in Dorset still have uneasy feelings about magistrates, particularly those people living in Tolpuddle, because of the martyrs. The history of the Labour party is well known in that respect. Unfortunately, I have some bad news for the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). In a local council by-election in Tolpuddle yesterday, the Conservatives won that seat on West Dorset district council.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. I hope that the hon. Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) will not be tempted to go down that road.

11.30 am

Mr. Wood: I did not intend to be tempted, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We have already had some comments on elections, and there have been some eminently satisfactory results. I do not want to go any further down that road.

Having spent many years in the computer industry, I am interested in the implications of the Bill for the industry and users. Before my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) intervened, I was about to say that it is far too simplistic to say that, if a provable offence has not been committed, it should not be possible to go in with a search warrant to investigate whether an offence is being committed. If that constraint were imposed, I believe that there would be a multitude of cases of hacking that we would not be able to proceed with to a conclusion, to the conviction of individuals who could be causing immense problems for expensive and major computer installations.

I wish to refer to the various responsibilities that go with computer use and those that rest with users and manufacturers, as well as the need to ensure that we pursue those who are committing serious offences.

My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West took as an example a shopkeeper and an employee, and the problems that might arise with the employee using a personal computer. There are some merits in new clause 2, but I was far from persuaded by my hon. Friend's example. A multitude of the personal computers that are now in use were produced for what I would describe as lightweight purposes. Many personal computers have no protection systems.

If computers have been produced in that way, is it right to introduce blockbuster legislation to deal with abuse? I have some reservations about how far we should go. A balance must be struck. I wonder whether it is right that we should be talking about taking out search warrants that will apply to individuals' houses. I am mindful of the circumstances that could arise.

The example of my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West involved putting a "time bomb" into an employer's computer. If the employee left at home the program that had been produced and developed, he would be extremely foolish. In constructing a "time bomb", he would have plenty of time to delete any possible evidence. That would certainly be the position if he, the employee, were competent enough to produce a "time bomb". He or she would certainly be competent enough to remove the evidence from the personal computer.

Although I am not impressed by the example of my hon. Friend, I accept that the Government may have to review the workings of the Bill in a year or two to ascertain whether the offences that it will introduce are capable of being pursued in the way that is necessary to sustain the legislation in a meaningful way. At this stage it would be unwise, perhaps, to introduce more draconian rights to search than those that are contained in the Bill.

Many computers are used and controlled in a fairly casual manner in various premises. On the other hand, there are major computer systems of enormous expense —university systems, for example—where hacking has been a vast problem, and where the costs of impeding hacking would be excessive. There would be an excessive burden on the provider of the service, and also on individual users.

It is therefore right that there should be provision to enable us to crack down on hackers who interfere with a computer system by impeding its use in a variety of ways —by putting in viruses that cause enormous damage or producing time bombs that have an immensely adverse effect after a period. Major abuse, even if the people concerned have only a minor intent, must be tackled by the Bill. That is why I favour it, and believe that there must be rights of search. Otherwise, I do not believe that the Bill will be enforceable.

In considering the new clauses and amendments, we have discussed the merits of justices of the peace and of judges. I am reluctant to take up any of the stereotypes that have been pursued. I know justices of the peace who have great knowledge of computer systems. Equally, I know many who have no such knowledge. I hope that, in implementing the Bill, the police will regard it as a responsibility upon them to take up issues with those who know something about the matters that are being pursued. It is important that the enforcement of the law is regarded with respect.

The same principle applies to judges. Some judges have an intimate and expert knowledge of computer systems and the abuses that may occur. Equally, others have no such knowledge. If we are to involve judges in the pursuit of search warrants, I hope that appropriate members of the judiciary will be involved, judges who have a relevant knowledge and understanding of computer systems. If that is done, the granting of search warrants will be carried out properly.

I took careful note of what my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West said about the interception of telecommunications traffic. I have some sympathy with her arguments, but I thought that she was being somewhat unfair to British Telecom in terms of its willingness or otherwise to support interceptions where there appears to be an abuse of a system. My impression of BT has been much more favourable.

Perhaps we shall find ourselves in a dilemma when we come to consider the costs and other implications of some interception activity and the consequences of the offence that is taking place. If an offence is being committed that has a trivial impact, should we spend thousands of pounds to try to prevent it? It is a difficult question, and one that will not become any easier over the years. As the Bill has been introduced by a private Member, I think that it would be inappropriate to insert the new clause. I believe that, after a year or two, the Government will need to review the workings of the Act, as it will then be.

I hope that the Bill will take its place on the statute book before too long. If it is felt that it needs strengthening so that we can ensure that the various tasks necessary to uphold the law can be carried out, Government legislation should be introduced that will have that effect. To add such significant powers of search and interception would be a mistake.

I understand that my hon. and learned Friend the Minister intends to accept an amendment. I am happy with that, although it calls into question the role of justices of the peace. I would not want the new clauses and other amendments to be accepted, because they would make the Bill draconian, and a private Member's Bill should not be used in that way.

Dr. Lewis Moonie (Kirkcaldy): Hon. Members can imagine my ecstasy last week when I realised that the Bill had been set down for debate the day after the local government elections. Having come from Scotland on the morning plane, I have had very little sleep, but I have been roused by the stimulating speeches from hon. Members on both sides of the House. I am therefore encouraged to put in my pennyworth.

I well understand why there have not been many comments from Conservative Members on yesterday's local government elections—even Pyrrhus would have difficulty in finding satisfaction in the results. There are now 300 fewer Conservative councillors in England. That can be only good for the country.

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): What about Wandsworth?

Dr. Moonie: If I were offered £700 to vote for the Conservative party, I must confess that, as a good Scotsman, I would consider it seriously.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Does that mean that the hon. Gentleman is not a committed member of the Labour party?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. After that interlude, I hope that we can now return to discussing the new clause.

Dr. Moonie: The Minister will no doubt delight us with his speech later. He has attempted to draw our attention to a different issue.

It is incumbent upon us to consider very carefully any matters affecting civil liberty. I have listened carefully to what has been said both today and in Committee, and especially to what was said by the hon. Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson). I am not convinced that the likely range of offences covered by the Bill require the measures contained in the new clause. I trust that the Minister will take a similar view and that the hon. Lady will not press it to a Division. I suspect that the Bill's sponsors also hope that.

I shall be brief, as I know that other hon. Members wish to speak and there are other vital Bills to be considered today. My hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) has tabled an amendment that would require authorisation by a circuit judge for a search warrant, rather than by a justice of the peace as proposed in the Bill. It is a sensible proposal, which reflects the gravity of any action necessary to obtain a search warrant. That should never be taken lightly. Hon. Members have lucidly outlined the arguments, and I do not propose to prolong the debate, other than to say that I agree with the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) on the importance of preserving individual liberties. The Bill will be a better measure if my hon. Friend's amendment is accepted. I understand that the Bills's sponsors have no objection to it, and I commend it to the House.

Sir Ian Lloyd (Havant): I shall not detain the House for more than a few minutes. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) and the other sponsors of the Bill on introducing a most important and interesting measure. We have come a long way from the days when even the mere mention of the word "computer" on the Floor of the House produced either mirth or raised eyebrows. Those days are long behind us.

I have always been under the impression that the powers of this House are so vast that it can do almost anything. However, one thing that it cannot do is change a noun into a verb. That brings me to my substantive point. Clause 17(2) states:

> "A person secures access to any program or data held in a computer if by causing a computer to perform any function he . . .
> (d) has it output".

That is an extraordinary sentence and I want to discover its precise meaning. I suggest that it means, "if he causes the computer in which it is held to reveal part or all of the data that it contains". I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside can clarify that in due course.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I suspect that "output" is the opposite of "input".

I support what my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) said about amendment

No. 7, which relates to security services. He suggested that there might be complaints about a split infinitive, or pedantry of that sort. I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) had in mind not a split infinitive but the absence of one, because the amendment contains the phrase "to access", and "access" is a noun, not a verb.

I wish to speak to new clauses 2 and 3. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on his great success in bringing the Bill thus far. However, only last week we were made aware of how delicate a flower a private Member's Bill can be, so we should not count our chickens too soon. I hope that the Bill reaches the statute book as it is a most valuable piece of legislation.

New clause 2, moved so eloquently by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West, is based on the premise that there is an absence of police powers of search. If that is true, it is most curious, because civil law provides a means to search premises. I am open to correction, but my understanding is that, under civil proceedings, in the example given by my hon. Friend, the police could have applied for an Anton Pillar order. That order is used in cases such as copyright infringement. If a person believes that a former employee is, for example, making clothes in infringement of a copyright, in certain circumstances he can apply to the court for an order to go in and inspect the premises of his former employee. The Anton Pillar order has been criticised as too draconian and intrusive, but the contrast between the civil and the criminal law is interesting.

I agree with the points made by my hon. Friend the member for Walthamstow about the need to protect the rights of the individual. I should be interested to hear the reaction of my hon. and learned Friend the Minister—it is a pleasure to call him such—to the comparison that I have drawn between the criminal and the civil law.

I am extremely unhappy about new clause 3, which amounts to making telephone tapping subject to restrictions far less onerous than those that apply to the tapping of conversations. My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West implies that the power will extend only to the monitoring of data transmissions, but I believe that she herself has argued against the same point in emphasising the importance of such transmissions, and the fact that they are just as sensitive in some instances and no less entitled to enjoy privacy. I believe that my hon. Friend was right to make that argument.

I believe that surveillance such as that suggested in new clause 3 should be treated very seriously. I understand that, in the case of the tapping of telephone conversations, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary himself must first give his authority, whereas new clause 3 would grant that power not to the Home Secretary, or to a High Court, circuit, county or Crown court judge, but to a magistrate. I doubt whether that is a sensible step, and I have not been persuaded by suggestions that High Court judges or any other judges are less with it, up to date or informed in respect of computers than magistrates are.

High Court judges and magistrates have the same kind of education, and are as much exposed to newspapers and periodicals, as anyone else. They are highly qualified—I suppose that that is their only distinction—and it would be wrong for us to accept the stereotype presented. To suggest that High Court judges and older magistrates are more conversant with advocacies—unless the correct word is advoci—than they are with computers is also wrong.

I have been persuaded by the argument of the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) that we should rely on judges rather than magistrates. It is a question not of which are more qualified but of the importance that we attach to the invasion of the individual's privacy. I diverged completely from the remarks of the hon. Member for Leyton only when he described computer hacking as remote burglary. On Second Reading, he eloquently made the point that hacking is a form of trespass—which in British law is not, generally speaking, a crime. To that extent, I disagreed with the hon. Member for Leyton.

New clause 3 suggests that warrants should be restricted to the surveillance and recording of computer transmissions only, but how is one to tell the nature of the transmissions being surveyed unless one surveys them all? One could restrict recordings to those of computer transmissions, but there would have to be surveillance of all transmissions, to identify those not emanating from a computer.

Miss Emma Nicholson: As there are dedicated telephone lines for computer data transmissions, one can distinguish them from other types, as my hon. Friend proposes. Methods are already available for monitoring data transmissions without reference to my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary. One merely attaches a loop around the line and listens in. That is how criminals gain information—and how the police sometimes have to obtain it. My argument is that the police should be able to take such action openly, so that evidence thus obtained would be admissible in court.

Although I accept that a private Member's Bill is not the correct vehicle for such a clause, I tabled it because it is germane and central to the issue of computer crime and its detection, and to put down a marker for a full debate when the resultant Act itself is ripe for amendment, and when the police have experience of enough cases to refer the Act's provision back to the House.

Mr. Arbuthnot: My hon. Friend makes her point very well, as always. If she accepts that the Bill is not the correct vehicle for such a clause, I need say no more. I should be unhappy about reducing the security and privacy of telephone lines on the say so of a justice of the peace, and I believe that the House should not do so without giving the matter serious consideration. If my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West is proposing that such consideration should be given at some future date, I fully accept her contention.

Mr. Colvin: We have enjoyed a wide-ranging debate on the Bill and on the new clauses and amendments that have been tabled. It is interesting that the group of amendments that contain the majority of the proposed alterations to the Bill were tabled by the two hon. Members most involved in the Bill's passage hitherto. I refer to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West, who would be the first to agree, I am sure, that she represents the Scotland Yard view of the need for such legislation and the form in which it should appear on the statute book, and the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) who, it could be said, represents the civil liberties view.

As the promoter of the Bill, I must steer a middle course. The House should endeavour to do so in the case of private Members' Bills, or they can founder on the rocks of controversy. In all our debates, and in discussions that have taken place outside the Committee Room and this Chamber, we have reached conclusions as to what might or might not be acceptable that should rendered the Bill a better one and ensure its progress.

I was pleased to hear my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) justify his 11th hour support for some of the amendments in a most stirring speech that certainly brought life to the Chamber this morning. He is right to emphasise the enormous growth in the use and misuse of computers and computer networks. The American film to which he referred was "War Games". Although it was a frivolous, teenage film, it nevertheless told a very serious story. It contained an element of truth, in that today's teenagers, thanks to the extent to which computers are available in schools, can finish their education fully computer literate. The film highlighted the temptation to stray down the path of trespass and the serious consequences ultimately of that activity. So although "War Games" was in itself a frivolous movie, it has a serious story to tell.

The hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) ably supported the hon. Member for Leyton in his advocacy of civil rights. The hon. Member for Hodge Hill was right to draw attention to the need for safeguards, and I am the first to thank him not only for sponsoring the Bill but for the constructive way in which he negotiated over the question of the safeguards that I hope the House will now introduce.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) has made welcome contributions throughout the passage of the Bill. He brings to our debates a considerable expertise of the computer industry, as a former employee of ICL. The Opposition Front-Bench spokesman, the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie), has been thoroughly constructive throughout. I applaud the official Opposition's stand on the Bill, and I regret the total absence of a spokesman for or of any interest from hon. Members of the minor opposition parties. I tried to get them to take an interest in the Bill—I tried to recruit someone from those parties to sponsor the Bill and to be on the Standing Committee, but to no avail.

My hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) and I have a similar interest in the issue as one of the biggest IBM factories is in his constituency. With his well-known perspicacity, he put his fingetr on a particular problem in the Bill and he got me turning the pages fast when he referred to clause 17 (2)(d). For a moment, I thought that my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) had dealt with the matter —following the old adage that one should set a thief to catch a thief. The House can be excused from sometimes turning out unintelligible legislation, and that is one reason for trying to reduce the number of lawyers in the House. We are lucky to have my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford here. As a prominent lawyer, he explained what was intended by the clause.

My hon. Friend the Member for Havant may be interested to know that I raised the same matter when the Bill was drafted. I think that the Bill went through eight drafts before it came to Parliament. As a result of its passage through Committee, it has been redrafted and will no doubt be redrafted once more.

Miss Emma Nicholson: My hon. Friend should note that a Liberal has just come into the Chamber and is running away again.

Mr. Colvin: I did not see him, but I hope that that fleeting visit goes down on the record. All that I saw was a back view. Perhaps another hon. Member could say who he was.

Miss Emma Nicholson: My hon. Friend saw the back view of a rapidly disappearing species—the Liberal party.

Mr. Colvin: I am grateful for that intervention. My hon. Friend's eyes are sharper than mine.

My hon. Friend the Member for Havant mentioned the word "output" used as a verb. I have checked the word with parliamentary counsel, who confirm that its use in the Bill is correct.

Dr. Moonie: Whether it is in the dictionary or not, it is an appalling way to phrase anything. Perhaps we might change it in time for the next stage in the House.

Mr. Colvin: I take the hon. Gentleman's point.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West on the way in which she moved new clause 2. It is appropriate that she was the first person to speak this morning because, with her knowledge of computers and computer systems, and the way that she has made us all more aware of the menace of computer misuse, it was right to give her pole position this morning. I know that the order in which hon. Members are called is largely the luck of the draw, but nevertheless it was appropriate, and I am sure that the House will join me in paying tribute to her work in putting computer misuse high on the parliamentary agenda.

This group of amendments is broadly concerned with powers of investigation, and with police powers in particular. Hon. Members have raised many matters. As the promoter of the Bill, it is important for me to reply in some detail and to raise a few more points so that there is a clear statement on the record of the thinking behind the various clauses and amendments, and why some may be approved and others not.

Police powers of investigation were discussed at length in Committee. We have had an interesting debate today and I shall respond to each new clause and amendment separately. It may be helpful for the House to know that I shall conclude by asking hon. Members to accept amendments Nos. 3 and 16, tabled by the hon. Member for Leyton, but that I shall try to persuade the proposers of the other amendments and new clauses not to move them or withdraw them. My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West ably moved new clause 2, but I hope that she will withdraw it.

The offence of basic unauthorised access, one of the three new offences defined in the Bill, is summarised in clause 1. The offence is triable in a magistrates court and would not normally attract any powers of arrest or search. Although I doubted that that should be the case at first —hon. Members will recall what I said on Second Reading —I was eventually persuaded that it would have left prosecution of the offence difficult to enforce. In a classic hacking case, it is relatively easy to pinpoint the source of the hacking, but without powers of search it may be difficult to identify the individual doing it.

Clause 14, which we added to the Bill in Committee, provides the police with the ability to obtain search warrants for the basic clause 1 offence. As that offence is an essential ingredient of the clause 2 offence, the new power will apply to such cases. It will also be relevant to many clause 3 offences. Clause 14 is concerned only with search. There is no new power of arrest.

I remind the House that clause 2 and 3 offences are automatically arrestable offences under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. That means that the police have the power to arrest and to search at the time of arrest. In certain cases, if the consequences have been or are likely to be, particularly grave, those offences could become serious arrestable offences. In that case, the police would have additional powers under PACE, in particular, the power of search not linked to arrest.

PACE is a relatively recent Act—it is only five years old. Given the seriousness with which the House rightly views police powers, I believe that we should vary its provisions only if a particularly strong case is made.

New clause 2 seeks to allow the police to obtain a search warrant for clause 3 offences—the unauthorised modification offence. I hope to persuade hon. Members that there is not a strong case for that amendment. Where unauthorised modification follows unauthorised access —when a hacker gets into a system and starts to change things—the new search powers of clause 14 will apply. It is true that they will not apply in all cases. For example, if someone puts an affected disk into circulation, physical evidence will be available and the police can apply traditional detective techniques leading to an arrest and search on arrest. We are not dealing with classic hacking where the only thing that leaves the hacker's premises is a signal over the telephone line. Physical objects will be available to the police for their detective work.

No doubt there will be some cases where the new power that my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West proposes would be useful to the police, but that would be a relatively small proportion of the total which do not have the special features that justify the serious step of varying the PACE regime. Therefore, I shall urge my hon. Friend to withdraw the new clause.

My hon. Friend referred to the importance of the Council of Europe recommendations that we are soon to examine. She referred also to the European Community when she spoke to new clause 3. The Council of Europe has made recommendations, but they do not bind anyone; its proposals lie on the table. The European Community is considering the matter, but it cannot publish directives relating to the criminal law.

There was a joint conference between the Council of Europe and the European Community in Luxembourg on 27 and 28 March 1990. My Bill was on the agenda and received considerable support and applause from those present. They saw at last some evidence that the United Kingdom was coming into line. I hope that the Italian and Belgian delegates at the conference took note of that fact because they, too, need to put their house in order, or they may become so-called hackers' havens.

New clause 3 would allow the police to obtain a warrant from a justice of the peace requiring someone—in practice, British Telecom or Mercury—to intercept computer transmissions over the public telecommunications network and to make the results available to the police. I shall argue that new clause 3 is unnecessary. Parliament established the law on the interception of communications in the Interception of Communications Act 1985. As in the case of police powers, this is a sensitive area. A delicate balance needs to be struck between individual privacy and the interests of the community and the nation. I should not want that balance to be disturbed without good reason. If I were to try to do so, I believe that I would put the Bill in jeopardy. The technology and the powers already exist to trace hackers. I have discussed them in detail with the police, British Telecom and Mercury, and I thank those organisations most sincerely for the help that they have given me.

Telephone calls can be traced, without special powers, through the network. If a suspected hacker is identified, it is possible to record what numbers he calls, and for how long, although without looking into the content of the call. Clause 1(2)(b) of the 1985 Act provides that any call can be intercepted if either the sender of the recipient agrees. If the victim of the hack agrees, the hacker's calls to him can be intercepted. If necessary, that can be done at the hacker's end, using special equipment—it is called data monitoring—that is programmed to record calls to the victim's number only. If the hacker goes via an innocent third party, the third party would normally co-operate with the police. Again, the calls could be monitored.

The powers, therefore, already exist , but co-operation is needed between the police and the telecommunications operators. Having spoken to them, I am sure that the will to help to enforce the Bill, if and when it is passed, exists.

I listened to what my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West said about the difficulties that have been experienced over co-operation. She must provide details of those difficulties. It would be possible for Her Majesty's Government to say to the police and to the telecommunications systems, "You must get your act together, because it is in your interests to co-operate." Compulsion is not the answer. I am therefore reluctant to create a new duty to assist the police.

Still less do I want to disturb the delicate balance of the 1985 Act, simply to compel co-operation to do something that can already be done, if the police and the operators continue to work together. Therefore I invite my hon. Friend to consider withdrawing new clause 3.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 16 go to the heart of the debate. They were ably moved by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). Amendment No. 3 requires the police to apply to a circuit judge rather than to a justice of the peace for a search warrant, if there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that a clause 1 offence has been or is about to be committed. The effect would be to introduce more rigorous control over the issue of warrants. I agree with that. Clause 16 makes a similar provision in respect of Northern Ireland.

The extension of police powers is a serious issue. The hon. Member for Leyton is right to press for appropriate controls. I pay tribute to him and to his campaign, to secure civil liberties. Under the Bill, the aim of a warrant would be to enable the police to discover who was operating the computer when the offence was committed and to gather evidence. Without such a power, the police would be at a severe disadvantage; all that they could do would be to identify the location of the hacking, not the individual involved.

Search warrants to enter and search for evidence are usually issued by justices of the peace. They act independently. When framing clause 14 I was satisfied that due care and attention would be paid by them to the merits of each case. Justices of the peace do not perform a rubber-stamping exercise. A judicial review by a circuit judge, as proposed by the hon. Gentleman, is called for only when entry and search is required for special categories of material, such as items subject to legal privilege, confidential personal records which have been acquired or created in the course of the holder's occupation, journalistic material and information about a person's financial dealings, assets or medical data.

I have discussed the hon. Gentleman's proposal with him and with my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Industry. I am persuaded that his amendments could be accepted. To provide search powers for a summary offence —a magistrates court offence—is relatively unusual, but in this case the Standing Committee thought that it was justified because of the nature of the crime. As it is unusual, I sympathise with the hon. Gentleman's concern about the use, or perhaps the abuse of the new power in clause 14. I accept that it needs to be exercised with circumspection and that a review by a circuit judge would inspire greater public confidence that sufficient grounds exist for a search.

I assure justices of the peace that no slight is implied. I am merely responding to the concerns that have been expressed. I appreciate that that is a slightly unusual approach, especially in a private Member's Bill, but I wish to accommodate the hon. Member for Leyton and I hope that my hon. and learned Friend the Minister will say that the Government, like me, are prepared to accept his amendments Nos. 3 and 16.

Amendments Nos. 5 and 6 seek to remove the possibility of obtaining a warrant to enter and search premises to gain evidence when the police have reasonable grounds for believing that a computer misuse offence is about to be committed. The warrant would presently be available only when an offence has been committed. I am reluctant to limit the power of search in that way. It is not uncommon for police to act on information given them to prevent crimes from occurring. Computer misuse offences are no different in that respect from the ordinary run of crimes. Hackers are notorious for exchanging and spreading information about what they have done and intend doing. Unauthorised access can have serious consequences and where there is an opportunity to prevent the cost and destruction of such access, I should be reluctant to hinder it. Surely prevention is better than cure.

I do not agree that this would be an opppressive power, even in the context of offences as defined. A warrant will be issued only where a circuit judge—provided that amendment No. 3 is accepted, as I hope it is—is convinced of the grounds for believing that an offence is about to take place. That enhanced form of judicial review is a more than effective check to ensure legitimate use of power. The fears of the hon. Member for Leyton are unfounded and I ask him not to move the amendments. They are deceptive anyway because they fail to remove an identical reference in subsection 4.

Amendment No. 7 was also tabled by the hon. Member for Leyton, who has a longstanding interest in the activities of the Security Service, as does the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) who had much to say about the subject in Committee. That interest is shared by those who wish to ensure that the Security Service can effectively carry out its essential role in protecting the security of the country, particularly against threats from espionage, terrorism and subversion. That is one reason why, only last year, the House passed the Security Service Act. Section 3 of that Act provides that > "No entry on or interference with property shall be unlawful if it is authorised by a warrant issued by the Secretary of State".

The Act contains a series of restrictions and safeguards. It establishes a commissioner, whose job it is to keep under review the exercise of the Secretary of State's power to issue warrants under the Act. Those safeguards should reassure the hon. Member for Leyton.

The passage of the Security Service Act was marked by the most detailed discussion and careful consideration of the various provisions now in force. Therefore, I am reluctant, in my Bill, to vary legislation that the House passed with considerable debate so recently. For that reason, and because the amendment is not compatible with clause 17, or grammatically correct, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will not press it.

Amendment No. 9 is a paving amendment for amendment No. 10 and I shall therefore refer to them together. By tabling amendment No. 10, the hon. Member for Leyton seeks to amend clause 14, the warrant clause, so that the police could obtain a search warrant to enter and search premises only if the material or signal transmitted from the premises gave them reasonable grounds to believe that an offence had been committed, and only if more than one person resided, in, or was employed at, the premises.

Subsection (a) of amendment No. 10 is unnecessary. Usually, the police, with the help of telephone services companies, will have been able to locate only the premises where the clause 1 offence is being committed, by using data monitors and the dialled number recorders. That evidence will usually be the material that they will present to the circuit judge as reasonable grounds for the belief that an offence has been committed. Where that information is not available, the police may find it difficult to show sufficient grounds. I do not wish to exclude the possibility that occasionally there may be other relevant evidence to show that an offence has been, or is about to be, committed or that such material could not be presented in addition to evidence gained from data monitors.

The amendment has the unfortunate consequence of excluding relative evidence in both cases, neither of which is sensible. Subsection (b) will allow sole occupants of properties to be exempt from the issue of warrants for the clause 1 offence, which cannot be right. My hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow spoke strongly on that point although he has signed the amendment—no doubt to ensure that he had the opportunity to speak on it.

The investigation into a clause 1 offence, before obtaining a warrant, will not identify who is committing the offence, but only the premises in which the offence is being committed. At that stage, the police will have no idea whether those premises are ones of single or multiple occupancy, and even if they do, it will not be clear that the occupant is the person operating the computer. The occupant could easily allege that it must have been a friend or acquaintance and thus create sufficient doubt to avoid conviction. I am convinced that the hon. Gentleman's amendment would severely impair enforcement of the clause 1 offence. It is essential to identify the culprit, irrespective of the occupancy of the premises. Therefore, I invite him not to move the amendment.

Amendment No. 18 was tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson). I fully understand the intention behind it, and agree with what she seeks to achieve. However, the conditions that she hopes to obtain are already fulfilled and the amendment is unnecessary. Therefore, I oppose it. It seeks to ensure that a computer will not be exempt from a clause 14 search warrant simply because some of its contents are excluded from the warrant by virtue of section 9(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. The effect of that section is not to prevent the police from searching a room, or even a building, if it is thought that, inter alia, excluded material might be there.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): Does my hon. Friend agree that it might be useful to hack into the computers that so inaccurately forecast the local election results in London, particularly for the constituency of my right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher), where the Conservative party gained seats, rather than lost them, as forecast by the Labour party's computer, and for the London borough of Ealing, where the Leader of the Opposition now has a good right-wing Conservative council that will reduce his community charge?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure that the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) will not be tempted by that intervention.

Mr. Colvin: I am most tempted, but in the interests of progress I will resist the temptation.

Mr. Ian Bruce: It is possible that hacking has occurred. The computer predictions of the BBC or ITV yesterday that if there were a general election there would be a 186 majority for the Labour party suggest that somebody had already hacked into the computer. When the results came in, we saw how inaccurate those predictions were.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside had been as good as gold until those interventions were made.

Mr. Colvin: I have been thrown. I was trying to explain the effects of section 9(2) of PACE. I shall try to get back into my stride after those irrelevant but welcome interventions, which prove that yesterday people voted on the performance of local authorities rather than the policies of the Government.

Miss Emma Nicholson: Does my hon. Friend know that the Data Protection Registrar has determined that 21 local councils have overstepped the mark in obtaining information on the community charge? Is he aware that the bulk of those councils are Labour, or certainly were?

12.30 pm

Mr. Colvin: That is an interesting point to put on the record. I am sure that the appropriate authorities will take action as a result of that news.

The purpose of section 9(2) of PACE is not to prevent the police from searching a room or building if it is thought that, inter alia, excluded material might be in it but to stipulate that such material must not be the subject of the warrant. The subject of a warrant to investigate clause 1 offences would be material that would prove who had committed the offence. It is conceivable that the police, when executing a warrant, might happen upon excluded material. That would not nullify the validity of the warrant but would simply mean that such material should either not be seized or, if it inadvertently was, that it could not be used as evidence. Were that not the case, any warrant could be opposed on the pretext that excluded material was contained in the premises for which it was issued.

I hope that I have reassured my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West and that if she catches your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and obtains permission to reply she will withdraw new clause 2.

The hon. Member for Leyton has made the case well for accepting amendments Nos. 3 and 16, which substitute circuit judges for justices of the peace in respect of issuing warrants under clause 14. Those amendments will be moved formally later when we consider clauses 14 and 16 and I look forward to hearing the Government's view on them.

I cannot accept new clause 3 or any of the remaining amendments, on which we have had a good and constructive debate, for reasons that will be known to hon. Members. I hope that they will not feel compelled to press them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) accurately expressed the views that I have formed about the amendments and new clauses. Therefore, it would be to the convenience of the House if I expressed my views briefly and in summary form.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside, I commend to the House amendments Nos. 3 and 16, which were tabled by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) and to which my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) put his name. For the reasons given by my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside, I am unable to accept the remainder of the new clauses and amendments in this group. However, it is right that I, on the Government's behalf, should express to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside our gratitude not merely for carrying the Bill forward but for doing so with considerable distinction and for expressing his views with considerable lucidity and elegance.

My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) deserves considerable credit for bringing this matter to public attention. She was, rightly, the first to speak in this morning's proceedings, so it would perhaps be appropriate if I dealt first with the two new clauses and one amendment in her name. As she well knows, I am sorry to disappoint her by not being able to accept them. The arguments of my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside are persuasive.

On new clause 2, I start from the presumption that one should not extend powers of search unless it is essential to have those powers of search to prove that a criminal offence has been committed. I have been persuaded that it is necessary to increase the rights of search in respect of clause 1 offences. I know that—the hon. Member for Leyton reminded me of this—I expressed scepticism about that fact when the matter was considered by the House on

[Mr. Douglas Hogg]

Second Reading. I have concluded that, partly because of the arguments advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West, in connection with clause 1 offences it is essential to have an extended right of search. The justification for that was touched on by my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside when he said that, in respect of clause 1 offences, often the only evidence one can obtain is to determine the identity of the person occupying the premises from which it is possible to establish that the relevant communication was transmitted is that which is obtainable following a search. I do not feel that the same applies to clause 3 offences.

Many clause 3 offences are also clause 1 offences—they are subsumed within the clause 1 acts. Consequently, a right of search also arises under clause 14 in respect of a large number of clause 3 offences, because they involve clause 1 acts. Moreover, all clause 3 offences are also arrestable offences. The ordinary rights of search that arise upon an arrest for a clause 3 offence will automatically arise. Some clause 3 offences will also be serious, arrestable offences, therefore, the pre-emptive rights of search provided for in PACE will apply to them.

I accept that a small minority of cases will not fall under one of the heads which I have itemised. In the great majority, where the police could properly exercise a right of arrest, they will also be able to obtain a clause 14 search warrant. To put it another way, I find it difficult to believe that there are many cases in which it would be possible to obtain a warrant for search under clause 14 where the police could not properly effect an arrest under ordinary powers.

A small minority of cases may not be covered by what I have said. However, we need to be extremely careful about extending the rights of search. In the vast majority of those residual cases the police, by proceeding with the ordinary process of investigation, would be able to establish sufficient evidence to bring the charge home. However, nothing in this place or elsewhere is written in concrete and the matter must be kept under constant review. Relevant statutes will be enacted in future and there is bound to be a Criminal Justice Bill from time to time. If my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West is correct, I anticipate that the Government of the day may want to address the problem subsequently.

New clause 3 was moved eloquently by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West. I agreed entirely with what my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) said on the point. The new clause refers delicately to "surveillance", but my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford was right when he characterised it as telephone tapping. I agreed with my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside when he pointed out that, without obtaining additional powers, it is already possible to mount many relevant surveillances, partly because under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 that can be done with the consent of the recipient and partly because, without the necessity for additional powers, the fact of the transmission, the duration and date can already be obtained by surveillance methods.

The House has long been cautious about giving to any authority the right to maintain telephone tapping of a communication. That is why the warrant of the Home Secretary is required under the 1985 legislation. Any hon. Member would be slow to ask the House to make an exception in this case. We may come back to the matter in future, but I am confident that we should not do so today.

I agreed with the view of my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside that amendment No. 18 is unnecessary. The fact that a computer may contain excluded material is not a reason for refusing a clause 14 warrant, although, of course, if the police wanted to make use of the excluded material that they found, they might have to use the special procedure set out in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

The effect of amendments Nos. 3 and 16 is to provide that the clause 14 warrant should be issued only on the authority of a circuit judge. I understand the arguments in favour of that. There are precedents for doing that, and to carry the maximum consent for the Bill I commend the two amendments to the House.

I find the argument in favour of change advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford the most persuasive. It is not a matter of the qualifications of the justice of the peace or of the judge. The two could be equally well qualified, and I make no differentiation between the two. My hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford was correct in saying that by entrusting that responsibility to a circuit judge we are marking the importance that we attach to the process. That is a persuasive argument. For that reason alone, I am content to accept the advice of my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside.

Let me refer briefly to amendments Nos. 5 and 6, which were spoken to so eloquently by the hon. Member for Leyton. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside: it is entirely right that the police should have a right of search when a circuit judge has been persuaded that an offence is likely to be committed. There are many circumstances in which the House would require the police to have a pre-emptive right of search, arising on sufficient and credible grounds. This is such a case, and I hope that the hon. Member for Leyton will not consider it necessary to press the Amendments to a Division.

Amendment No. 10 was also tabled by the hon. Member for Leyton, and again I agree with what was said by my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside. It would not be right to exclude relevant, credible and admissible evidence—perhaps in the form of documents—from the scrutiny of the courts, but that would be the effect of the hon. Gentleman's amendment. In many cases, it would be difficult to determine how many people were residing in the premises for the purposes of the amendment. The concept of residence is not easy. For instance, my daughter—I am happy to say—is at university, but frequently returns to my house. Is she residing in my house for the purposes of the hon. Gentleman's amendment? That is a difficult question, and I am not sure of the answer. I raise it not to give the answer but merely to illustrate the type of problems that will arise when an application is made to the court.

Amendment No. 7 is also in the name of the hon. Member for Leyton. It seeks to exclude the Security Service from the scope of the Bill. Again, I am persuaded by what was said by my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside. We all remember the attention that was given to the Security Service last year when the Security Services Act 1989 was debated. I don't believe that the time is right for us to disturb the extremely delicate balance that was achieved by that Act, or that this is the appropriate legislation. Although I congratulate the hon. Member for Leyton on taking the opportunity to raise the matter, I hope that he will not press his amendment to a Division.

My hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) made an interesting intervention, which had me worried for a moment, about whether the word "output" was appropriate. I have some sympathy with the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie), who suggested that it was a horrible word. He is probably right, but it is a relief to see a definition section in the Bill. That precisely answers the question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Havant. Although it is in an unusual place, the definition section is there—in clause 17(4)(a) and (b).

I have tried to deal with the various points that have been raised, especially those of my hon. Friends. In substance, I strongly commend amendments Nos. 3 and 16 to the House. I hope that the House will accept them, and that it will not be necessary to put any other new clause or amendment to a Division.

Miss Emma Nicholson: My hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) described me as loosely representing the views of Scotland Yard. I should like to put it on record that my interest in this matter is that United Kingdom business and industry should flourish in the electronic era, and to do so it will need a little protection. I am also especially interested in the health and growth prospects of the software industry, and concerned that they, too, should burgeon. The industry already has a European value of £32 billion. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside should know that Italy already has extensive anti-hacking laws, which it enforces thoroughly, although alas, the same cannot be said of milk quotas.

Through the good offices, energy and wisdom of my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside, we are now moving rapidly towards the criminalisation of hacking and the planting of viruses. That is why, to me, the matters remaining to be dealt with centre on police effectiveness in enforcing the provisions of the Bill. Both my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside and my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State suggested that only a relatively small proportion of the legislation would be "running free", to use the same phrase as my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside —that only a small minority of cases would not be touched by the Bill as drafted.

My hon. Friends agree that the Bill is not comprehensive enough to catch all the criminals who will commit the offences defined in it. We differ only on the size of the category for which it will not work. I believe that it will include by far the larger proportion of potential cases —perhaps nearly all of them. Time will prove the Bill to be unenforceable in its present form, and the police will have a catalogue of crimes to bring to justice. In 18 months' time, the worth of new clause 2 will become apparent and its purport will be adopted, perhaps in a new criminal justice Bill or by means of solid and substantial amendments to the present Bill. New clause 3 and amendment No. 18 might also properly be discussed then, although I recognise and wholly accept the intellectual and emotional difficulty of giving transmission lines different legislative treatment according to the material that they carry.

My hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside was persuasive. He has succeeded in convincing me that, if I press my new clause to a vote, the consequential loss of time—and perhaps a lack of numbers —may extinguish the Bill. My hon. and learned Friend the Minister led me to the same conclusion. I cannot take such a course because, however defective the Bill may be in terms of enabling the police to catch criminals, it will allow the police co-operative powers internationally and thus it will start to bring the United Kingdom into the crucial business of protecting the information marketplace. I believe that we will go further later but, for the time being, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion and clause, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 1

UNAUTHORISED ACCESS TO COMPUTER MATERIAL

Mr. Cohen: I beg to move amendment No. 1, in page 1, line 19, at end add—

'(4) No offence under this section is committed by any person if the computer that performs the function is the computer to which access is secured or intended to be secured, and

(a) the computer controls equipment used only for personal, domestic or recreational purposes, or

(b) the computer has been lost and the access in question is secured, or intended to be secured, in order to establish ownership of the computer, or

(c) the place where the computer is located can be used by unauthorised persons, and the access in question is secured at a time when that place is authorised for use by unauthorised persons.'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): With this, we may take amendment No. 2, in page 1, line 19, at end add—

'(4) For the purpose of this section, it shall be a defence to prove that the access in question was in the public interest.'.

Mr. Cohen: I shall try not to delay our proceedings. Amendment No. 1 would introduce into the Bill a definition of a "computer". I made several attempts in Committee to get a definition included, or at least to restrict the extent of the problems that will arise because no definition is included. As I said on Second Reading, that is a flaw in the Bill.

In Committee and on Second Reading, I said that there was a danger that a section 1 offence could apply to a variety of consumer electronics and domestic appliances that have some computing functions. At the moment, that could apply to a long list of appliances which I have listed in amendment No. 8. My opinion is shared by the well-respected barrister, Alistair Kelman, who is an expert on computer law and an occasional adviser to the police on computer-related crime. In an article in Connexion on 21 February, he wrote:

"The Bill may throw up some unlikely hackers if it survives unamended. These could include those who fax other people's letters to third parties without the author's permission and neighbours who use washing machines and microprocessors without prior consent."

That is the point I have been making: it would be absurd for that to happen.

The definition will be a problem in future, but we should try to narrow it down now, and that is the purpose of my amendments.

[Mr. Cohen]

According to amendment No. 1, only one computer would be involved and if that was used "for personal, domestic and recreational purposes", no section 1 offence would be committed. Similarly, if a computer had been lost and access to it was obtained to establish ownership, that would not be an offence. If there is no proper definition, many problems will arise. I am sure that it is not the sponsor's intention that the Bill should apply to washing machines and microprocessors, but there is a danger of that occurring in future.

Amendment No. 2 provides that

"it shall be a defence to prove that the access in question was in the public interest."

Amendment No. 2 is important, because it follows the line adopted by the Law Commission report in 1981 on breach of confidence. That report recommended the need for a public interest defence. That would be a useful addition to the Bill.

In that regard, we must bear in mind the case of the journalist, Mr. William Goodwin, aged 24, who is a trainee reporter with a trade magazine called The Engineer. He received a telephone call that divulged confidential company information. On checking the facts with the company, he received an injunction. Despite appeals to the House of Lords, on 10 April he was fined for refusing to disclose his sources.

That decision by the Law Lords has been severely criticised. A Guardian editorial on 11 April stated:

"Only the English judiciary with their narrow and restrictive approach to free speech could have ruled in favour of commerce. British courts have a tawdry record in defending a free press. They have already been reversed in the Distillers and Harman cases, and Spycatcher will shortly follow. Once the Goodwin case reaches Strasbourg, it will be judged in accordance with article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights which recognises the importance of a free press in a democratic society. Though it has never ruled on disclosure of sources, its record leaves no doubt that the English courts will once again be found in breach of the convention."

That view is supported by The Economist which stated in that same week:

"Under the common law of confidentiality, a company can stop a paper publishing news improperly leaked (for example, by an employee or from a stolen file), unless the paper can demonstrate an overriding public interest (for example, the revelation of wrongdoing). The company will insist that publication would do it dire harm. The judge must weigh the rival interest."

That is my view, as shown in amendment No. 2. It is important to try to defend whistleblowers who are acting in the public interest and who are performing a public service.

That has happened in three cases. One was that of an employee of a drugs company which was dumping drugs, banned in the west, in the Third world. An employee informed the Inland Revenue that his employer, a major insurance company, was defrauding the taxpayer. Another employee informed the Ministry of Defence that his employer, a contractor, had been grossly overcharging. In those three cases, the public interest should be a defence that the courts could weigh.

I shall give the House two examples. A journalist might receive a phone call during which the caller says, "I am taking a risk in telling you this. However, if you use this number and a password, dial into the computer and read the file, you will find evidence of a disgraceful event that should be made public." Let us suppose that the journalist does that, and a story is printed about the wrongdoing. By doing that, he is condemning himself to what will be a section 1 offence, even though he is acting in the public interest.

Let us suppose also that a journalist receives a smart card—not a piece of paper—containing certain data, and that he puts it into his computer to discover the information that it contains. As soon as he does that, he commits what will be a section 1 offence, even though he is acting in the public interest. What will be a section 1 offence could become the equivalent of the old and discredited section 2 offence under the Official Secrets Act 1911. Surely we do not want to go down that road.

The public interest defence should be included in the Bill, and the courts could then decide whether that defence outweighed the offence that had been committed. As The Economist observed, the whistleblower still has to establish that a wrongdoing was involved in leaking information. I have introduced a reasonable amendment so that we do not drift into replacing section 2 offences under the 1911 Act with what will become section 1 offences.

Mr. Colvin: I listened carefully to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). He talked about the three different categories of exemption, the first being gaining unauthorised access to "computer controls equipment used only for personal, domestic or recreational purposes."

Let us suppose that the "equipment" is the radar or navigation equipment of a small aeroplane. Unauthorised access to that equipment could be extremely serious. Secondly, some computers may be used for dual purposes, for both personal and non-personal use. As drafted, the amendment would provide that those who access the computer for whatever purpose would not be guilty of an offence under clause 1.

The second exemption of lost computers for which the amendment provides is surely not necessary. Unless there were a clear instruction to the contrary, an individual—someone in authority, or the police, for example—would reasonably assume that the owner of the computer would want it to be traced. Accordingly, I do not think that the second exemption is required.

The hon. Gentleman's third exemption would mean that an offence would not be committed if the place where the computer was located could be used "by unauthorised persons . . . at a time when that place is authorised for use by unauthorised persons."

That exemption would surely create a legal loophole that we would not wish to enshrine in an Act. It would allow those who have authority to be in a room—for example, office cleaners late at night—to be able to gain access to a computer that is in the room without committing an offence. It would go even further. Anyone who entered the room when the cleaners were allowed in would be able to access the computer with impunity. A dishonest employee could stay behind for that purpose. The exemption would create a most undesirable loophole. On the basis of those points, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Amendment No. 2 makes provision for those who commit clause 1 offences to escape conviction if they can prove that they were acting in the public interest. It is most undesirable to introduce a general and vague public interest defence. The result would be to create a criminal offence that was so weak and uncertain as to call into question its very existence. The Bill must state clearly and precisely what would be the predictable consequences of committing the offences it creates.

The hon. Gentleman suggests that, even though the mischief identified in clause 1 has been done, there is some differently perceived and wider interest that, in effect, means that the mischief does not matter. Surely it always matters. Such an exemption would mean that anyone—he mentioned journalists—could hack into a computer if, in his personal judgment, however misplaced, he thought that he was assisting some general public good. That undermines the offence and runs counter to the whole purpose of the Bill.

I remind hon. Members that we are not talking about competing or balancing interests, as under civil law. Still less are we trying to reopen the 1989 debate on the Official Secrets Act. We are talking about outlawing and deterring unauthorised access to computers, and in particular what should be the predictable consequences of that activity. A public interest defence had no place in such a scheme. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will not feel compelled to press his amendment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I profoundly agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin). I understand the argument of the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), but I hope that he will feel that the case put by my hon. Friend is sufficient to persuade him not to press the amendment to a Division.

Mr. Cohen: I take the point, and I shall not press my amendment. However, I hope that my point about the public interest will be picked up at some future date. We may well have to return to it in relation to this Bill. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 8

RELEVANCE OF EXTERNAL LAW

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I beg to move amendment No. 13, in page 6, line 16, leave out 'in their opinion the condition is not satisfied'

', on the facts as alleged with respect to the relevant conduct, the condition is not in their opinion satisfied',

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): With this we will discuss Government amendments Nos. 14 and 15.

Mr. Hogg: These are splendidly technical and wonderfully complicated amendments. I shall summarise the effects of amendments Nos. 13 and 14. Clause 8 provides that offences are triable under clause 4(4) provided that the act complained of would involve the commission of an offence under the law where it was intended to take place. Clause 8(5) provides for a presumption that the act complained of is unlawful unless the defendant serves a counter notice requiring the prosecution to prove illegality.

On further consideration of the Bill, it was felt that it might have the effect of compelling a defendant who did not service a counter notice to accept both the acts complained of and the criminal intention attributed to him. That was not the purpose of the Bill, and out of an abundance of caution this group of amendments has been introduced.

Amendment No. 15 deals only with Scotland. It would enable the prosecution to present oral or documentary evidence during the hearing, which would otherwise be inadmissible because the defence had not given the prescribed notice in advance. As I said, the amendments are technical and complicated, but I hope that the House will accept them.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments made: No. 14, in page 6, line 18, at end insert—

'(5A) In subsection (5) above "the relevant conduct" means—

(a) where the condition in subsection (1) above is in question, what the accused intended to do or facilitate;

(b) where the condition in subsection (2) above is in question, the agreed course of conduct; and

(c) where the condition in subsection (3) above is in question, what the accused had in view.'

No. 15, in page 6, line 21, at end insert—

'( ) If by virtue of subsection (6) above a court of solemn jurisdiction in Scotland permits the defence to require the prosecution to show that the condition is satisfied, it shall be competent for the prosecution for that purpose to examine any witness or to put in evidence any production not included in the lists lodged by it.'.—[Mr. Douglas Hogg.]

Clause 14

SEARCH WARRANTS FOR OFFENCES UNDER SECTION 1

Amendments made: No. 3, in page 8, line 36, leave out 'justice of the peace' and insert 'circuit judge'.

No. 16, in clause 16, page 11, line 4, leave out 'The reference in section 14(2)' and insert—

'In section 14—

(a) the reference in subsection (1) to a circuit judge shall be read as a reference to a county court judge; and

(b) the reference in subsection (2).'.—[Mr Cohen.]

Clause 17

INTERPRETATION

Miss Emma Nicholson: I beg to move amendment No. 12, in page 11, line 44, after 'computer', insert

'or by any other means.'

I have suggested to my hon. and learned Friend the Minister outside the Chamber that as clause 3 creates the offence of the unauthorised modification of computer material, clauses 3(6) and 17(6) may create a loophole that my hon. and learned Friend and my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside may care to consider.

The question is of the back-up of computer data, normally in a secure location separate from the main system. I wonder whether the fact that the material is held at a separate location, away from the main computer, may mean that it will not be covered by the legislation—so that if someone physically attacks the back-up data, by exposing it to magnetism, for example, that action will not constitute an offence.

Mr. Colvin: My hon. Friend has explained that the amendment's purpose is to bring damage to computer data storage media that are not held in any computer, and achieved other than under normal conditions of operation, within the meaning of the clause 3 offence. My hon. Friend is right in thinking that the offence does not extend to such conduct, but I do not believe that it should.

I know what my hon. Friend has in mind and appreciate how damage could occur and that the consequences of such behaviour could be serious—particularly if a data storage medium was exposed to a magnet or if someone scraped his fingernails across a floppy disk, which could seriously inconvenience the data user. If the original material had not been backed up, the loss would be doubly serious. However, I do not accept that such conduct, remote as it would be from the computer itself, threatens the integrity of the computer in the same way as the conduct that is the subject of clause 3. Such an activity is more akin to criminal damage. Given my response, I hope that my hon. Friend is persuaded not to pursue her amendment.

Miss Emma Nicholson: In view of my hon. Friend's remarks, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Miss Emma Nicholson: I beg to move amendment No. 19, in page 12, line 11, after 'program,' add—

'(11) Reference to evidence obtained from the contents of a computer, in this Act, shall be admissible as evidence, albeit that the computer has been the subject of unauthorised access.'.

This amendment raises a new point, centring on the admissibility of evidence. Some computers have a means of policing themselves to the extent that they can produce logs of unauthorised activities. However, if such logs are produced as crucial evidence in criminal proceedings, there could be problems, because section 69(1) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 requires the production of a certificate stating, among other things,

"that there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the statement"— for that, read computer log,

"is inaccurate because of improper use of the computer."

It may be argued that because the computer has been accessed by an unauthorised use, that renders evidence produced by the computer tainted. Under the Bill, it will be for the prosecution to show reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence produced has not been affected by the unauthorised access to the computer. There could be all kinds of evidential problems in that respect, so I commend amendment No. 19, which would make such evidence gained admissible in court.

Mr. Colvin: The effect of amendment No. 19 is to provide that even though there may have been unauthorised access, a computer-generated record should be admissible as evidence. In view of my earlier explanation about PACE I do not believe that that is necessary or desirable. The fact that unauthorised access has occurred would not render inadmissible any evidence produced by an affected computer. It would be up to the prosecution to show, if necessary, that access did not materially affect the evidence.

There seem to be some misconceptions about the operation of the PACE provision. Computer printouts used in computer misuse cases would usually be provided to show the internal state of a computer and how it was interfered with. That evidence would support any oral testimony given by the person responsible for running and monitoring the computer. In such cases, it would not fall within section 69 of PACE. However, if the printouts were used as direct evidence, they would fall within section 69 of PACE. That is right, as it provides the safeguard that if computer records alone are relied upon, they are reliable.

We should bear it in mind that computers are not predictable or wholly reliable. In criminal cases a person's liberty is at stake. In most cases computer-generated evidence would probably be only a small element in the case provided by the prosecution. Evidence is likely to come from a number of sources and could include the results of monitoring equipment with expert testimony from a licensed telecommunications operator, as well as material evidence such as notebooks.

No amendment covering this subject should be dealt with in the relatively narrow context of such offences. If any amendment to the Police and Criminal Evidence Act is justified it should apply to the criminal law as a whole, and should be considered in the context of the 1984 Act. On that basis, I hope that I have persuaded my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West to withdraw her amendment.

1.15 pm

Miss Emma Nicholson: I hope that the complexity of these matters, has become clear to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis), who earlier laughingly complained that we would have to spend an hour and a half discussing the Bill—that was only halfway through the morning. He complained that he had to listen to me and I apologised. The complexity of the matter shows that we need considerably longer than the short time allowed for debate this morning.

Mr. Terry Davis: It is always a pleasure to listen to the hon. Lady's arguments, and Opposition Members have paid close attention to her arguments in Committee and on Report. I was not seeking to inhibit or constrain the hon. Lady from advancing arguments for subsequent amendments. I stayed to listen to them. I was suggesting that her interventions in the speech of the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) were perhaps unnecessary and that we could have had even longer to listen to her arguments for these important and interesting amendments, had she not helped to waste time—in the interests of the Government Whips and the Privy Council—which also put in jeopardy other meritorious Bills on the Order Paper.

Miss Nicholson: I accept gracefully the hon. Gentleman's comments. It is difficult to bring a Bill of such complexity to the House as a private Member's Bill.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on his outstandingly good work. For once, I am persuaded to withdraw my amendment. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Order for Third Reading read.

1.18 pm

Mr. Colvin: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

This is a particularly important measure and I am pleased that hon. Members have seen fit to approach it in a critical but welcoming manner. The consultations which

I have had with interested parties have convinced me that there is a great deal of misuse of computers and computer systems, although it is not possible to quote any substantiated figure. The increased dependence that modern society places on information technology suggests that misuse is destined to become more widespread in the future.

You may have read the press reports on Wednesday, Mr. Deputy Speaker, about a hacker who is alleged to have gained access to the computer of several academic institutions. His actions caused damage amounting to £25,000. I cannot comment on that case; it is sub judice. However, I draw attention to a case in the United States —that of Mr. Robert Morris. In 1988, he released what became known as the Internet worm. That program infiltrated and paralysed several thousand computers in the United States. It filled then with useless data and consequently overloaded them. Mr. Morris is due to be sentenced shortly, having been convicted of "intentionally and without authorisation gaining access to federal computers, preventing the authorised use of the machines and causing a loss of at least $1,000."

The loss that he caused was very much greater than that. The maximum penalty that he faces in the United States is five years in prison and a fine of $250,000. That is not dissimilar to the penalties that he would face if he had been convicted under the Bill. Those are just two examples of the havoc that hackers can cause.

I was extremely fortunate during the passage of the Bill to have the benefit of an excellent report published by the Law Commission. The Bill is based on that report. I diverge from the commission's recommendations in only minor respects, simply to reflect the further discussion that the report stimulated. The Bill's underlying policy remains very much in line with the commission's recommendations. That is a great compliment to the enormous amount of work that was done by the commission, under the guidance of Mr. Richard Buxton, QC, in producing its report and to the fact that it was able to reflect accurately the needs of computer users.

The Bill was considered in Standing Committee for three weeks. During that time the members of the Committee had the opportunity to deliberate on a wide range of issues. Without the process, the Bill would not be in such good shape and I should not be so confident as I am now of its ability to withstand close scrutiny in the courts. The courteousness and helpfulness of hon. Members in Committee played no small part in that process.

Legislation alone cannot be the answer to stopping the misuse of computers. It is important that users recognise the need to protect their systems against intrusion. During the relatively short period—about four months—that I have been interested in the subject since I was successful in the ballot for private Members' Bills, I have attended 12 conferences and seminars on computers and computer systems. It is significant that 10 out of the 12 concentrated on computer security. The industry takes the problem very much to heart. Proceedings on the Bill have to some extent focused attention on the problem. I am pleased that the Department of Trade and Industry is running a three-year awareness campaign to bring home that point. Practical security and this legislation complement each other admirably.

I take this opportunity to thank all those who have helped the Bill to reach its current stage of preparedness, including the representatives of the many organisations, companies and individuals outside the House who have helped me to iron out any deficiencies prior to and after the Bill's introduction. In particular, I thank the representatives of the Confederation of British Industry and the CBI computer users group, and also the small group of legal and technical experts who gave me a great deal of advice and help during the various stages of the Bill's progress through the House.

The House has taken the opportunity to signal the fact that computer misuse runs contrary to the public interest. I feel satisfied that we now have an appropriate vehicle with which actively to discourage that behaviour and to prosecute those who attempt to defy the law.

Mr. Cohen: I congratulate the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin), who has done a good job with his Bill. He has been meticulous in answering the points raised at various stages, including today. The Bill makes hacking a crime and makes it clear that it is not an acceptable practice, a view shared across the House. The point about it being remote burglary is also relevant.

However, it contains flaws, which I tried to make clear during our debates on the Bill. There is a danger that it will lead to criminal law being brought to bear in consumer electronics, just because of the presence of computer-like functions. That could lead to some farcical prosecutions, although I hope that it does not.

The Bill has extended penalties more than the Law Commission originally proposed. Possible computer misuse by the security services was an issue that I raised today and about which I am still concerned. The matter of the public interest defence not having proper weight was also discussed, and that could bring problems in future. Another flaw is that computer owners have not had a duty placed on them or been encouraged to ensure that they have proper security measures. The advice of the Data Protection Registrar has not been fully followed in relation to that.

The two biggest flaws are that the Bill does not define or give guidance about what a computer is. It is left to the police and the judiciary to interpret, which could lead to funny decisions. The search-and-seizure power could also be abused. I appreciate that that at least has been dealt with today in a spirit of compromise by the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside, who accepted the amendment which provided that only a circuit judge can authorise such warrants, and I am pleased about that.

There are some flaws but, in all, I think that the hon. Gentleman has done well. The flaws mean that the House will have to improve the measure at some time, but we shall first have to see how it works. I suspect that it will not be the last legislation on computers. I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on the Bill.

Mr. Ian Bruce: I wish to emphasise the importance of the legislation and thank those who have been particularly active on it. When I was first approached by various companies and the Telecommunications Managers Association, for which I work on parliamentary matters, I was surprised that people put such emphasis on the problems of hacking and other computer misuse.

[Mr. Ian Bruce]

My hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) had previously had no experience of computers, but he has become a computer misuse expert within a short period. It is wonderful to see how he has taken a complicated subject and understood it so well. In Committee that understanding was passed back in such a way that even those of us involved in the computer industry were able to understand it better. He is to be congratulated on the work that he has done.

Two other people stand out in our consideration of the Bill. First, my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) was instrumental in emphasising to the House just how important the subject of computer misuse has become. Secondly, I appreciate that, when the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) is praised by deepest Dorset, it may damage his street credibility, but these are heartfelt and sincere remarks.

My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West has constantly asked whether the Bill is tough enough to be effective and to catch those who must be caught by the legislation, whereas the hon. Member for Leyton has asked whether it will catch too many people, and those whom it is not supposed to catch. Those two conflicting views constantly being put in Committee led to us considering the Bill carefully. It is much better for those two conflicting forces. Those hon. Members may not appreciate the extent of their influence on the Department's recommendations or on my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside.

When considering civil liberties—I appreciate that the hon. Member for Leyton is keen on that issue—we must protect the civil liberties of the computer user. Someone's confidential data and information kept on a computer should not be accessed by hackers, who use it mischieviously. That is an important civil rights issue.

The Bill is good and goes as far as we should without testing how it acts in practice. I commend it to the House.

1.31 pm

Mr. Terry Davis: The hon. Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) is right to say that in the Bill we have tried to balance the civil rights of people to enjoy privacy of information and communications and those of people to ensure that they are not harassed and that the Bill or similar powers are not abused. Hon. Members have been conscious of the need to strike a balance. Whether we struck the right balance will be for others to decide later.

I entirely agree with the hon. Gentleman's description of our objectives. There have been differences between, on the one extreme, the hon. Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) and, on the other, my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) but there has been much unanimity. Hon. Members have tried to strike that balance.

I associate myself with the congratulations already expressed to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin), not only on his initiative in introducing the Bill but on his clear and impressive grasp of the technical issues involved. I have learnt much from listening to him.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside for a different reason. The Bill will become an Act of Parliament. He deserves to bring it to that stage of success because of how he conducted it in Committee. He was courteous and listened to both extremes. If he was unable to answer objections or to carry hon. Members with him he was willing to compromise to achieve a Bill that is acceptable to as many people as possible. He deserves to be congratulated on how he conducted the Bill. Some other hon. Members could learn from his example; I have learnt much from him.

1.33 pm

Mr. Wood: I, too, should like to congratulate my hon. Friends the Members for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) and for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson). The Bill is important to the computer industry and to large and small computer users. It is all very well saying that many of the hackers have been students who were just having fun on computer systems—— [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Conversations are very distracting. I hope that the hon. Member will be allowed to continue his speech uninterrupted.

Mr. Wood: Students may have had their fun at times, but they have caused enormous costs for major computer system providers. That fun must stop, and the legislation will help to stop it.

Malicious abuse of computer systems has caused major problems and enormous costs for big computer users. We have not had a system of law capable of satisfactorily dealing with these matters. This legislation will be a major step forward in helping to catch some of the wrongdoers. There will inevitably need to be developments in legislation to cover computer use.

1.35 pm

Miss Emma Nicholson: When my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) talked about the input into the debate of various hon. Members, it almost sounded as though we were having a classic debate between the shire counties and inner-city areas. The movement among Conservative Members has come from Dorset, Devon, Hampshire and other shire counties and among Opposition Members from city areas, led by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

I pay a warm tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) for his clarity of thought. He recognised that new criminals were still operating within the old framework of anti-social activity and that rapid action and new legislation were required to encompass their wickedness. I have immensely enjoyed working with my hon. Friend on the Bill. All of those who have backed his efforts and the Bill have found it a valuable, enjoyable experience. It has been a pleasure to watch my hon. Friend forge ahead and to put to the House and Committee the crucial points that needed to be covered.

I should like to leave my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside and the other sponsors with the thought that Shakespeare, among his many other qualities, must have been computer-literate. He talked about the worm in the bud and said that if the worm was not detected and stopped, it would destroy the rose. The Bill's effectiveness will rest on detecting the worm. Without the ability either to prise apart the petals through powers of search or to listen in through monitoring, the police will have a tough job. Shakespeare was computer-literate too, and that is why we may have to look again at our friend the worm.

1.37 pm

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I congratulate the Bill's sponsors and commend the Bill to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read the Third time, and passed.

Rights of Way Bill

As amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

Order for Third Reading read.—[Queen's Consent and Prince of Wales's Consent signified].

1.38 pm

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

No part of rural life has been more marked by dissension and by the setting up of barriers than the law on footpaths. I am proud that for, I think, the first time in parliamentary history we have reached Third Reading having achieved broad agreement on a difficult issue.

I pay tribute to all members of the Committee—not just Conservative but Labour Members who have taken a close interest in the Bill, especially the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), who is a well-known authority on footpaths and who has played a prominent part in persuading his colleagues of the Bill's merits. They may not have needed persuading, as the Ramblers Association is very much in favour of the Bill and would be bitterly disappointed, as would the millions of walkers, if the Bill was not to proceed to its final stage today. I hope that we can have a debate—but not too long a debate—and that millions of walkers and members of the Ramblers Association, who have followed the progress of the Bill so closely, will be rewarded by seeing what is a compromise, but a strong compromise, and a worthwhile Bill complete its Commons stages today and proceed to the House of Lords.

I thank not only hon. Members of all parties who have seen the Bill through to Third Reading, but members of the working party from the Ramblers Association and from the National Farmers Union, officials from the Department of the Environment and from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and my hon. Friend the Member for Saffron Walden (Mr. Haslehurst) who chaired the statutory working party on rights of way. I thank them for spending literally hundreds of man hours on producing a complex Bill in a highly complex area of statute. They have achieved a carefully considered Bill. I and my hon. Friend the Minister had to prove no fewer than 43 amendments in Committee so that lawyers in the Department of the Environment and in the Department of Transport could be satisfied that the Bill was fit to proceed to statute.

Hon. Members may recall that, on Second Reading, I referred to the benefits of the Bill and to the fact that it will help everyone with an interest in the footpath network. Many are involved, whether hard-pressed farmers, local authorities charged with safeguarding the public rights of passage or the millions of people who use footpaths, bridleways and other minor highways for healthy relaxing exercise and to savour the great beauty of our countryside.

Put simply, the Bill rewrites the unsatisfactory and largely unenforceable provisions on ploughing and rights of way in sections 134 and 135 of the Highways Act 1980. For the farmer, it replaces the limited "right to plough" across fields, footpaths or bridleways with a new wider right to "disturb the surface of the path or way" as necessary. Such disturbance could take place at any stage of cultivation. The right will apply regardless of the type of machinery used, so for the first time it gives the farmer clear statutory authority to disturb paths when carrying out the full range of essential operations.

I have taken great care to consult the farming community on the Bill. I know that it has not been an easy time for farmers, although I hope that, with the recent success of the green pound negotiations, things will ease up for them. I am pleased to say that the National Farmers Union, the Country Landowners Association and the local Lincolnshire National Farmers Union all support the Bill. As I represent an agricultural constituency, and as I accept the strong power of the NFU in this place, it would have been unwise to proceed with a Bill that did not have the support of the farming community.

The Bill will also introduce a new section 135 to the Highways Act 1980. It provides for consent to be given to the disturbance of paths in the course of any other "excavation or engineering operation" which is not directly related to the cultivation of a particular crop, such as the unavoidable disturbance to paths which occurs when installing or renewing field drains. The path or way can be diverted temporarily for up to three months where necessary.

Of course, the Bill provides a balance. There is a balance on the other side, which is why the Bill is supported by the Ramblers Association. The largesse towards the farming community is matched by a stricter duty on farmers to restore quickly paths that have been disturbed to such a condition that they are easy to use, by showing the line of the path on the ground. That duty is the key to the Bill.

Where the disturbance is the first in a cycle of cultivation—if I refer to this as the ploughing period, hon. Members will know what I mean, although with modern farming methods a plough as such may not be used—under the Bill that must be done within 14 days. For any subsequent operations, a path must be restored and marked within 24 hours. Either period can be extended by the authority—where it is justified—for up to 28 days. That will overcome what has proved to be a major problem for walkers and riders, and will help to reduce accidental trespass. Users will know what line to take across what can sometimes be, with today's larger fields, an extensive and featureless tract of land. In recent years that has become the major problem for ramblers and walkers, much more so than impenetrable obstacles. It is the sight of an enormous field of growing wheat, with no clear line of path, which is a major deterrent to the possibly millions of people who wish to use and enjoy our countryside.

The Bill will deal specifically with the related problem of paths that are difficult to use because of crops growing on them or encroaching from the sides. That, too, is a major deterrent for anyone wishing to use our path network and one that the authorities can deal with only when the crop has developed to the stage of physically obstructing the path, long after most users have been deterred. New section 137A will place the occupier under a clear duty to keep all rights of way and other unsurfaced highways apparent on the ground and clear of any crops that would make the path inconvenient to use. The crops in question are mainly arable.

Oilseed rape, the planting of which is increasing in our countryside, is a particular problem. It stands out as a vivid shade of yellow. Some people do not like it, although personally I like large splashes of colour. I do not know what Monet would make of it as I do not suppose that oilseed rape was as common in the fields of France then as it is now. The problem is that oilseed rape does not stay yellow and beautiful for long. It is a major deterrent to walkers and riders who wish to use the countryside. It grows vigorously to become a dense, utterly impenetrable jungle, reminiscent more of the tropical rain forests than of the British countryside.

Pushing through acres of wet, knee-high corn is a daunting and unrewarding exercise. I hope that under the Bill those problems will no longer have to be endured.

People will ask why people are deterred by growing corn. There is a myth that most walkers in the countryside have stout boots, wear beards, are members of the Ramblers Association, are equipped with up-to-date Ordnance Survey maps and know their exact rights and where they are going. However, Countryside Commission surveys show that most people who walk in the countryside are not so equipped, use paths only occasionally, and are often deterred by the sight of a large field of rape or corn with no apparent line on the ground.

The duty to keep paths clear of crops does not, however, apply to grass, which is defined in the Bill as "a variety or mixture commonly used for pasture, silage or haymaking".

No one could object to walking over ordinary pasture land or through a pleasant hay meadow. I remember from my youth that I did not object to walking through long grass with my then girlfriend. The duty to enforce the new requirements rests with the local highway authorities. Proceedings can also be brought by the district council for the area, or the local parish or community council.

Hon. Members will appreciate the fact that prosecution by members of the public is a sensitive subject in the farming community. We have therefore been careful to carry forward the restrictions that exist under the 1980 Act. Members of the public will not be able to bring a prosecution against a farmer for failing to restore a disturbed surface or for the illegal disturbance of a surface—the direct successor to ploughing offences under existing legislation, in which prosecutions are similarly restricted. That is a major concession that the members of the working party and I made to the farming community in trying to hammer out a compromise, and I hope that the farming community will recognise it as such.

The Bill also removes a difficulty faced by authorities in bringing prosecutions. It provides that the occupier of the land will be clearly held responsible for the disturbance of a footpath or bridleway regardless of who carried out the work on his behalf and of any crops growing on it. Nor will authorities have to establish what kind of machinery has been used to disturb the surface. The major problem that local authorities have faced has been in identifying the person responsible, and the removal of that difficulty should make it much easier for local authorities to enforce the law. The fact that a surface remains disturbed after the time by which it should have been restored will be sufficient.

Even so, prosecutions are inevitably slow and time-consuming, and authorities are likely to consider them only as a last resort. If there is a key provision in the Bill, it is schedule 12A, to be inserted in the 1980 Act. That gives highway authorities—or district councils if acting on their behalf—simple direct powers to enter the land and carry out the work wherever an offence has been committed.

The power to act in default will be a major boon to local authorities. I hope that it will clear up the muddle in footpath law and convince authorities that they cannot go back to those who put them in charge of footpath law and say, "I am sorry. It is all too complicated. We do not have the time to bring prosecutions." If there has been a clear violation of the law—if a path is marked on a map and members of the public want to use it and the line of that path is not apparent because crops have been allowed to grow on it—local authorities will be able to act in default. They will not have to go through the time-wasting procedure of bringing prosecutions through the courts.

In addition to the requirement to mark the line of the path on the ground, that schedule is the key provision of the Bill and accounts for much of its benefit to ramblers. The provision will ensure that the new legislation is observed as a matter of course by the whole farming community. The deterrent to the farmer will be not that he may end up in court and be fined after months or even years but that the local authority will simply be able to do the work for him. Then, of course, the local authority will charge the farmer for the work.

With the stricter duties on farmers and the stronger powers given to local authorities, it is desirable to define the exact width of the right of way, and that we have done. Hon. Members may be surprised to learn that there is no general statutory width for the various types of right of way. Some paths have a legally recorded width. The width might be included in the description of the path given in the statement that accompanies the definitive map, or it might be referred to in some other historic document, and where that is the case that width will apply; it will not be affected by the Bill.

In general, however, no such widths are recorded and it has been necessary to devise figures for the width of various classes of rights of way. Quite what those widths should be was the subject of long debate in the working party. The figures chosen, which are based on advice from the County Surveyors Society, demonstrate the consensus that emerged within the working party. Such consensus has never been achieved before; it has certainly never been translated into statute. That is why Parliament has allowed the Bill to proceed as far as it has.

In effect, two figures are given, a minimum width and a maximum width, and those figures are set out in new schedule 12A. The minimum width is the minimum that the farmer would have to work to if he was to avoid running into trouble with the authorities. That is the figure that would be taken into account in any prosecution. For a cross-field footpath, the minimum is 1 m or about 3 ft 3 in. For a bridleway it is 2 m or about 6 ft 6 in. Where a footpath or bridleway is on the edge of a field, those figures are increased to 1·5 m and 2 m respectively, and for any other type of highway the minimum figure is 3 m or about 10 ft.

The maximum width is simply the maximum to which the authority may work when carrying out work in default of the occupier. That figure is 1·8 m for a footpath—roughly 4 ft 6 in. For a bridleway it is 3 m, or 10 ft, and it is 5 m, or 16 ft, for any other type of highway.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I want to raise a point that is important for the horse world. If the bridleway was wider than the maximum width that my hon. Friend has just described, who would pay for the extra width—or is that a matter that we need not discuss now?

Mr. Leigh: I do not believe that it arises in the Bill. We have set minimum and maximum widths, but we must accept that those are loose definitions and broad guides. I have taken particular care to reassure the British Horse Society, of which my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) is such a distinguished member, on that matter.

I am a keen rider and I am sure that the horse world has concluded that, although it would have liked a greater width for bridleways, the Bill provides a fair compromise. With regard to horses, we must remember that the width of the path as it runs through the middle of the field is not the most important point, as I have stressed before. When one is riding a horse, the difficult part of the path is that which runs close to a hedge or a wire. In the Bill we specifically set a wider width beside a hedge or wire. I can reassure my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North about this point, which he has raised before. When we are considering a footpath that runs across the middle of a field, if for some reason the horse has to veer to the side of the path, that should not affect matters.

The Committee dealt with those points of detail very carefully and I do not believe that I need to labour them now. We passed 43 amendments in Committee designed to make the law clearer and to clear up any ambiguities. The amendments ensured that the Bill could not be seen to apply to major carriageways. There may be some problems about that, but I believe that the farmers and local authorities now have a sporting chance to know exactly what is a field path and a bridleway and also know their duties in that regard. The other major amendment that we made in Committee brought the penalties under this Bill into line with other Home Office penalties.

The Bill is a comprehensive package of measures which balances a range of conflicting interest. As such, I commend it to the House.

1.57 pm

Mr. Terry Davis (Birmingham, Hodge Hill): On the Third Reading of the Computer Misuse Bill the point was made that the interests of different people had to be balanced. This debate is similar in that we must balance the interests of people who, like myself, enjoy walking in the countryside—something that I try to do every weekend—and the interests of the group described loosely by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) as the Ramblers Association.

Members of the Ramblers Association do excellent work on behalf of their members and other people such as I. However, we must also consider people who, like a large number of my constituents, live in urban constituencies and who visit the countryside at weekends for recreational purposes. The Bill is also in their interests.

I do not wish to digress too far. The hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle referred to the problem of oilseed rape which makes it difficult to walk along rights of way. However, there are also health problems from rape, and my hon. Friend the Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) could describe them in some detail. It has become clear in recent months that many people have an allergy to rape. That allergy causes a great deal of ill health in the summer months and the problem has only recently been attributed to that crop. But there are the interests of farmers. I speak with some knowledge about those interests—I do not wish to detain the House for long, however—because all my brothers-in-law are farmers. They seek every opportunity to impress on me their interests and, as they see it, the damage done to their crops by walkers.

As the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle has fairly said, however, the Bill is supported by many Labour Members. The hon. Gentleman mentioned my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), and another sponsor is my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Small Health (Mr. Howell). I know that my right hon. Friend is keen that the Bill should pass through the House this afternoon and become an Act.

The only risk to the Bill making progress this afternoon —I say this with some regret—has been posed by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle. In making a silly, provocative and bogus point of order two or three hours ago, he invited Mr. Deputy Speaker to allow points of order to be raised by other hon. Members—they would have been entirely out of order—on the results of local elections, on the poll tax and on other partisan political matters. That was unfortunate. I regret also that the hon. Gentleman participated in what I regard as filibustering during the consideration of the Computer Misuse Bill. In doing so, he put at risk this important Bill.

If my hon. Friends and I wished to speak for a long time on the Bill's Third Reading, I am sure that we could do so. If we were petty enough to wish to pay back the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle in his own coin, it would be easy to do so. We shall not do that, however, because too much is at stake. The Bill is in the interests of ramblers and all others who enjoy the countryside at weekends. We must seek to ensure that the Bill's Third Reading is completed this afternoon so that it can become an Act.

I am conscious that if we allow the Bill to continue on its passage, but take a long time to do so, we shall prejudice the chances of the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Bill in which the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) has an interest. I understand that he has come here all the way from Nottingham fresh from the local elections, which we shall not discuss, to seek to get the Bill through the House. I do not want to prejudice that measure in any way and, therefore, I shall curtail my remarks. I regret that the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle engaged in such a high-risk tactic earlier in our proceedings.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I shall be brief, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I apologise for not having been in my place for the first stage of the Third Reading of the Bill, of which I am a sponsor and in which horse riders have a keen interest, as my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) rightly said.

The fact that bridleways will now be required to be kept in place and to be properly maintained will overcome the disappearance of bridleways in recent years because of a lack of proper maintenance. In some cases, they were little used. A bridleway can go out of fashion, as it were, and not be used very much by riders or walkers for a period. When this happens, a bridleway is often lost. Many a farmer has ploughed up a bridleway deliberately, thereby absorbing a public right of way in his farm, and many bridleways have been lost for ever.

I am pleased to speak on behalf of the 3·5 million people who ride horses. They include people on low incomes as well as those on above-average incomes. I am most interested in the low-income group who ride. I have championed their cause all my life. In many instances they have lost the facility of access to the countryside and enjoyment of the countryside where it should not have been lost. The Bill will ensure that that does not happen in the future.

Some bridleways have, to farmers' displeasure, run across the middle of fields. When farmers have had such bridleways ploughed up, they have not been reinstated elsewhere on their land. That cannot be allowed to happen any more, and, as a result of the Bill, it will not. If a bridleway disappears to suit a farmer, it will have to be resited elsewhere. That is of the greatest importance. We cannot afford the loss of any more rights of way in the countryside bearing in mind the fact that an area the size of the Isle of Wight is lost every year to concrete and buildings. That is disgraceful. Our increasing population has fewer and fewer facilities where it can enjoy recreation by walking, angling or riding. That is extremely serious.

I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle will correct me if I am wrong, but I assume that, should a rider be forced to leave a bridleway—perhaps when riders from opposite directions meet—he will not be subject to prosecution. That could occur if both riders were riding fast horses. Provided that the rider kept as close as possible to the bridleway that he had been forced to leave, I assume that there would be no prosecution. Of course, if the rider strayed across the field, he would come under the criminal law of trespass, which is a serious matter. I shall assume that if a rider leaves the bridleway to avoid one or even two riders coming in the opposite direction, there will be no prosecution. Were I to be wrong, I am sure that my hon. Friend would have corrected me by now.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): I could not be present for Second Reading of the Bill, so I am glad today to welcome it and to make a few brief comments before we send it on its way. The Bill attempts to reconcile the conflicts that occur between the different uses and users of the countryside. However, I wish to add a word of caution. We frequently have too great an estimate of the effect of the laws that we pass. It is all very well to define the rights of use of a footpath and the rights of a farmer to divert it for a particular period, but if one is walking along a footpath and, when about to cross a stile, sees a bull in the next field, there is no time to stop and find out whether the bull is safe, regardless of the farmer's assurance that it is. If the bull is unsafe, there is no time to start a prosecution.

Like the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis), I spend most Sundays and holidays walking either in the countryside or in the mountains. When a footpath is diverted, most walkers are prepared to take a route round a field, rather than through it. However, the cause of ramblers is not helped by the minority who regard anyone prepared to walk round the field as—to use their phrase—a forelock toucher. They regard rambling as a perpetual opportunity to relive the mass trespass on Kinder Scout in the last century.

All who use the countryside are anxious to ensure that the rights of other users are respected. However—this touches upon the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway)—the use of a footpath in one way might make it impossible for it to be used in other ways. There are many examples of that in my constituency. For example, the frequent use of a footpath by horses has made it unusable by human beings. However much the legislation defines footpaths and who is entitled to use them and when, it does not get round the problem that there are both selfish and unselfish uses. Users must always remember that others also wish to use the footpath.

As was pointed out on Second Reading, bike scrambling is an increasingly popular hobby, especially in the mountains. Last summer, I spent some time on the northern lakes and fells. Perhaps I may warn you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I am not about to use unparliamentary language when I refer to the fells across which I walked as Great Cockup—for that is their name. Lower down the fells was a group of mountain bike scramblers. Because of the remoteness of the area, and because they stuck to a defined route—having deliberately picked an area where they knew not many people were around—the noise and colour of that biking procession added a great deal to the day. However, I am equally sure that we have all seen examples—which are particularly common on the ridgeways—where the use of scrambling bikes on a well-used path detracts from everyone's enjoyment.

I conclude by saying to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) that I greatly welcome the Bill, which I believe will do much good—but we should be wary of ascribing to it the change in motives and in patterns of thinking that will be necessary if it is fully to work.

2.9 pm

The Minister for Industry (Mr. Douglas Hogg): My hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) is to be congratulated on the way in which he has conducted the progress of the Bill. It has the Government's support, and I commend it to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Bill

Not amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Amendments not moved.

Order for Third Reading read.

2.10 pm

Mr. Martin M. Brandon-Bravo (Nottingham, South): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

I am grateful for the opportunity, in the closing minutes of today's business, to speak to the Third Reading of my Bill and to explain briefly its broad purposes. As you know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Bill received an unopposed Second Reading. As a private Member, I am greatly honoured to be able to present a Bill to the House. It is not an honour that many right hon. or hon. Members have an opportunity to enjoy.

I should like to record also my gratitude to all those who have assisted the passage of the Bill. As it is in some respects a technical measure, I pay tribute to the Ministry of Transport officials who assisted me with the queries that arose, and with the amendments that were tabled. I thank also the organisations that either wrote or came to the House to express their concerns and to seek reassurances. They included the Ramblers Association, the British Horse Society, the National Farmers Union, the Freight Transport Association, and the Automobile Association. They have all contributed to the Bill.

I express sincere thanks for the contribution made by the Opposition, particularly by the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), who led the Opposition in Committee.

Given that mine is such a modest Bill, you may be surprised to learn, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I received the assistance of no fewer than three Ministers—my hon. Friends the Members for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin), who assisted me in Committee; for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins), who helped me with the Report stage; and, lo and behold, my distinguished, hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), who assists me today. That truly is an honour three times expressed.

The Bill is a modest measure, but it promises worthwhile improvements to the law. As it had a formal Second Reading, I shall briefly set out what it seeks to do. It would bring about a reformed national code—although it excludes Northern Ireland—for temporary regulations dealing with notices and orders.

When the Bill was first published, my colleagues were surprised that we did not have a national uniform code, and that there were different rules for London and for the rest of the country. The Bill seeks to rationalise some of the requirements for longer-term works, and it places upon local authorities—which were widely consulted—the duty to have proper statutory regard to alternatives when orders are laid down.

The Bill deals with two forms of temporary notice: a short notice for five days, which is not renewable and is most helpful to local authorities, and a limit of 21 days for all other notices. The 21-day notice can be renewed in certain circumstances.

The main aim of the Bill is to rationalise orders. Until now, they have been applicable for three months and have been renewable almost ad lib. In my constituency, in the past six years there have been two major works, and at present there is one project which is estimated to last for some three years. Under the old rules the orders for that project would have had to be renewed every three months. That is the kind of bureaucracy that serves no one.

The 18-months rule will almost certainly simplify and reduce much of the bureaucracy. Colleagues may be interested to know that, in an average year, some 15,000 temporary orders are issued.

The Bill seeks to tidy up an extraordinary anomaly which means that, although a person who commits a traffic offence may have his licence endorsed or be disqualified from driving, if the offence was committed in a coned-off area on the motorway or somewhere where a temporary order applied, those constraints of the law would not apply.

The road user stands to gain from the presence of a more adaptable and comprehensive measure to regulate traffic where necessary. I believe that the relaxation of the period for temporary orders will be widely welcomed, as it is a useful step towards deregulation. However, some hon. Members have expressed anxieties. We had a truncated Report stage last week. On procedural grounds rather than because of a Division, the Bill failed to complete its Report stage but, happily, it has returned to the House this morning.

I am grateful to see the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on the Opposition Front Bench, as she was disappointed that consideration of the Bill was not completed last Friday, and no doubt she is happy to be present today to greet it with acclamation. Would that other private Members' Bills which run into procedural problems were given an opportunity to get on with the job seven days later.

Anxieties about the Bill have been brought to my attention by ramblers and horse riders. It was interesting to listen to the debate on the Rights of Way Bill and to hear my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh), legally define footpaths and bridle paths—if I heard him correctly. If that is so, the anxieties of the Ramblers Association and the British Horse Society are valid. We could have dealt with the matter last week; we obtained the assurances on Thursday last. Since last Friday, we have obtained them in writing. Sadly, they cannot be written into the record, but I am sure that the other place will be satisfied with the assurances that have been given.

I have discussed the matter with the Department of Transport and with the Minister for Roads and Traffic. He wrote, at my suggestion, to the Ramblers Association expressing his understanding of its concerns. In his letter of 30 April, he said that he was content that my Bill should be amended

"so that temporary orders affecting traffic other than motor vehicles on a footpath, bridleway, cycle track or byway would have a more limited duration."

He suggested that the limit on those highways should be six months, whereas my Bill says that the period should be 18 months.

The Minister told the Ramblers Association—I understand that the same assurance has been given to the British Horse Society—that when the Bill is enacted

"appropriate guidance might be issued by the Department to highway authorities about the exercise of their powers".

The guidelines

"would aim to emphasise the statutory duties which already oblige them to protect rights of way and minimise obstruction."

The Ramblers Association acknowledged the Minister's letter the following day and confirmed that it was prepared to accept the proposal that temporary orders should last for six months. We granted that concession to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) before the untimely break in the proceedings last week. The Ramblers Association and the British Horse Society are now satisfied.

It is a modest Bill. I said last week that, if one is not among the first seven successful in the ballot for private Members' Bills, the last thing that one wants to do is promote a Bill that is so contentious that it will never be given a Second Reading. If, by some extraordinary mischance, it were given a Second Reading, it would undoubtedly be talked out and never pass Committee. I am delighted to have played a small part in the legislative process. I thank my hon. Friends who have supported me. I hope that the House will give the Bill its Third Reading and pass it. Nevertheless, before it is given a Third Reading, I hope that the Minister will say something about it.

The Minister for Industry (Mr. Douglas Hogg): My hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) is to be congratulated on bringing his Bill successfully to this point. I know that he had a few procedural difficulties last Friday, but he has obviously overcome them with great skill. His elegant and persuasive description of the Bill's contents taught us a great deal.

The Bill is a welcome measure that introduces a uniform code of powers for all authorities in Great Britain in connection with temporary traffic restrictions.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): Will my hon. and learned Friend the Minister give way?

Mr. Hogg: If I must.

Mr. Greenway: I know that my hon. and learned Friend is absolutely packed with material, but I wonder whether he is aware of the objections of the British Horse Society to the former proposals in the Bill to lump together bridleways and highways, and the fact that my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) has agreed to separate them. Will the Government be happy with that, as the horse world certainly is?

Mr. Hogg: The Government are extremely happy with that. I have no doubt that the reason why the Government were prepared to welcome the modest change described by my hon. Friend owed a substantial amount to the advocacy of my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway). I thought for one nasty moment, that he was going to ask me what the content of clause 1 was. That is why I was so churlish. But on the contrary, he had only help in his mind and if he wants to intervene again, I am sure that I can give way. I had better return to my script, because I certainly cannot operate without it on such a Bill.

The Bill will enhance the ability of local authorities to respond speedily and effectively. Among its main concerns are the protection of public safety and the management of traffic for temporary periods to avoid damage or congestion.

Temporary restrictions are only one end of the traffic management scale—at the other end are traffic jams. Authorities are continually initiating new measures to help make the best use of existing road space and to try to resolve conflicts between competing demands of motorists and pedestrians—private and public transport, passenger and goods traffic. It is a balancing act, but the authorities have a great deal of expertise. We encourage them to take local needs more carefully into account. Parliament has laid down statutory requirements to be met. There are prescribed procedures to follow, but we must also give them freedom and flexibility to act in response to local conditions. The Bill will help to do that. It will leave local authorities better placed to cope with the needs and demands of traffic.

I welcome the Bill, and hope that it will make a swift passage through its remaining stages and on to the statute book. Clearly, it would not be right for me to conclude my brief contribution without once again thanking my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South for the persuasive and eloquent way in which he has carried through the Bill, and for the thought and learning that he has put into it. I commend it to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Indecent Displays Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

2.29 pm

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We are near the end of the day, but there has been no sign of the Secretary of State for the Environment. Have you any news about whether he will make a statement on yesterday's elections——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I have received no such request. The hon. Gentleman knows that the presence of a Minister is not a matter for me.

Mr. David Sumberg (Bury, South): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

This is a modest measure, with a modest amount of time for me to explain it to the House.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Friday next.

Private Members' Bills

ELIMINATION OF POVERTY IN RETIREMENT BILL

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I beg to move——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken.

Mr. Corbyn: I did not hear "Object".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I hear "Object" or not?

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If hon. Members are objecting, perhaps they will do so sufficiently loudly for the Chair and the House to be aware of it. Objection taken. Second Reading what day?

Mr. Corbyn: May I be clear? Did the hon. Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) object? I heard no objection when I rose to move the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I clearly heard "Object". The House will have heard the objection that was made.

Mr. Corbyn: Will you confirm that the hon. Member for Dorset, North——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not for the Chair to identify hon. Members——

Mr. Corbyn rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must not be on his feet when I am. He has raised this point on previous occasions and has received the same guidance from the Chair. It is not for the Chair to identify the individual or individuals who register objections. We are in exactly the same position as when the Chair collects the voices on putting the question on any matter. Second Reading what day?

Second Reading deferred till Friday 6 July.

Mr. Corbyn: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. May I seek your guidance? As I am sure you are aware, the Bill has been before the House many times. It has consistently been frustrated by a conspiracy between the Whips Office and the Trappist tendency of the lower echelons of the Whips Office. How can the Bill be debated so that those who object to it by muttering between their teeth can say why the elimination of poverty among pensioners is not an important matter? I look to you to find some way of debating the Bill in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not my responsibility. Bills are dealt with according to the Standing Orders and procedures of the House. The hon. Gentleman's Bill is being dealt with in that manner, as well he knows.

FUEL AND ENERGY PROVISION BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 6 July.

CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS (PROTECTION FROM TOBACCO) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not moved.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE HOSPITALS (OPTING OUT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Corbyn: With the permission of my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), I beg to move.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second Reading what day? No day named.

GREYHOUND BETTING LEVY BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Second Reading [16 February].

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not moved.

FOOTBALL SPECTATORS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not moved.

BRITISH RACING COMMISSION BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not moved.

LOCAL AUTHORITY PLAYING FIELDS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 6 July.

MARRIAGE (REGISTRATION OF BUILDINGS) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Charles Wardle (Bexhill and Battle): With the consent of my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden), I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read a Second time and committed to a Standing Committee, pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can we expect a statement on yesterday's local elections? In Ealing, we have had a change of control to Conservative from Labour——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I thought that I had made it clear to the hon. Member that I am not prepared to tolerate what seems to be close to an abuse of the House.

Herstmonceux Castle (Sale)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

2.35 pm

Mr. Charles Wardle (Bexhill and Battle): During 1986, I raised in the House several times the subject of Herstmonceux castle—in questions to my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Education and Science, in a debate on tourism and in an Adjournment debate on 19 December that year. I did so because I disagreed, as did many of my constituents as well as many distinguished scientists, with the Government's decision to allow the Science and Engineering Research Council to move the Royal Greenwich Observatory from Herstmonceux, as had been proposed in the Kingman report, and then to sell Herstmonceux castle.

The main objections from astronomers to the proposed move were that there had not been sufficient consultation before the decision and that, in any case, the scientific justification was thin, to say the least. As Dr. Charles, the university lecturer in astronomy at Oxford, put it:

> "The SERC is seen spending an enormous amount of money on a move that nobody has called for and in order to solve problems they can neither specify or quantify."

Others argued that there was no apparent financial justification for the move and some people went so far as to say that the sale of the castle looked suspiciously like asset stripping. Such scepticism was no doubt encouraged by the remarks by Professor Mitchell and Dr. Catterall, chairman and secretary respectively of the SERC at the time, who repeatedly maintained that Treasury approval would be forthcoming only if the move could be demonstrated to be self-financing. In other words, the castle would be sold to meet the budgeted cost of the move and of new buildings at Cambridge, which had been chosen as the RGO's new headquarters.

That was the only financial target in the SERC's mind and its sole priority was to get just enough money from the sale of the castle as quickly as it could and without any strings attached to the sale that might get in the way of a research transaction. At no stage did the SERC give the impression that it would be worth while making a special effort to find a buyer who would undertake to do creative things with the castle and grounds in the public interest. Such considerations were of central importance to local residents and to others, such as Professor Gregory from Bristol, who wanted to convert the equatorial group of telescopes at the eastern edge of the park into a centre in which visiting schoolchildren could experience what he called "hands-on science", but apparently they were of no consequence to the SERC. It merely needed money for the move that it had planned and it was playing by Treasury rules. Other considerations were none of its concern, it seemed.

My suggestion to Professor Mitchell at the time—that, instead of moving the RGO, the SERC should endeavour to develop an international centre of scientific and technological excellence around the RGO at the castle, which would generate revenue from research work and seminars for clients throughout the world—was met with blank incomprehension. The idea that the RGO and the castle should be thought of as anything but a cost centre and that the SERC might do well to take an entrepreneurial view of the assets under its control, to earn a little extra money to help fund its research efforts, seemed foreign to Professor Mitchell.

That is exactly what it was. I have no doubt that the American, Japanese or German counterparts of the SERC would have jumped at the opportunity of taking prize assets, such as the RGO and Herstmonceux castle, and developing around them a centre of international renown —instead of the unimaginative retrenchment and withdrawal to Cambridge, where the RGO's identity would be submerged and where the university astronomy departments might well feel inhibited about participating in shared projects. In spite of the objections, the SERC went ahead with its plans and the castle was duly sold in 1988. The consideration was £8·1 million on a deferred payment basis, although the SERC itself did not reveal the figure and the public was led to believe from newspaper reports that £12 million had been paid. The purchasers, James Developments, made no attempt to contradict that.

Subsequently, the National Audit Office examined the terms and conditions of the sale and the manner in which the transaction was carried out. Last month the Comptroller and Auditor General published a report of his findings. He concluded that the SERC did not fully investigate bids higher than the one that was accepted, but which could have resulted in a purchase consideration of £14 million instead of £8·1 million.

The report by the Comptroller and Auditor General makes several observations from which lessons about the disposal of state-owned assets should be learnt. It says that, although the castle was first placed on the market in May 1988, a Treasury guidance issued on 29 April 1988, designed to ensure that the best possible prices were obtained on the sale of land by public bodies, did not influence the marketing strategy of the SERC. Although the Treasury knew of the impending sale and must have had a draft guidance in hand for months previously, the final version of the guidance issued in April did not reach the Department of Education and Science until 3 June, and it had no effect on the behaviour of the SERC when it dealt with tender offers for the castle in August.

The report also alludes to the vigorous publicity campaign the SERC began in May with the estate agents Knight, Frank and Rutley. Yet at least one bidder, Mr. Nesser from Los Angeles, whose offer of £9·25 million was rejected on the curious ground that the SERC did not have his financial references and was unwilling to delay matters for a day or two while they were obtained from the United Sates, claimed that he had heard of the sale by chance and that the marketing effort internationally had not impressed him in the slightest.

The report goes on to say that the best price guidance provides that land with development potential should normally be sold with the benefit of planning permission. Even if the SERC failed to come across the Treasury guidance, it was certainly given precisely the same advice by Wealden district council. The planning officer and his team at Wealden were in no doubt that it would make sense for the SERC to offer the castle with planning permission, and they said so to the SERC. However, Professor Mitchell was in too much of a hurry to get the money that the Treasury said he could have to wait until planning consent had been agreed. The unfortunate result has been that James Developments has spent the past 18 months putting forward outline development schemes that Wealden rightly considers unacceptable in many respects and which English Heritage, in its capacity as interested observer and adviser, also wished to see rejected.

The report also concludes that a clawback provision in the event of future development gain at the property should have been part of the sale contract, but the SERC overlooked that, too.

Most damning of all is the conclusion in the report that, besides Mr. Nesser's bid of £9·25 million, a telephoned offer of £10 million from a Mr. Abrams, which was shortly raised to £14 million, was also rejected. The National Audit Office says in its report that the higher bids should have been fully investigated and that financial references should have been sought before the £8·1 million bid from James Developments was accepted. By its failure to pursue the other offers, the SERC settled for a figure that could have been exceeded by almost 75 per cent.

Just as in the sales of Royal Ordnance and of the Rover Group, the taxpayer is entitled to conclude that public sector assets were sold in too much of a rush and too cheaply. It is even more depressing that the SERC, whose scientist members are fond of bemoaning publicly how much more money they need from the Government to finance their research, should have taken such a blinkered view of common-sense commercial considerations in a property sale. It is little wonder that those scientists, who are mainly university academics, should feel so uncomfortable about the long overdue responsibility now placed on British universities by the Government—and rightly so—that they should help to pay their own way.

Sadder still is the fact that James Developments, a partnership whose financial resources and track record in property development have still to be revealed by the SERC, or by anybody else, has thus far achieved nothing with the castle, which remains firmly closed to the public.

Any further changes in the way in which state-owned property is sold will merely close the stable door after the horse has bolted. Nevertheless, I urge Ministers, who are fond of talking about market forces, to take sound commercial advice when they venture into the marketplace on the taxpayer's behalf. If they do not, they are likely to find that the taxpayer feels justifiably aggrieved about being short changed.

2.45 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Education and Science (Mrs. Angela Rumbold): I have listened with close interest to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle). He has raised a subject that is, I know, of interest to a number of hon. Members, and I welcome the opportunity to try to answer some of the points that he has made.

As my hon. Friend has reminded us, the Science and Engineering Research Council decided in 1986 to move the Royal Greenwich Observatory from Herstmonceux to Cambridge, where the council believed that it could better serve the scientific community for which it was designed. My hon. Friend said that he disagreed with that thesis, but I have no doubt that care and thought went into the council's decision.

I know that, at the time, my hon. Friend regretted the removal of this historic observatory from his constituency, and argued vigorously against it; and I understand why, as a centre of scientific excellence, housed in a particularly fine building, is naturally the object of considerable local pride. The council's decision, however, was made not only on scientific grounds but on grounds of efficiency and cost, and it should not be a point at issue in today's debate.

Let me first explain the respective roles of the Government and the SERC. The council, as an independent body under a royal charter and as owner of the property, had primary responsibility for the sale arrangements, but my Department—as the main supplier of funds to the council—was involved in certain aspects of the sale, in particular the use of the proceeds. The operation of the sale was handled by the council. Treasury guidance was taken into account, but, having reviewed its sale strategy in the light of that guidance, the council concluded that it did not need to make any changes.

My hon. Friend referred to the report by the National Audit Office. As is the usual practice, the Public Accounts Committee, having studied the report, will wish to decide whether to take further evidence. However, although I do not want to pre-empt the details of any future discussion, I should like to make one or two comments—particularly in view of some of the stories that have appeared in the press over the past couple of weeks.

Contrary to the impression given by the press, the report comments very favourably on many aspects of the sale. The National Audit Office was generally satisfied with the council's arrangements: it mentioned specifically the use of a reputable firm of agents, the vigorous marketing of the property, the timely point at which the sale was conducted, the provision for new accommodation in Cambridge and the monitoring and control of costs. As my hon. Friend observed, the report went on to make two specific points about ways in which the council might have acted differently. When we look at the facts of the case, however, the picture that emerges is rather different from that presented by the more excitable newspapers.

The sale was conducted on the basis of an invitation to potential buyers who had shown an interest in the property. The research council's agents set a specified date by which all bids were to be submitted; to ensure fair treatment and the best competitive price, they were to be in the form of "best and final offers", and to be accompanied by financial references. A buyer, James Developments was selected on that basis. The council accepted the company's bid of £8·1 million, and its agents set in hand the arrangements for finalising the deal.

My hon. Friend mentioned other, unsuccessful bidders, one of whom said that he was prepared to increase his earlier offer. He said, first, that he was prepared to increase his earlier bid to £10 million; then, that, in addition to his earlier bid, he would be prepared to make a special one-off payment of £7 million to the European Space Agency on behalf of the United Kingdom if that would secure the sale. Finally, he said that, instead of doing that, he would be prepared to increase his earlier bid to £14 million. At no point, however, did he provide the financial references to support any of his offers—including the original offer—as required under the terms of the original invitation to bid. It is important to make that clear.

I rehearse those facts now because they are relevant to the suggestion that the SERC could have obtained a higher price than it did and because they are a matter of public record, to be found in the National Audit Office report.

The National Audit Office report suggests that the SERC should have pursued the offers further before exchanging contracts with James Developments. The research council decided against doing so for two reasons. First, it was not prepared to be a party to gazumping. Secondly—I have to present the full picture—on the advice of its professional and experienced agent, it thought it doubtful that the second bidder would be able to complete at the prices that were being quoted.

Mr. Charles Wardle: If the SERC chose not to pursue references, how can the judgment have been made that the bidder was unable to meet the consideration of £14 million?

Mrs. Rumbold: As I understand it, references were sought but no information was forthcoming. That is why the professional agents gave the considered judgment that it was unlikely that finance would be forthcoming from the bidder.

The council's judgment is also now a matter of public record in the National Audit Office report. I will not go beyond that, except to say that, if the research council had changed the ground rules at that point and pursued an offer about whose viability it had serious doubts, other bidders might well have dropped out, and the outcome could have proved far less satisfactory to the taxpayer than was achieved.

My hon. Friend referred to a second point in the National Audit Office report concerning planning permission. It was always obvious that the purchaser would need to develop the property for some new use, and my hon. Friend has explained the new uses that he thought would be suitable.

Before the property was placed on the market, the research council and its agents very responsibly had detailed discussions with the local planning authorities—Wealden district council and East Sussex county council. Jointly with those authorities, the research council and its agents sponsored a detailed report by the English tourist board on possible options for the use of the site. The research council's agent drew up a planning brief on the basis of that report and the local structure plan. The brief was then approved by Wealden district council and informed the decision made on the sale and the agents' judgment of the sale price likely to be attainable. All that information was available to prospective purchasers.

Once bids had been received, the council accepted the agents' professional advice that the price offered by the successful bidder was a good and fair one in relation to the development options that were likely to be allowed by the planning authorities.

The National Audit Office report suggests that the research council should have gone further, that it should have tried to negotiate some clawback arrangement with the purchaser. Under such an arrangement, the purchaser would have agreed to reimburse the vendor all or part of any increase in value attributable to the granting of planning permission after the sale terms had been agreed.

Decisions on such an agreement have to be a matter of judgment in each case. The danger of such an arrangement is that, as a quid pro quo for agreeing to it, the purchase price might be reduced below the likely benefit that might arise later.

Again, on the basis of professional advice, the research council took the view that a clawback provision would not be to its advantage. My hon. Friend will know that development of the site is strictly limited by Wealden district council's local structure plan, and also of course by the castle's status as a scheduled ancient monument. The research council considered that the sale price agreed was already a fair one in relation to the sorts of planning consents that were likely.

Of course, a different view could be taken, as the NAO report suggests. In this case, the research council was on the spot and had all the facts before it and the benefit of experienced professional advice. While it may not be strictly relevant to the NAO report, I would just note that the purchaser has, I understand, still not obtained the sort of planning consent that he was hoping for, some 18 months after the sale was agreed. You may feel, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that that rather bears out the research council's judgment on the matter, but that is a matter of opinion.

I know that the wider question of planning consent is of great concern to my hon. Friend, and that he has taken a close personal interest in the future use of Herstmonceux. I have explained the actions that the SERC very responsibly took with the planning authorities before the sale was completed. Now that the sale has taken place, from here on this has to be a matter for the purchaser and the local planning authorities. I know that discussions are continuing and that my hon. Friend will ensure that the concerns of his constituents are effectively represented.

While I have listened with great care to my hon. Friend, it is fair that my account of events shows that the research council's acts have been well thought out in the light of the facts as they were known at the time. We shall obviously continue to study carefully what the NAO has said in its report, but there is significant ground for arguing, as the research council has argued, that the taxpayers secured a good price for the property, that they probably could not have done better and might certainly have done considerably worse.

The purchase price was shown in the appropriation accounts in the usual way, as my hon. Friend pointed out. I am aware that I may not have completely and entirely satisfied my hon. Friend, but I hope that I have given an adequate explanation of the circumstances that surrounded the sale of Herstmonceux castle.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at three minutes to Three o'clock till Tuesday 8 May, pursuant to Resolution of the House [27 March].

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 23 April 1990

THE ARTS

Nottingham Playhouse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the trading position of the Nottingham Playhouse.

Mr. Luce: I understand that an agreement has been reached between the Arts Council and the local authorities to clear the overall deficit of the Nottingham Playhouse by the end of 1992-93.

ENVIRONMENT

Rented Accommodation

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the supply of rented accommodation and market rents.

Mr. Chope: Housing associations are now the main providers of new subsidised rented housing. Planned public expenditure through the Housing Corporation will double to over £1·7 billion by 1992-93; together with the increased scope for associations to use private finance, total output of rented housing by associations and local authorities in England is expected to rise to nearly 40,000 by that year. Council and housing association housing benefits from subsidies which keep rents generally far below market levels, and housing benefit meets up to 100 per cent. of rent for the poorest tenants.

River Pollution

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions for river pollution have been carried out by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that since 1 September last year, when the National Rivers Authority fully assumed its responsibilities under the Water Act 1989, some 870 prosecutions for river pollution offences have been brought by the NRA or are pending.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total advertising and publicity budget for the London Docklands development corporation for each year since its creation; and what is the estimate for the next three years.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is as follows:

Publicity and promotion expenditure

1981-82	961
1982-83	2,464
1983-84	1,857
1984-85	2,253
1985-86	1,716
1986-87	1,728
1987-88	1,846
1988-89	1,826
1989-90	[1]1,960
1990-91	[2]3,500
1991-92	[2]3,200
1992-93	[2]3,100

Waste Disposal

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research and development projects currently being undertaken into waste disposal by his Department and related agencies, also giving the cost of each project.

Mr. Trippier: The research projects currently undertaken by the Department of the Environment into waste management are listed, together with the total cost of each project.

There are three areas of research:

A. Materials Processing. The aim here is to research the provision of safe and effective alternatives to landfilling and also the feasibility of various separation and recovery processes.

Title	Total Cost £k
Byker reclamation plant; front-end trommel and associated equipment	344·6
Waste analysis research	152·0
Analysis and estimation of municipal waste arisings	61·5
Incineration characteristics from burning WDF pellets in a coal fired boiler	138·6
Waste collection characteristics from selected zones of Nottingham	16·0
Composting of WD fines from Castle Bromwich	118·1
Investigation of incinerator furnace conditions	95·0
Small incinerator investigation	73·5
Improving the effectiveness of civic amenity sites and of complementary waste management services	187·6
Municipal waste composting	185·0
Thermal treatment of waste	89·0
Waste Treatment and recovery	230·0
Environmental impact of municipal solid waste incinerators	68·0
A study of airborne micro-organisms	29·2

B. Problem Waste Management. Research in this area is conducted on the immobilisation of difficult wastes or their chemical, thermal or biological detoxification.

Title	Total Cost (£k)
Biotechnical systems for the degradation of heavy metals and persistent organic materials	928·4
Determination of analytical procedures to define dioxins and furans in soils and to assay soil samples	412·0
Stabilisation of organic wastes in clay/cement mixes using quaternary amonium compounds	257·1
Anaerobic degradation of polychlorinated biphenyls	66·0
Toxic and problem waste management	719·6
Polychlorinated biphenyl disposal using cement	98·1
Asbestos site database study	25·5
A review of clinical waste management systems	32·0
Waste management	323·1

C. Landfill Practices. This is by far the largest area of research. The aims here are to develop a thorough understanding of the processes occuring within landfills to ensure safe and effective landfilling of wastes, to allow for the optimisation of landfilling as a waste management technique and to provide reassurance as to the acceptability of landfills as a disposal option.

Landfill research covers five topics:

(i) the microbiology of landfills and studies of landfill gas and leachate composition and generation.

Title	Total Cost (£k)
Mathematical modelling of landfill behaviour	207·7
A review of the technical aspects of co-disposal	27·4
Landfill characterisation relative to methane incidence	429·5
Biotechnical methods of stabilising landfills	282·5
Assessment of landfill gas potential by the interpretation of leachate and gas analysis	75·1
Landfill management	396·9
Methane oxidation in soils	74·1
A study of landfill gas in the Llanharry area	20·0
A review of research into landfill microbiology	19·4
Inhibition of methane production	108·2
Comparison of landfill gas potential tests	55·7

(ii) Studies of the mechanisms of attenuation of leachate and gas

Title	Total cost (£k)
Attenuation of organic leachate in a sand blanket beneath the Washington landfill.	63·2
Instrumentation of a permeable liner in the base of Stangate-East landfill.	279·7
The effectiveness of an impermeable clay liner formed in situ.	49·6
A study of the migration of organic contaminants from Pakefield waste disposal site.	25·0
Control of landfill gas migration by passive venting.	49·0
Automated measurements of aquifer dispersivity.	252·0
Assessment of the problems associated with the landfilling of wastes and the effectiveness of remedial measures.	219·9
Leachate attentuation studies.	23·0
The development of a numerical method for modelling gas flows from landfill sites and experimental studies of gas flow through selected porous materials.	379·5

(iii) leachate management studies

Title	Total Cost (£k)
Leachate treatment by irrigation to grass and woodland	122·6
Landfill research	1,025·4
Reed-bed treatment of landfill leachate	90·0
Leachate treatment to surface water quality standards using reed bed polishing	98·0
Sulphate based anaerobic digestion of leachate	69·5
Leachate management systems	66·6
Management of the environmental effects of landfill disposal of waste	242·9
A review of leachate composition, attenuation and treatment	84·9
An investigation of the chemical, physical and hydrological properties of refuse	142·2

(iv) the development of monitoring procedures

Title	Total Cost (£k)
The use of carbon/hydrogen isotope ratios to identify methane sources	96·1
Appraisal of hazards related to landfill gas production and the development of a simple procedure to evaluate associated risks	92·0
Long path gas monitor development	45·6
Landfill sampling and monitoring	43·5
Gas migration modelling	34·1

(v) landfill reinstatement studies

Title	Total Cost (£k)
Assessment of the integrity of clay capping to landfills	35·3
The effectiveness of the cap at Milton landfill	143·0
A study of fungal activity in promoting tree growth on landfills	43·2

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of those waste disposal sites in England known to his Department where mass disposal of tyres has taken place.

Mr. Trippier: Records of sites used for the disposal of waste tyres are not held centrally. However, HMIP knows of some 400 closed or active sites which have been licensed to take scrap rubber, including tyres.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of all former waste disposal sites in England that are known to contain PCBs in drums.

Mr. Trippier: No such information is available. However in waste management paper No. 6 (1976) on the reclamation, treatment and disposal of PCBs, the Department recommends that where recovery is not possible, PCBs should generally be disposed of by high temperature incineration.

Local Government Finance

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), to the hon. Member for Gloucester of 4 April, if local authorities are obliged to reveal on request whether they are levying a standard community charge at less than twice the personal community charge.

Mr. Chope: Where a charging authority has specified a class of property for the purposes of setting a different multiplier from that generally applied, it is required to publish a notice giving details of the exercise of the power in at least one local newspaper within 21 days of making the specification. Authorities are required to give information on their standard community charges in their standard charge demand notices. It follows therefore that they should be able to give details of their classes and multipliers to those who ask for them.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which would have been placed under capping arrangements under the community charge regulations had he not imposed the qualification on spending levels.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 20 April 1990, Official Report, column 1031.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to inform directly all those local authorities which have not been subject to capping that he approves the particular community charge which applies in those areas.

Mr. Chope: No.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement about the community charge liability of seafarers and offshore workers who spend significant parts of the year away from their homes and who have no second homes.

Mr. Chope: As I explained to my hon. Friend on 21 March Official Report, column 660, and 3 April, Official Report, column 564, it is initially the responsibility of the community charge registration officer to decide whether a person is solely or mainly resident in his area. In this respect offshore workers are no different from any other potential charge payer. It is open to charge payers to appeal to their local valuation and community charge tribunal against their entry on the community charges register.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of people employed full time in each region of England, Scotland and Wales in the collection of the community charge.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money is tied up in banks because of the Government's refusal to allow local authorities to spend capital receipts (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in Nottingham city council.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 April 1990]: Local authority debt in England at March 1989 was some £46 billion, of which Nottingham city council's debt was £424 million. One of the objectives of the new capital finance system provided in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 is that local authorities should use some of their capital receipts to reduce their indebtedness. Accordingly capital receipts are divided into a reserved part to be set aside as provision for credit liabilities and a usable balance.

The reserved part may be used at any time to repay debt, to meet liabilities under credit arrangements, or, where a credit approval has been used as authority not to charge expenditure to a revenue account, to meet that expenditure as a substitute for external borrowing.

The usable part may be applied at any time and at the discretion of the authority concerned to meet expenditure incurred for capital purposes or as voluntary provision for credit liabilities.

There are no capital receipts which, under the legislation now in force, local authorities in England cannot use.

My right hon. Friend has no ministerial responsibility for local authority capital finance in Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland.

Water Distribution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the percentage of water in England and Wales that is lost by avoidable leakage in distribution.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 24 January to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) (Official Report, c. 762).

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now issue formal detailed implementation advice for the EC bathing waters directive (76/160/EEC) to the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The National Rivers Authority is the competent authority in England and Wales for the purposes of implementing the EC bathing waters directive (76/160/EEC). The Directive contains details of the standards to be attained at identified bathing waters and the arrangements for monitoring water quality. I have no plans to issue further implementation advice to the National Rivers Authority.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the reason for excluding monitoring for salmonella and enteroviruses from the result of the bathing water survey which is announced to Parliament;

(2) if he will give figures for the number of designated beaches which comply with the EC bathing water directive if the parameters for salmonella and enteroviruses are taken into account.

Mr. Trippier: The report that I placed in the Library, as stated in the Official Report, 25 January 1990, column 485, contains the available results for salmonella and enteroviruses.

European Council

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchele, Official Report, 27 March, columns 117-18, if he will publish in the Official Report the representations from the United Kingdom which were considered at the Environment Council on 22 March during the debate on whether to establish a European environmental agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The main terms of the regulation to establish a European Environment Agency were agreed at the Environment Council on 28 November 1989. The Environment Council on 22 March 1990 considered a number of amendments to the regulation put forward by the European Parliament. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment stressed the importance of recognising that the European Parliament had tried hard to produce amendments which would be acceptable to the Council and that the European Parliament's proposal for a review of the agency's tasks after two years made good sense. This view was accepted by the Council.

Wells

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the introduction of grants to enable people residing near suitable sites to sink wells to extract potable water.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to introduce specific grants for this purpose. Grants are available under the Rural Water Supplies and Sewerage Acts towards the cost of first-time connections to mains water supplies in rural areas. In addition, part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which is expected to come into force on 1 July 1990, provides for a new system of renovation grants. In certain circumstances, a renovation grant may be available to improve the quality of the water supply to a property which does not have an adequate piped supply of wholesome water and is thereby unfit for human habitation. It will be for the local authority concerned to specify what improvements are necessary and to consider any application for a grant towards their cost.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the quality of drinking water from private wells.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The quality standards in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations made under the Water Act 1989 apply to private drinking water supplies. Local authorities are required to keep themselves informed about the quality of private supplies in their area and have powers under the Water Act to require improvements to be made to unwholesome supplies. An advisory group is currently considering the content of further regulations to be made later this year about the sampling programmes that local authorities will be required to carry out for private supplies.

Residential Developments (Soil Contamination)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of former waste disposal sites in England on which residential development has taken place without monitoring for possible contaminants transferred to garden vegetables grown on such sites.

Mr. Trippier: No such information is held centrally. Decisions on the monitoring and assessment of former waste disposal sites for further use, including development purposes, are the responsibility of local authorities have relevant duties under town and country planning and public health legislation.

Housing Corporation

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Housing Corporation; and what was discussed.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the Housing Corporation on 8 February and my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning had a further meeting with him on 21 February. A variety of topics of mutual interest were discussed.

Smoke Emissions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the black smoke emitted by road transport reported in his Department's statistical digest No. 12, page 14, is estimated to come from diesel vehicles; what are the relative contributions of diesel smoke and smoke from domestic sources to overall smoke emissions in smoke control areas; and what information he has about the relative soiling effects of diesel smoke in comparison with coal smoke.

Mr. Trippier: It is estimated that 184,000 tonnes of black smoke was emitted by road transport in 1988 and that 92 per cent. of emissions from transport came from diesel vehicles.

Information is not available for the relative soiling effects of diesel smoke in comparison with coal smoke, or for the relative contributions of diesel smoke and smoke from domestic sources to overall smoke emissions in smoke control areas. Emissions of black smoke from domestic sources for the United Kingdom as a whole have fallen by approximately 71 per cent. since 1970, while emissions from diesel vehicles have risen by 86 per cent. over the same period.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest have been (a) denotified and (b) damaged for each year since 1981; and what percentage for each year is related to (i) road building, (ii) forestry, (iii) farming activities, (iv) landfill operations and (v) other reasons.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. Since 1 April 1984, information on the numbers of SSSIs damaged is set out in the Nature Conservancy Council's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to eliminate the use of ozone-depleting substances in (a) refrigerants, (b) solvents and (c) foams; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The ozone layer can be protectd only by international action. The Montreal protocol is due for revision in June. We are pressing for rapid cuts in the supply of CFCs, halons and carbon tetrachloride, with their elimination by the year 2000. Methyl chloroform must also be cut substantially. If the revised protocol is not strong enough, we will press for further restrictions within the European Community.

Wild Birds (Poisoning)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made an assessment of the impact on populations of wild birds of exposure to pesticide cocktails; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides set up by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food assesses the environmental implication of all pesticides before their use is approved. Approval requires the consent of six Departments, including that of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. As part of its work, the advisory committee will be considering the findings of a recent study by Reading university and the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology into the effect on partridges of concurrent exposure to fungicides and pesticides.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to eliminate illegal poisoning of birds of prey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Strict controls are already in place to deter the illegal use of pesticides against birds of prey. Severe penalties are available for such offences under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, and incidents of abuse are pursued vigorously through the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food wildlife incident investigations scheme. In addition, the Nature Conservancy Council is currently reviewing the matter of illegal poisoning.

Sewage

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) of 2 April, Official Report, column 478, who will determine whether sewage discharges subjected to primary treatment have an adverse environmental effect.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is for the National Rivers Authority to consent applications for discharges to controlled waters taking into account the provisions of any relevant EEC directives, and any directions from my right hon. Friends.

Global Warming

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made an assessment of the implications for coastal areas of an increase in global warming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom is contributing to the work of the coastal zone management sub-group of the inter-governmental panel on climate change which is assessing the impact of global warming on coastal areas worldwide. Coastal defence in the United Kingdom is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Owls

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the estimated population in England of (a) barn owls and (b) tawny owls; and what steps he is taking to protect owl populations;

(2) what is the estimated annual death toll of (a) barn owls and (b) tawny owls; and what percentage of deaths in each case are ascribed to (i) traffic, (ii) pesticide or other chemical poisoning, (iii) loss of habitat, (iv) starvation and (v) other causes.

Mr. Trippier: The current British populations of barn owls and tawny owls are estimated at 4,400 and 50,000-100,000 breeding pairs, respectively. Overall annual mortality rates cannot be estimated, but of those birds reported as found dead 30 per cent. of both species had died from collisions with traffic.

All wild owls in Britain are protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; the barn owl is included in schedule 1 to the Act as a particularly endangered species protected by special penalties.

Sellafield

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what checks have been undertaken to establish atmospheric levels of krypton 85 in the vicinity of Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Krypton 85 is an inert gas and cannot concentrate in the environment. Checks undertaken in the late 1970s demonstrated that levels of krypton 85 in the environment around Sellafield were consistent with those calculated from measured Sellafield discharges using standard aerial dispersion modelling techniques. No further checks have been carried out.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the discharge levels of radioactivity to the air in TBq from Sellafield for each year from 1975 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Trippier: Data on the radioactive atmospheric discharges from BNFL's Sellafield works are included in my Department's annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Information for the period 1975-88 is as follows:

Sellafield Aerial Discharges 1975 to 1988

Year	Discharges (TBq/Yr)
	Argon-41	Tritium	Krypton-85
1975	1,110	444	44,400
1976	799	444	44,400
1977	962	296	29,600
1978	1,070	222	25,900
1979	1,150	280	34,800
1980	1,110	252	31,100
1981	1,300	459	51,800
1982	1,320	360	44,000

Elephant Conservation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who represented Her Majesty's Government at the conference on African elephants in Paris on 5 and 6 April; and how much was offered by Her Majesty's Government for elephant conservation.

Mr. Trippier: The Government were represented at the conference by officials from the Department of the Environment and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, accompanied by the officer of the Nature Conservancy Council. The British delegation explained to the conference that the Government are already making very substantial efforts to support wildlife conservation in Africa. We are providing some £3 million in aid for a wide variety of projects, a number of which will have major benefits for the African elephant, and are always ready to consider new requests from African Governments seeking help with the sustainable management and conservation of their wildlife resources.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding ivory imported into the United Kingdom by Mr. Shivaz Virji of Ealing and currently held at ports of entry.

Mr. Trippier: The information held by the Department relates to an application for a CITES re-export licence. Information contained in licence applications is regarded by the Department as confidential and cannot be released.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding ivory currently held at United Kingdom ports of entry which is not accompanied by CITES documentation.

Mr. Trippier: Such information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Drinking Water (Radon)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what analysis has been carried out to establish levels of dissolved radon in drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Radon in water results from the structure of the ground from which the supply emanates. It is believed to be confined to a few areas. Where radon is likely to be present in a water source, a specific analysis is carried out and the water company may treat the water to remove it, seeking advice on levels from the National Radiological Protection Board. No standard is set for radon in the EC drinking water directive or the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations which incorporate the provisions of the directive. We are currently reviewing the matter of radiological standards.

Carbon Tetrachloride

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the presence of carbon tetrachloride in water sources.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Carbon tetrachloride is a list I substance under directive 76/464/EEC on discharges of dangerous substances, and its concentrations in surface waters near to the point of discharge may not exceed 12 ug/l (annual average). Direct discharges to ground water are banned. There are no specific requirements for carbon tetrachloride in water sources because directive 75/440/EEC on the quality of surface waters abstracted for drinking water does not lay down standards for this substance. However, regulations under the Water Act 1989 require that concentrations in public or private drinking water supplies may not exceed 3 ug/l (annual average).

Carbon tetrachloride is not a common problem in water sources; in the known few occurrences where it has been found in excessive quantities appropriate action has been taken.

Environmental Meetings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all future environmental (a) conferences, (b) seminars and (c) meetings which Ministers in his Department have been invited to attend (i) in the United Kingdom, (ii) in the European Community, and (iii) elsewhere; and if he will list the dates of these events.

Mr. Trippier: Over the next two months Ministers are to attend the following conferences, seminars and meetings in:

(a) the United Kingdom

Date
23 April	DOE/HSE Conference on the Regulation of Bio-technology Financial Times Conference on Industry and the Environment Waste Producers Conference
5 May	West Sussex County Conference on Recycling
14 May	Conference at Lancashire College of Agriculture
15 May	Brunel University Symposium on Landfill
17 May	National Parks Conference, Newcastle
6 June	CBI Conference on Green Audits
20 June	Institution of Civil Engineers Annual Conference

(b) Overseas

Date
21 to 23 April	Informal EC Council (West of Ireland)
8 to 16 May	Ministerial follow-up to Brundtland Report (Bergen)
7 June	EC Environment Council (Luxembourg)
16 June	EC Ministerial meeting with East Europe (Dublin)
20 to 29 June	2nd meeting of Montreal Protocol Parties (London)

Foxes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated population of foxes in England; and what comparable figures he has for earlier years.

Mr. Trippier: I am not aware of any population estimates for foxes in England.

Caravans (London)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the numbers of caravans which can be accommodated on permanent sites provided under the Caravan Sites Act in each of the London boroughs.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 5 April 1990]: London boroughs have made provision for the following numbers of authorised caravan pitches on which the following number of caravans were parked as at January 1990:

	Pitches	Caravans
Barking and Dagenham	16	16
Bexley	16	7
Brent	15	31
Bromley	22	35
Croydon	15	15
Ealing	24	53
Enfield	15	26
Greenwich	54	64
Hammersmith and Fulham	20	50
Haringey	24	51
Harrow	15	13
Havering	16	4
Hillingdon	30	30
Hounslow	17	17
Kingston upon Thames	15	15
Lambeth	15	23
Lewisham	16	26
Merton	15	15
Newham	15	15
Redbridge	17	16
Richmond upon Thames	15	15
Southwark	15	15
Sutton	15	15
Tower Hamlets	15	19
Waltham Forest	16	13

Homelessness

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the terms on which the recently announced Government initiative on homelessness in the south-east is to operate; whether any additional grant is to be payable to councils with approved schemes; whether any subsidy is payable by Government on the revenue or capital costs of approved projects; and whether councils' housing revenue accounts will need to cover (a) initial and (b) consequential expenditure on the projects from rent income.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 18 April 1990]: We will allocate to local authorities in London and the south-east supplementary credit approvals in respect of capital expenditure they incur on approved schemes in 1990-91. Initial and consequential costs of those schemes which involve property held within the housing revenue account (HRA) or certain types of payments to tenants of such property will fall to be charged to the HRA of the authority concerned. Such approved schemes will include repair of empty council property, hostels held under part II of the Housing Act 1985 and cash incentives to tenants. To the extent that costs are chargeable to the HRA, the normal rules for all HRA schemes will apply in determining the extent to which they attract subsidy and the extent to which costs are met from rent income. The Housing Corporation will pay revenue grant to local authority-funded housing association schemes as appropriate under the normal funding arrangements. No additional grant, however, will be directly payable to any local authority for such schemes.

Asbestos (Tower Blocks)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tower blocks in use as domestic accommodation have steelwork coated with any form of asbestos; and where they are located.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 20 April 1990]: The Department is aware of only three public sector high-rise blocks using this form of construction. Two are located on the Elgin estate, Westminster; and one at Watney Street market, Tower Hamlets.

Static Electricity

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of static electricity within the House.

Mr. Chope: The level of antistatic electricity at any time depends on the level of atmospheric humidity. This is true both within the House and outside.

Sewage Dumping

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify for each sewage sludge dump off the coasts of England and Wales the timing between now and 1998 for each dump being terminated for use.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not yet available. Following the announcement on 5 March that the dumping of sewage sludge at sea would not be permitted after the end of 1998 holders of licences are beginning now to draw up their plans for termination of dumping.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Shipping

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he intends to introduce to enable United Kingdom shipping companies to maintain their merchant fleets and crews, replace their aging tonnage and improve their rates of return.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 5 April 1990, Official Report, c. 717-18.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 5 April, Official Report, column 718, what is his estimate of (a) the current rate of return on investment in a large container ship and (b) the rate of return if he reinstated 100 per cent. ship allowance, against investment in new and second hand ships.

Mr. Lilley: The answer to these two questions depends critically on assumptions about a number of factors, including the earnings of the vessel over its life and the eventual proceeds from its sale (perhaps in 10 or 20 years' time). The rate of return on any investment in machinery or plant—whether it is a ship or any other asset—will increase if an Exchequer subsidy is given. However, my right hon. Friend has no plans to change the present capital allowances regime for ships, which already offers more generous deductions than commercial depreciation.

Works of Art

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 12 March, Official Report, column 10, the announcement of 26 July 1985 that the figure of £10 million was an estimate and was not either a target or a limit remains Government policy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I confirm that the announcement made on 26 July 1985 (Official Report, House of Lords column, 1539-40) by the then Minister for the Arts still represents Government policy.

PRIME MINISTER

European Monetary Union

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister when the European Council next plans to discuss the issue of monetary union; and if she will make a statement on the progress made to date on this issue by the Council.

The Prime Minister: Agenda for the European Council are not formally set but the issue of economic and monetary union is next likely to arise at the meeting on 25-26 June. The European Council last discussed EMU at its meeting in Strasbourg on 8-9 December the results of which I reported to the House on 12 December at column 857.

Child Care and Family Services

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Departments have responsibilities for child care and family responsibilities; what they are; what mechanisms there are for co-ordination in these matters; and if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on child care.

The Prime Minister: While the Department of Health has a lead responsibility on child care almost all Government Departments have policies which affect child care and family life. Each Minister is responsible for policies within his own sphere. Co-ordination is achieved through the normal and well-established process of inter-departmental liaison, and additional collaborative arrangements exist in the form of the inter-departmental committees, such as the ministerial group on women's issues, the inter-departmental group on day care and the inter-departmental group on child abuse. Government policy on child care is reflected in the Children Act 1989.

Law Officers' Letters

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what are the guidelines relevant to the approval of the release of Law Officers' letters.

The Prime Minister: Legal opinions or advice given by the Law Officers, either individually or collectively, must not be disclosed outside Government without their express approval.

Iraq (Arms Component Exports)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister on what date she received the first indication that there was a problem regarding the export of forgings from Walter Somers and Company to Iraq.

The Prime Minister: Earlier this month.

Civil Servants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 18 April (1) if she will make a statement on the circumstances in which Mr. Powell met in any official capacity the proprietor of The Daily Telegraph;

(2) if she will list the attempts to which she refers of the hon. Member for Linlithgow to vilify individual civil servants.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave the hon. Member on 18 April at column 932.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his estimate of the cost of preparation for the inclusion in the national curriculum of those subjects which he has recently removed from this arrangement as far as primary schools are concerned;

(2) what is his estimate of the total number of man hours which have been devoted by officials of his Department, by local authority officers and by teachers, to the preparation for inclusion in the national curriculum of those subjects which have now been removed from this arrangement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No core or foundation subject has been removed from the national curriculum. My right hon. Friend did, however, announce in a published letter to the chairman of the School Examinations and Assessment Council on 9 April that the arrangements for statutorily assessing seven-year-olds in technology, history and geography should be kept simple and that, accordingly, he and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales had reached the provisional conclusion that it would be right not to impose a statutory requirement to administer standard assessment tasks (SATs) to seven-year-olds in these subjects. Prior to that announcement, no work involving schools or LEAs had been undertaken on the development of SATs in these subjects for seven-year-olds. The preparatory work undertaken by schools and LEAs to date has mainly been directed towards the first statutory assessments of seven-year-olds in the core subjects of English, mathematics and science in 1991. My right hon. Friend confirmed in his letter to SEAC that these assessments would be based on a combination of teacher assessment and statutory SATs.

Youth Organisations

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list, for the previous and current year, the youth organisations for which his Department provides funding, indicating the amount in each case allocated for project funding and the amount allocated for core funding;

(2) how he intends to ensure that there is a national forum for the interchange of views of young people;

(3) what discussions he has had with the British Youth Council on its 1990-91 funding applications;

(4) what plans he has to ensure that youth bodies receive core as well as project funding in the light of the report on the efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector;

(5) what he intends should be the basis for representations from participating youth bodies on his proposed national youth agency;

(6) what discussions he has had or will have with youth organisations on the report on the efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector;

(7) what discussions he had with the British Youth Council concerning his proposals for a national youth agency prior to his announcement on 5 April;

(8) how many representative youth organisations are currently funded by his Department;

(9) what provision he will make in his proposed national youth agency for participating youth bodies to retain their respective identities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department provides funding to a number of youth service bodies for the completion of specific programmes of work which are recognised as contributing to the effective and efficient implementation of ministerial objectives to improve the quality of youth service work on a national basis through, for example, the development of curriculum and training materials.

In the 1989-90 financial year this funding takes into account the level of expenditure by the bodies on staffing and administration which the Department considers appropriate for them efficiently to complete the agreed programmes of work.

British Youth Council (BYC)	30,000
Council for Education and Training in Youth and Community Work (CETYCW)	278,094
National Association of Young People's Counselling and Advisory Services (NAYPCAS)	53,000
National Council for Voluntary Youth Services (NCVYS)	127,893
National Youth Bureau (NYB)	557,210

For the 1990-91 financial year, offers of programme funding of £46,265 have been made to NAYPCAS, and of £571,140 to NYB.

The level of programme funding which might be offered this year to CETYCW and NCVYS is under discussion with the bodies. BYC applied for funding for 1990-91 as a national voluntary youth organisation (NVYO), but discussion is necessary before the level of any programme funding under this scheme can be determined.

To determine the organisation of such funding in future, we commissioned an independent report, which took account of the views of the bodies concerned. In the light of this and of the Home Office efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector, which also draws on the views of voluntary bodies, we have determined to focus future programme funding for support of youth service work at national level on a single national youth agency, rather than on the existing four youth service bodies or an amalgam of them. The agency will be managed by an executive committee, whose composition will be discussed with the main interests involved in and with experience of the functions the agency is to undertake. It is from these interests that the committee members will be drawn, rather than nominated as representatives of particular bodies or organisations.

BYC, NAYPCAS and NCVYS, which also have representative functions, which we would expect their members to finance may, if they decide to continue, compete for funding from the Department, under the NVYO scheme, for agreed programmes of support work which the national youth agency is not being funded to pursue.

The NVYO funding scheme is to be reviewed this year, in consultation with the organisations concerned, in the light of the efficiency scrutiny review, to ensure that the available public moneys are disbursed and applied as efficiently and effectively as possible through programmes of work in pursuit of ministerial objectives.

NORTHERN IRELAND

St. Leonard's Home, Warrenpoint

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken to prevent the closure of St. Leonard's home, located in Warrenpoint in South Down.

Mr. Needham: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 19 March, Official Report, columns 448-49, the Southern health and social services board is continuing to explore the possibilities of providing more suitable accommodation for the residents of St. Leonard's. No decision has been taken on the future of the home.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Medical Negligence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General how many applications for legal aid have been received from parents of brain-damaged children who wish to pursue a claim for medical negligence; and what percentage of the applications have been successful.

The Attorney-General: The Legal Aid Board receives in the order of 400,000 applications each year. The board's case information system identifies only the broad category of "medical negligence" and does not identify particular types of damage within that category. Further, the system identifies applicants only as male or female, defendants or plaintiffs and not whether or not they are children or parents or next friends on behalf of children.

It would, therefore, not be practicable to extract the information requested.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General if he is considering any further changes to the current tort-based system, particularly with reference to parents who wish to sue for compensation for their brain-damaged children.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend is considering the feasibility of a no-fault compensation scheme, restricted to less serious road accidents and financed by private insurance. No other changes to the tort-based system are being considered.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Redundant Churches

64. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement about the number of schemes settling the future of redundant churches which were confirmed during each of the past five years.

Mr. Alison: In the last five calendar years, the future of 253 redundant churches was settled by Pastoral Measure schemes, 50 in 1985, 62 in 1986, 50 in 1987, 47 in 1988 and 44 in 1989.

Archbishop of Canterbury

65. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what funding the Church Commissioners provide in respect of the salary and administration of the office of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners pay the stipend of the archbishop and meet the costs of his supporting staff and their equipment.

Clergy (Stipends)

66. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how much the Church Commissioners contributed to the stipends of archbishops, bishops and clergy in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: Out of their investment income the Commissioners contributed to clergy stipends £38·7 million in 1987, £42·5 million in 1988 and an estimated £50 million in 1989. These figures represent about 35 per cent. of the Commissioners' investment income in each year and met some 40 per cent. of the clergy stipends bill.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Riots

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of prisoners including remand prisoners who participated in riots inside prisons from late March; and if he will provide his estimate of the costs of damage at each prison where riots or disturbances occurred.

Mr. Mellor: A total of more than 1,000 inmates (including those on remand) were present—although not necessarily participating—in the particular parts of prisons where disturbances began during the period 1-9 April. Until police investigations are concluded it will not be possible to distinguish the number of active participants from others.

The most serious damage occurred at Manchester, Bristol and Dartmoor prisons. It will not be possible to estimate costs at Manchester until the incident there is concluded. In addition to repairing the damage at Bristol and Dartmoor our intention is to upgrade the accommodation there, to provide integral sanitation and other planned improvements. The overall cost of this work, including the repairs, is estimated at £3 million at Bristol and £3·5 million at Dartmoor.

Costs of repairing the minor damage to other establishments have yet to be finally assessed.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the violence in Manchester's Strangeways prison.

Mr. Mellor: Since my right hon. and learned Friend last reported to the House on 5 April about the position at Manchester prison, 15 men have surrendered to the authorities, but seven inmates, whom we believe we have identified by name, remain in the prison. Negotiations are continuing with the aim of resolving the disturbance without further injury to staff or inmates.

Parole

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a serving prisoner's application for and consideration of parole can be affected by the fact that his appeal against either conviction or sentence is still awaiting determination by the Court of Appeal or other appellate tribunals.

Mr. Mellor: Neither a prisoner's eligibility for parole nor consideration of the case is affected by an outstanding appeal against conviction or sentence.

Police Disciplinary Proceedings

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list separately for each of the last four years for which figures are available (a) the number of appeals from police disciplinary hearings he received, (b) the number of such appeals he referred to an appeal tribunal under the 1975 criteria, (c) the number he referred to an appeal tribunal other than under the 1975 criteria, (d) the number dealt with other than by reference to an appeal tribunal, (e) the total and percentage where the original finding was (i) upheld and (ii) reversed, and (f) the total and percentage where the original punishment was (i) upheld and (ii) reversed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Appeals to the Secretary of State against police disciplinary decisions are made under section 37 of the Police Act 1964, as amended by section 103 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Available figures for the years 1986 to 1989 are as follows:

Table 1
Procedure

	1986	1987	1988	1989
Appeals received	52	53	60	56
Appeals withdrawn before decision reached	6	7	9	8
Appeals determined	46	46	51	48
Referred to a tribunal	34	33	46	43
Not referred to a tribunal	12	13	5	5

Table 2
Outcome

	1986		1987		1988		1989
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
Original finding:
(a) Upheld	21	95	13	52	12	75	5	83
(b) Reversed	1	5	12	48	4	25	1	17
Original punishment:
(a) Upheld	32	74	26	56	33	65	16	64
(b) Varied	11	26	20	44	18	35	9	36
Appeals not yet concluded	—	—	—	—	—	—	24	—

The figures in table 2 do not add up to the total appeals determined in table 1. Appeals can be made against finding or punishment or both and may cover more than one disciplinary charge. Where appeals cover more than one charge some charges may be upheld and others not. A decision is not shown in table 2 as upheld unless it was upheld in respect of all charges.

The final decision on all appeals is made personally by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each of the last four years for which figures are available, the number of complaints made against the police in England and Wales falling within each disciplinary offence contained in the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1985; how many of those were substantiated and how many were unsubstantiated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers of complaints against the police, the numbers substantiated and the numbers unsubstantiated are published annually in the reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, copies of which are available in the Library. Complaints are not categorised under the same headings as offences against the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1985.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) of 2 April, Official Report, column 434, when he expects to make available his evaluation of the outcome of the trials of electronic tagging.

Mr. John Patten: I expect the evaluation to be completed in the summer. Its results will then be published in due course.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding the number of Metropolitan police person hours and the cost arising from the recent ambulance dispute.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police used about 658,000 man hours in providing assistance to the ambulance service during the dispute. The force has charged the South West Thames regional health authority £9·68 million for its assistance.

Commission for Racial Equality

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation he is prepared to grant Mr. David Owen of the firm Elizabeth the Chef of Leamington Spa for his out-of-pocket costs involved in preparing to defend a case brought by the Commission for Racial Equality where the complainant withdrew her allegation two days before the hearing.

Mr. John Patten: The question of costs in industrial tribunal cases is a matter for the tribunal. The complaint here was not brought by the Commission for Racial Equality, but by an individual, the commission exercising its role of providing for advice or assistance, in this case through a firm of solicitors. The Secretary of State has no responsibility in law in these matters.

Hong Kong

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the work force in Hong Kong, as categorised and sub-categorised in the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Bill, selection for citizenship: explanatory note, will be eligible for British passports.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Approximately 22·5 per cent of people employed in Hong Kong work in the eligible occupations mentioned in the explanatory note; others may be able to apply in due course in the residual category of the general allocation section. It is not possible to say at this stage what proportion of those mentioned above will meet the eligibility criteria set out in paragraph 4(1) of schedule 1 to the Bill.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many issues of arms there have been to each police force, and in total, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information is set out in the table.

Issue of police firearms for incidents involving criminal or other persons known or believed to be armed

Broadcasting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the governors of the British Broadcasting Corporation to discuss the corporation's education and training role; and what is his policy on the dissemination of video recordings promoting the services of companies associated with quasi-religious cults.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman and governors of the BBC from time to time to discuss a wide range of broadcasting issues.

Under the Video Recordings Act 1984 the British Board of Film Classification has a duty to classify videos in terms of their availability to particular audiences, but those concerned with sport, religion or music are exempted.

The Government understand the concern which some people have about the activities of certain cults and we have considerable sympathy with those whose rights have been adversely affected by such groups, but so long as they operate within the law we do not believe that it would be right to decide that some religious movements are acceptable and some not.

Penal Establishments

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles are currently held in penal establishments (a) on remand and (b) under sentence; in which establishments they are held; and how many of them are from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the table "Persons aged under 17 held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 31 December 1989: by establishment, type of prisoner and ethnic origin", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Chatlines

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost so far of telephone calls made on 0898 numbers (a) by members of the Metropolitan police and (b) by employees of his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 30 March 1990]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information requested is not available. Possible abuse came to the attention of the Metropolitan police with the introduction of itemised billing and immediate steps were taken to extend call barring of 0898 numbers throughout the force.

All the major telephone exchanges which serve the Home Office are programmed to bar the use of 0898 numbers. There is a small number of private lines, connected direct to local telephone exchange and cell phones which cannot be barred. Itemised billing has been introduced too recently for any worthwhile figures to be obtained on 0898 costs for these services.

Consultancies

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount spent by the Metropolitan police in 1989 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases; if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Metropolitan police in 1989, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment; and what is the total amount that the Metropolitan police has budgeted to spend in the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 28 March 1990]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that Metropolitan police expenditure on management and computer consultancy contracts in 1989-90 is estimated to be £1,663,000.

The following is the list of contracts awarded in 1989:

Marshall Software Services Ltd.	Software consultancy to Command and Control Group
Logica Consultancy Ltd.	Voice network replacement project
Gresham Computer Services	Conversion of mainframe computer from DME language to VME language
Stonehenge Consultancy Services	Feasibility study for property management computer system (PREMISYS)
Digitus Ltd.	Support to Territorial Operations management information system (TOPSY)
JMS Telecommunications Ltd.	Support on development of communications network
Ron Baker Design Associates	Consultancy for the design of divisional annual reports
ICL	Technical support on hardware and software including installation of new system and super-dualling of two ICL 2988 machines
Plessey Telenet	Crime report information system
MFT	Consultancy on finance systems
PTC Communications Ltd.	Consultancy on traffic tickets systems
Geoff Ford	Consultancy on Mechnical and Electrical Branch cost information systems
Gibb	Consultancy on payroll system

HEALTH

Milk Tokens

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many firms supplying liquid milk against welfare tokens have indicated that they no longer intend to participate in the scheme after the changes proposed by his Department; and what proposals he is making to ensure that beneficiaries do not suffer.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 115 out of a total of 17,000 suppliers have indicated an intention to cease participation in the scheme. However, very few beneficiaries have reported that their normal supplier has refused to accept tokens. Local social security offices are able to offer advice about alternative suppliers. Where, exceptionally, the local office is satisfied that a token cannot be exchanged for milk a beneficiary can receive a payment in lieu.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions will be made for people with disabilities in self-governing trust hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the Bill proposals, district health authorities will be responsible for planning and securing through contracts a comprehensive range of services, which will include services for people with disabilities, to meet the health care needs of their population. In doing this they will contract with a range of service providers, including NHS trusts.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what application the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 will have to people with disabilities in self-governing trust hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National Health Service trusts will remain an integral part of the NHS and will accordingly remain subject to a range of legislation which applies to NHS facilities.

Nurses

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many regrading appeals for nurses remain outstanding in each regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information concerning appeals to employing authorities in England is not collected centrally.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report the different kinds of conversion courses currently available to nurses within the National Health Service in England and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has approved courses to enable enrolled nurses to convert to being registered general nurses, registered mental nurses, registered nurses in mental handicap, first level nurses trained in the nursing of sick children, and registered general nurses and district nurse (joint qualification). Individual courses approved by the board can vary in a number of respects. Increased use is being made of distance and open learning approaches. Recognition of prior learning can mean that the traditional 52-week conversion course can be reduced in length to as little as 26 weeks.

The hon. Member may wish to approach my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales about the position in Wales.

Therapy

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified (1) speech therapists, (2) physiotherapists and (3) occupational therapists are employed centrally by his Department; and in each category what are the numbers employed in the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: The Department currently employs one speech therapy officer, two physiotherapy officers and two occupational therapy officers, all full-time. The speech therapy officer and one physiotherapy officer are on secondment from the National Health Service. One occupational therapy officer is on secondment from a local authority. The table shows the whole-time equivalents of qualified therapists employed in the National Health Service at 30 September 1988, the latest date for which figures are available:

	Number
Physiotherapists	9,590
Occupational therapists	4,870
Speech therapists	2,730

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the number of qualified speech therapists employed centrally by his Department to oversee policy designed to overcome the gap between the 20·5 speech therapists (whole-time equivalents) per 100,000 population required if current methods of intervention were maintained and assistants were used, and the 5·7 national average figure per 100,000 now available.

Mr. Freeman: No. The Department's speech therapy officer is already actively working with other officials to consider the problem of matching the supply and demand for speech therapy. I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 26 March at column 46.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the duties of the therapy officers employed by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The duties of the therapy officers are to provide advice and support to Ministers and to other officials on matters concerned with all aspects of policy for the development of therapy services, including education and employment, in the National Health Service, local government and the voluntary and private sectors, to assist in taking forward policies relating to these services, and to liaise with professional bodies and other relevant organisations and services.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the review of the functions of therapy officers; and if he will state the objectives of the review.

Mr. Freeman: The objectives of the review are set out in the terms of reference which are as follows:

(a) to review the value and costs of the service provided to the Department by the therapy officers;
(b) to consider other models for the provision of advice on therapy matters to the Department;
(c) to advise on whether the present arrangements constitute the most effective use of resources for the provision of this advice;
(d) if not, to advise on whether an alternative model or models would be more effective, and if so which, and
(e) without prejudice to the consideration of other models, to review the budgetary and management arrangements for therapy officers employed by the Department, and to make recommendations.

Apart from the letter which the right hon. Member sent my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State on 29 March we have received no representations about the review.

Access to Ministers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if (1) the therapy officers, (2) the chief medical officer and (3) the chief nursing officer in his Department have direct access to him.

Mr. Freeman: Therapy officers give advice on a wide range of professional issues to policy branches which take it into account as appropriate in offering advice to Ministers. The chief medical officer and the chief nursing officer have direct access to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State.

Health Reform Group

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) of 20 February, Official Report, column 695, what is the Health Reform Group; and who are its members.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Reform Group is an independent group of medical practitioners who support the Government's proposals to improve the Health Service. We have no details of its membership.

Awards

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost of running his Department's office of the central committee on distinction awards.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The total cost for the year ended 31 March 1989 (the latest available) was £131,188. This figure was made up as follows: Department of Health staff costs £81,684, committee members' expenses £32,954 and salaries of the chairman and vice-chairman of the advisory committee on distinction awards £16,550.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are used when making hospital consultants merit awards.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no formal criteria for awards. The chairman of the advisory committee on distinction awards issued general guidelines to members of the regional and higher awards committees this year and a copy has been placed in the Library. The committees look for qualities such as clinical excellence, special achievement in direct services to patients, training, teaching and research and outstanding management effort.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will publish the number of holders of hospital consultants' merit awards in each district health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department does not maintain statistics on distinction awards in each district health authority.

Drug Budgets

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue the further working paper on the implementation of indicative drug budgets to which he referred in his answer to the hon. Member for Northampton, South of 30 January, Official Report, column 130.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to publish in May a further working paper on the operation of the indicative prescribing scheme.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how soon after the month end the monthly statement on prescribing costs will be issued to general practitioner practices, family practitioner committees and regional health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Monthly statements of expenditure on drugs, medicines and listed appliances prescribed by general practitioners will normally be issued at all levels within four weeks of the end of the month in which the costs were incurred.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he estimates it will cost his Department in the current financial year for payments that arise from claims of compensation for medical negligence.

Mr. Freeman: For 1990-91 the cost of payments in compensation for medical negligence by hospital doctors is estimated at £50 million for the United Kingdom. Not all of this will be met by health authorities. On 1 January 1990 the financial responsibility for this compensation was transferred from the medical defence organisations to the National Health Service. Because hospital doctors in the National Health Service are no longer required to subscribe to a medical defence organisation, English health authorities have about £27 million (£34 million United Kingdom) available in 1990-91 from the contributions made by them as employers to doctors' subscriptions.

In addition, under the arrangements for the transfer of financial responsibility the medical defence organisations have set up funds from their reserves which health authorities can draw on to help meet the cost of the more substantial cases which should enable the cost to be kept within the original provision for subscriptions.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many brain-damaged children have been awarded compensation for medical negligence in the past five years; what has been the average size of award in each year: and what have been the highest and lowest awards.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available centrally.

General Practitioners

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recent available figures for average general practitioner list sizes; and what steps are being taken to have more up-to-date figures available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information provided by family practitioner committees (FPCs) in census returns enable the Department to calculate average list sizes.

The average general practitioner list size for England at 1 October 1988 (the latest available) was 1,999.

From 1 April 1990 all family practitioner committees will have computer systems for general practitioner payments. The intention is that the Department's information requirements will be taken directly from these rather than from manual returns as currently.

It is expected that this will lead to more timely submission of data for the 1 October 1990 census and beyond.

Dead Register

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of the dead register currently maintained by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Freeman: The dead register consists of more than 80 million index cards stored by local authority area. These cards relate to people who changed address, left the country, died or changed name during the period of national registration between 1939 and 1952. The space needed for computerisation of the National Health Service central register has necessitated moving the dead register away from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys site and it is now costing nearly £50,000 per annum in storage.

The main usage is for medical research studies and currently there are very few users. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys considers that it is unnecessary to maintain the dead register for its own core needs and has approached the Medical Research Council about the need to maintain it for medical research purposes. In the event that this is considered necessary the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys would need payment. A decision is required by the summer when the renewal of the storage contract is due.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the final cost to each regional health authority of cover using police and armed forces and other bodies during the ambulance workers' dispute; and what was the total cost to public funds of the dispute.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of his latest estimate of the total costs arising out of the recent ambulance dispute; and how much has been (a) paid and (b) requested from authorities responsible for providing (i) military, (ii) police and (iii) non-NHS ambulance services during the period of the dispute.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cost to the end of February 1990 (the last month for which bills have been received from the Ministry of Defence) was £4·8 million. The final cost of military assistance is not yet known.

Information is not held centrally about the cost to regional health authorities of using police and other non-military bodies during the recent dispute.

Defensive Medicine

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken on defensive medicine in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. The introduction of medical audit will ensure that doctors examine the nature and appropriateness of the care that they provide.

General Practitioners, Cumbria

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the decision of the Cumbria family practitioner committee to allow the general practitioner practice of Dickinson, Wheeler and Reed specifically to exclude the area Raffles, and Raffles in Carlisle, from their practice.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. I understand that the practice concerned is in Dalston and some distance from Carlisle in a rural area. This practice has never encouraged people from the urban area to register with it. There are in fact some 40 doctors serving the population of Carlisle, including the two estates.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Uganda

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid, and in what form, was given by Her Majesty's Government to Uganda for each of the last five years.

Mrs. Chalker: Gross British bilateral aid to Uganda over the period 1984-88, the latest five-year period for which figures are available, was as follows:

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Programme aid	1·126	0·206	0·005	0·016	17·126
Other financial aid	0·474	2·123	1·524	2·980	2·941
Technical assistance	2·701	2·867	2·784	3·510	6·392
Pensions	0·939	0·896	0·852	1·996	0·354
Emergency aid	0·173	0·244	1·056	0·070	0·436
Debt relief	1·667	1·660	1·166	0·983	0·631
Commonwealth Development Corporation		1·175	1·189	2·624	0·710
Total	7·080	9·171	8·576	12·179	28·590

In addition, Britain's share of multilateral aid to Uganda over the period 1984-87 was:

	£ millions
1984	8·58
1985	7·70
1986	5·31
1987	9·11

Figures for later years are not yet available.

Grassland Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects he will be able to make a statement on the outcome of the Minister for Overseas Development's contacts with Professor Hall about grassland research.

Mrs. Chalker: My officials will be holding discussions with Professor Hall and other interested parties such as the Natural Resources Institute during the next six weeks. I will therefore be writing to the hon. Member at the end of May, by when we should know the position.

Caribbean

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of assistance given to islands in the Caribbean.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to her reply, 2 April 1990, c. 418]: I regret that the reply that I gave my hon. Friend omitted the separate but substantial sums provided to Jamaica through the Commonwealth Development Corporation. In 1988 these amounted to £14·647 million.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Lancashire Estates (Income)

60. Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the principal determining factors which affect the income of the estates for which he is responsible in Lancashire.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The factors which affect the income of the estates are, in general, those affecting the agricultural economy. Most of the farms are dairy units and I am pleased to say that the farmers concerned have adapted well to the regime of milk quotas.

Local Government Finance

61. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from tenants of the Duchy regarding the community charge.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have had no representations from Duchy tenants either for or against the community charge.

Visits

62. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to pay an offical visit to the Duchy.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no plans to do so in the very near future.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to visit St. Helens.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no plans to visit St. Helens at present.

Official Duties

63. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much time he has spent on Duchy business since the last time he answered oral questions.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I spend up to a quarter of my time carrying out my duties as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and as a member of the Government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Guillotines

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Lord President of the Council when guillotines were first introduced on Lords amendments; and if he will list all such guillotines and supplemental guillotines since 1979.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The first occasion on which an allocation of time order governing consideration of Lords amendments was made was on 27 April 1953, when a supplemental order guillotining debate on Lords amendments to the Transport Bill was agreed to.

The following allocation of time orders relating to consideration of Lords amendments have been made since the beginning of the 1979-80 Session:

Session	Bill	Date	Type of order

Sound System

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will make a statement on the sound system in the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: During recent months, I have received a number of representations from hon. and right hon. Members about the quality of the sound in the Chamber and the matter has also been raised several times on the Floor of the House.

The sound system in the Chamber has been under review for the last 10 years, originally under the aegis of the former Sound Broadcasting Committee. The Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House inherited the responsibilities of the Sound Broadcasting Committee and has continued to keep the issue under active consideration. When the Select Committee came into being in 1988 it was decided that, although there might be doubts about the efficiency of the sound system, there should be no attempt to make significant changes either for or during the television experiment. The sound system in the Chamber at present is, therefore, almost exactly the same and works under exactly the same system of operation as it has done for more than five years.

There were complaints earlier this year that microphones at the Dispatch Box were not providing a good signal of the Front-Bench speakers. A series of experiments were undertaken with different microphones at the Dispatch Box and new placings of the microphones above the Government and Opposition Front-Bench speakers. The present microphones and their placings, designed to overcome the loss of audibility when Front-Bench speakers turn to address Members behind them, provide the best combination so far.

There have also been complaints about the quality of reception in the small loudspeakers in the back of the Benches. The level of amplification has not, as had been suggested, been lowered to suit the demands of broadcasting. In fact the level of sound has been raised as far as possible without causing feedback but it is clear that some Members still have difficulty in hearing when there is a lot of noise in the Chamber. During the Easter recess, therefore, an inspection was carried out with the support of the BBC research department to evaluate the extent to which the existing amplification equipment is performing to its original specifications and to identify possible alternative systems for later tests.

This work is part of a study being undertaken by a working party under the chairmanship of the supervisor of broadcasting. The working party is examining the technical options for the modernisation or replacement of the sound system. In addition, Mr. Richard Wright, head of sound operations for news and current affairs at the BBC, has been appointed as a specialist adviser to the Select Committee and will also assist the working party in its deliberations. The working party will report to the Chairman of the Select Committee by early June. As a separate issue, the working party will also address the question of sound quality in Committee Rooms.

However, the general conclusion likely to be reached is that the sound system, which was installed several decades ago, is unlikely to have an effective life beyond the next five years. Given the inevitably long lead-time associated with drawing up the specifications and costings for a new system, and with approval by the House and installation, it is vital that work should begin now.

The first practical steps towards identifying the tecnnical options have already been taken, with the recent installation on the Opposition side of the Chamber of a single new type of smaller "capacitator" microphone. This has produced good results in terms of audibility, although a problem of reduced physical stability needs further work.

It is, however, important to stress that the constraints of the layout and architecture of the Chamber will always limit the scope for improvement in audibility. The simultaneous requirement for the House to be able to hear the Member with the Floor speaking at a normal volume, whilst avoiding undue distraction from the inevitable background noise in a lively debating Chamber, is likely to stretch even the most up-to-date technology to its limits. When the House is very noisy only a system of individual microphones and individual hearing aids would be able to cope; and this, it has always been understood, would be unacceptable to the House.

The overriding concern of the Select Committee will be to ensure that the House is equipped with as efficient a system of sound reinforcement as possible, subject only to the practical constraints I have outlined.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Widows' Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many widows in Scotland are in receipt of widows' benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As at 31 March 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of widows in Scotland in receipt of widow's benefit was 39,000.

Local Government Finance (Rebates)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were receiving (a) domestic rates and (b) poll tax rebates in Scotland in each year from 1986-87; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of total domestic ratepayers or poll tax payers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table.

1986-87	785	38
1988-89	640	31

	Number of individual chargepayers receiving rebates (000s)	Proportion of registered chargepayers per cent.
1989-90	1,150	30

Source: Estimated number of recipients derived from local authority rate rebate and community charge benefit caseload returns. Housing stock figures and community charge register information from Scottish Office.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a table for the following household types: (a) single pensioner, (b) other single adult, (c) two adults, (d) three or more adults and (e) all households listing the following detail: (i) the number receiving rate bills, (ii) the total value of their gross rate bills, (iii) the numbers entitled to rebates and (iv) the total value of rebates in 1987-88 and 1988-89 in Scotland.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [pursuant to her reply, 19 March 1990, c. 402]: I regret that a correction is necessary. The estimated number of ratepayers in Scotland receiving rate rebates in 1988-89 is 640,000 and not 688,000 as shown in the published table.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has received to "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" from the Disability Alliance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Disability Alliance has sent me a written response and was represented at a meeting that I held on 5 April with the Disability Benefits Consortium to discuss "The Way Ahead." We shall give careful consideration to all the alliance's comments in carrying forward the detailed work on our proposals.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has given any consideration to the introduction of a basic minimum income for all disabled people, irrespective of how their disability arose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: There is a number of factors which have led us to conclude that a single disability income scheme is not the right course of action. First, we have aimed to provide a more simple and coherent system of financial help for disabled people. A single scheme which strived to cover a whole range of specific needs would be significantly more complicated than existing benefits, both for claimants to understand and for doctors and staff to adjudicate and administer. Secondly, by introducing the sort of points-related benefit suggested by some commentators, an unacceptably high number of people would stand to lose benefit entitlement. One of our major objectives is to provide a system which can get help quickly and effectively to those most in need.

Residential Homes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many elderly persons in private residential or nursing homes who are in receipt of income support have fees which are below the income support limits by: (a) less than £5 a week, (b) £5 to £10 per week, (c) £10 to £20 per week, (d) £20 to £30 per week, (e) £30 to £40 per week, (f) £40 to £50 per week, (g) £50 to £60 per week, (h) £60 to £70 per week, (i) £70 to £80 per week, and (j) over £80 per week; what percentage each of these totals is of (i) all elderly residents in these houses and (ii) all residents in receipt of income support; and if he will provide information so far as possible broken down between residential and nursing homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is not available. Data is collected on a sample basis, the size of which precludes the provision of reliable estimates in the form requested.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of claims submitted on vibration white finger to the two local Birkenhead offices; and if he will detail the number of staff hours so far involved in processing these claims.

Mr. Scott: A total of 1,141 new claims and 835 review applications have been received to date by the two social security offices serving the Birkenhead area. Details of staff hours expended on these particular claims are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Surplus School Places

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each county in Wales, the number of surplus places in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools; and if he will give details of the criteria he uses to ascertain surplus place numbers.

Mr. Roberts: The table shows the total number of surplus places in primary and secondary schools in each county based on the latest available figures received from each local education authority. The criteria recommended for determining the capacities of schools are set out in Welsh Office circular 20/88, "Educational Quality in Wales: The Response to Falling School Rolls" for primary schools, whilst for secondary schools they are in Welsh Office circular 47/88, "Admission of Pupils to County and Voluntary Schools". Copies of both circulars are in the Library of the House.

Surplus Places in Maintained Schools in Wales

County	Primary	Secondary	TOTAL
Clwyd	9,964	2,493	12,907

South Glamorgan	6,996	6,935	13,929
West Glamorgan	2,021	11,218	13,239
Wales	57,616	43,212	100,828

Orthodontic Surgeons

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those health authorities in Wales which employ the services of an orthodontic consultant surgeon.

Mr. Grist: All district health authorities in Wales employ the services of an orthodontic consultant surgeon.

Interest Rates

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received, since occupying his present post, on the effect on new investment of high interest rates.

Mr. Peter Walker: Although precise figures are not available, I have received very few representations about the effect of interest rates on new investment.

Health Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners and general practitioner practices in each county in Wales have indicated an interest in becoming holders of a practice budget.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the table:

Family practitioner committee	Number of general practitioners	Number of GP practices
Clwyd	34	6
Dyfed	27	6
Gwent	12	3
Gwynedd	4	1
Mid Glamorgan	53	9
Powys	14	3
South Glamorgan	26	5
West Glamorgan	47	9

FPC areas are co-terminous with counties.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the contribution that will be made by charitable giving and fund-raising towards the deficit projected by the South Glamorgan health authority during 1990-91.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has made no such estimates. He would not expect the authority to rely upon donations to meet any part of the deficit which it is currently projecting, since it would clearly be unwise to become dependent upon a source of funding which may not be recurrent. Donations can be of considerable assistance in funding developments which might not otherwise be given priority by the authority within its modified revenue and capital allocations. However, they should not be used in substitution for firm budgetary control.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the extent of the contribution made by charitable donations and fund-raising events to the funding of the Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I welcome the voluntary and charitable contributions which members of the public and organisations wish to make to health authorities. Sometimes such gifts are associated with the funding of a specific service or facilities and on other occasions they are not. In each case it is a private matter between the health authority and the giver. Such arrangements are not covered by any central guidelines and have not been the subject of departmental initiative.

In determining health authority spending allocations voluntary funding and charitable donations are not considered and no central record of such gifts is maintained.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cattle have been confirmed as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each county of Wales for each year since the disease was discovered.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each county in Wales during 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 (to 13 April) was:

County	Number of cases 1987	1988	1989	[1]1990
Clwyd	0	13	58	31
Dyfed	8	64	212	111
Mid Glamorgan	0	5	15	3
South Glamorgan	0	8	29	3
West Glamorgan	0	1	3	0
Gwent	0	20	60	32
Gwynedd	0	7	26	8
Powys	0	13	56	31

[1] (to 13 April).
There were no cases reported in 1986.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report in relation to each local authority in Wales and the average for all local authorities in Wales for the financial year 1990-91 (a) the level of net expenditure per head of population, (b) the level of net expenditure per head of population as set out in the Government's assessment of expenditure need, (c) the level of income per head of population from personal, standard and collective community charges, (d) the income from revenue support grant per head of population, (e) the income from non-domestic rates per head of population and (f) the income from other sources per head of population.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is given in the table:

[1] For consistency, the population denominator used throughout the table is the relevant population. This is defined in the Distribution of Non-Domestic Rates (Relevant Population) Report for Wales. Note that this definition excludes those aged under 18 years.
[2] Provisional budgeted net revenue expenditure as reported by local authorities.
[3] In the case of districts, the transfer from the collection fund; in the case of counties, the aggregate of precepts on the relevant charging authorities' collection funds.
[4] The provisional estimated income from specific and supplementary grants and from sales, fees, charges and other income. Note that these amounts are not included in net expenditure.

Flooding

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action he intends to take to avert flooding in the reenlands of south Gwent;

(2) if he will calculate the likelihood of a major flood in the Peterstone-Wentlooge and St. Brides areas of Gwent in the event of a tidal surge;

(3) what reports he has received of the overtopping of the sea defences in south Gwent, and the flooding in Newport and Caerleon during the recent storms; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make an assessment of the expected rise in sea levels in the Severn estuary as a result of global warming and its effect on sea and river defences;

(5) whether he has received any representations from the National Rivers Authority and other bodies on action that may be required to improve the sea walls in the Peterstone-Wentlooge and St. Brides areas of Gwent to reduce the risk of flooding.

Mr. Grist: There will always be some risk of a major flood in the Peterstone-Wentlooge and St. Brides areas of Gwent during extreme events.

Under section 136 of the Water Act 1989 the National Rivers Authority has a duty to exercise a general supervision over all matters relating to flood defence. The Department is aware that overtopping of sea defences occurred in south Gwent and that there was flooding in Newport and Caerleon during the recent storms. No representations have been received on action that may be required to improve sea walls in the area specified.

Current estimates suggest that mean sea levels are likely to be between 25 and 40 cm higher by the year 2050. It is not possible to establish with any degree of certainty the degree of sea level rise on a local basis. The increased funding that is being provided by the Department for sea defence schemes is intended to build up the programme to enable defences to withstand the currently expected risk.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from the National Farmers Union of Wales in respect of the operation and level of payments of the ESA scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is yet in a position to publish the report resulting from the recent United Kingdom mission investigating the political situation in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 31 January.

Iraq

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position relating to arms sales to Iraq; what agreements or treaties prohibit such exports; and what routine measures are taken to enforce compliance by British manufacturers.

Mr. Waldegrave: Exports of defence-related material to both Iran and Iraq are governed by the guidelines announced by the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the House on 29 October 1985. These are applied on a case-by-case basis in the light of prevailing circumstances, including the ceasefire and developments in the peace negotiations. Under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty we control the export of sensitive nuclear-related material and technology. As a member of the missile technology control regime, we control exports of missile-related material and technology. Our export controls are implemented under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989. All export licence applications are given the most careful scrutiny.

Libya

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of the capability of the Rabta chemical plant in Libya to produce chemical warfare agents.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no doubt that the Rabta plant is intended to produce chemical weapons on a large scale. It remains unclear what has been the effect of the reported fire on 14 March.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

6. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: The channel tunnel is a private sector project. I understand that more than 40 per cent. of tunnelling has been completed and is now progressing at record levels.

44. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rate of return he expects will be secured by British Rail on its investment to be undertaken as a result of the prospective opening of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: The real rate of return on British Rail's investment for channel tunnel services is expected to be at least 8 per cent.

52. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the channel tunnel link and the site of the second London terminal.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has received a large number of such representations.

53. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has received regarding channel tunnel links with Cornwall.

Mr. Portillo: I have received a number of representations about channel tunnel links with Cornwall.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what evacuation procedures Eurotunnel has designed to ensure that people who have impaired hearing or impaired eyesight can be quickly evacuated in the event of fire;

(2) what tests there have been to examine the effects of a high-speed derailment in the channel tunnel;

(3) what consideration he has given to the conclusions of the intergovernmental commission and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority on segregation of passengers from light vehicles, passenger cars and coaches from LPG;

(4) if he has any plans to increase the time fire doors on the shuttle rakes are required to resist fire to match the time Eurotunnel is given to rescue passengers from a train stranded in the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he has set any criteria for the numbers of drivers required to be present at all times on the two locomotives with which each train using the channel tunnel is to be equipped;

(6) how many evacuees from a carriage carrying passengers not segregated from their vehicles a neighbouring carriage with 50 cm between each vehicle in it could accommodate; and what projections he has made of how long it would take to transfer the passengers from one carriage to another in such circumstances;

(7) what criteria he has laid down for the time taken to evacuate a large coach full of people in smoke; whether he has any plans to vary the criteria where large numbers of elderly or handicapped people are carried; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what reports his Department has studied into the effects of a high-speed derailment in the channel tunnel and the safety of passengers travelling in train carriages and the safety of passengers travelling in their cars with full fuel tanks;

(9) if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority's report "Non-segregation of Drivers and Passengers from their Vehicles";

(10) if the service tunnel of the channel tunnel will be able to be used to evacuate passengers safely at the same time as it is being used to deploy rescue teams and emergency services to the scene of an incident.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr Vaz) on 8 January, Official Report, column 464, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr Warren) on 22 January, Official Report, column 491.

Approval of Eurotunnel's proposed designs and operating procedures is a matter for the Channel Tunnel Intergovernmental Commission which is advised on safety matters by the independent Channel Tunnel Safety Authority.

The safety authority has now published its report reviewing the principal factors on which it based its advice to the intergovernmental commission on the non-segregation of drivers and passengers from their vehicles. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The report refers to the authority's view that drivers and passengers should not be allowed to travel in vehicles containing or carrying LPG. With regard to the effects of a high-speed derailment in the tunnel, the report records the authority's stipulation that Eurotunnel should carry out a special study of the behaviour of rolling stock under accident conditions. I understand that the authority is discussing with Eurotunnel the exact nature of the further tests required.

Eurotunnel's operating rules will have to cover matters such as the number of train drivers required to be present on the locomotives and the evacuation procedures for passengers, including the elderly and those with disabilities. Under the concession agreement, Eurotunnel is required to submit these rules for intergovernmental commission approval. When it does so, it will be for the safety authority to advise on whether the proposals are acceptable. Section 19 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 requires Eurotunnel to obtain from the intergovernmental commission a certificate stating that the commission is satisfied with Eurotunnel's code of practice on the conveyance of disabled persons.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to receive from British Rail its investment proposals for the trains to be used for the through passenger services to be introduced from the continent to the north of Britain.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that negotiations on the price of the trains are continuing and that BR now intends to submit its proposals in the summer.

Roll on/Roll off Ferries

8. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to take powers to require improvements in the design of roll on/roll off ferries.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport already has such powers by virtue of the Merchant Shipping Act 1979. On 2 April we announced the results of a Department of Transport-sponsored research programme into ways of improving the safety of ro-ro passenger ferries. This work will have significant implications for developments in ferry design throughout the world, and we have already taken steps to ensure its full consideration at the International Maritime Organisation next month.

Disabled People

13. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans any further measures to promote improved access to means of transport by disabled people.

Mr. Atkins: Our plans are set out comprehensively in the document, "Transport and Disability: a Statement of Aims and Priorities".

36. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve transport facilities for people with disabilities.

Mr. Atkins: Our plans are set out in "Transport and Disability: a Statement of Aims and Priorities".

We are seeking to make public transport easier to use including development of wheelchair access. We are working with vehicle designers and manufacturers to influence car design and control modifications, so as to increase opportunities for personal mobility for even the most severely disabled people.

We are also developing guidelines on design for pedestrian areas to help elderly and disabled people.

Electrification

15. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received for further electrification of the British Rail network.

Mr. Portillo: In the last two years alone, we have approved a further four electrification schemes for British Rail. We would welcome any further proposals from British Rail which meet its investment criteria.

50. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the cost of electrifying the east coast rail line north of Edinburgh.

Mr. Portillo: It is for British Rail to estimate the cost of any electrification schemes which it wishes to propose.

Traffic Congestion (London)

16. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he now intends to spend the £3·7 billion allocated to the road building plans for London on measures which will help to reduce congestion in the capital.

Mr. Parkinson: No financial provision was made for schemes recommended by consultants, so their rejection does not make funds available to spend on other measures. Investment of more than £6 billion is already planned to improve the transport systems that serve London.

32. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement about his plans to reduce the current levels of traffic congestion in central London.

Mr. Atkins: We are planning to start a red route pilot scheme from Highgate to Commercial road in the summer. Discussions with the local authorities are under way and there will be consultation with residents and traders. We shall also be consulting on the legislation to implement the proposals in "Traffic in London", which will be brought forward at the earliest opportunity.

33. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the introduction of traffic-calming measures in London.

Mr. Atkins: Traffic-calming measures in London are most appropriate to local roads, which are the responsibility of the local authorities. My Department will consider grant where there are safety benefits. We will be discussing with the authorities concerned any proposals they may have for appropriate measures associated with red routes and the modest trunk road improvements we are proposing following consultation on the London assessment studies.

London Regional Transport

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about investment in London Regional Transport since 1986.

Mr. Portillo: Investment by London Regional Transport has increased by 50 per cent. in real terms since 1985-86 to £425 million in 1989-90. Over the next three years it will double again.

31. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set performance targets for the standard of service offered by London Regional Transport.

Mr. Portillo: I have already done so. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 20 December at column 280.

Horne Report

20. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received seeking early implementation of the Horne report.

Mr. Atkins: We have received many representations from hon. Members and others seeking implementation of the Horne report's recommendations for control of public utilities' street works.

MV Marine

21. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the marine accident investigation branch has yet received a copy of the Bahamian authorities' report into the loss of the MV Marine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The marine accident investigation branch has not yet received a copy of the Bahamian authorities' report into the loss of the MV Marine. The sad loss of this vessel, and her six British crew, was debated in this House on 27 March in an Adjournment debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter).

Newcastle Western Bypass

22. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the next stage of the Newcastle western bypass to open.

Mr. Atkins: On current planning the next stage of the bypass is due for completion in October 1990.

Midland Railway Line

23. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the British Railways Board about investment in the midland St. Pancras-Sheffield railway line.

Mr. Portillo: Whilst we have not had any recent discussions with British Rail on this, I know that British Rail will be providing faster trains in the new May timetable and we would be happy to see any further investment proposals which British Rail considers worth while.

British Rail (Meetings)

24. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what will be discussed.

25. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will next meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Parkinson: I next plan to meet the chairman of British Rail on Wednesday 25 April when we shall discuss a variety of railway issues.

30. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects were discussed.

37. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Rail on 19 April when they discussed a variety of railway issues.

34. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

42. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

43. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

54. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) earlier today.

British Rail Engineering

27. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made to clawback any of the profit made by the British Rail Engineering Company following its privatisation.

Mr. Portillo: The claw-back provision agreed between British Rail and the purchasers applies to profits made in the medium term from the sale or development of BREL land.

Langbaurgh (Roads)

28. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Cleveland county council on roads in Langbaurgh, in particular the Guisborough bypass.

Mr. Atkins: Officials of the Department and Cleveland county council regularly meet to discuss the road network improvement programme in the county. The Guisborough bypass is one of the county council schemes which is raised for discussion from time to time.

Transport Investment Policy

29. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the amount of Government money to be invested in each form of transport over the next three years in order to achieve the stated aim of a balanced transport policy.

Mr. Parkinson: During the next three years, investment in transport by my Department and the nationalised industries for which I am responsible will come to £11·5 billion and plans would support some £2·5 billion by English local authorities. About £7 billion will be invested in rail, bus, air and ports and some £7 billion on roads if local authorities' present allocation between modes continues.

Manchester Airport

35. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will pay an official visit to Manchester airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend visited Manchester airport in February. He and I have also met airport company directors on a number of occasions.

London Underground

38. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of London Underground Ltd. to discuss improvements promised for the Metropolitan line.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of London Underground Limited to discuss various matters, including service improvements. Improvements being considered by LUL for the Metropolitan line include the modernisation of rolling stock, resignalling and a new train reversing facility at Moorgate, to provide greater flexibility and speed of response to unforeseen service difficulties. From 14 May, services from Amersham and Uxbridge will run to the City all day, rather than just at peak times as at present. The quality of service objectives set by my right hon. Friend on 20 December 1989 are designed to ensure that passengers on all lines get the best service that London Underground can provide.

39. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of London Underground; and whether he will be discussing matters of safety.

Mr. Portillo: I meet the chairman regularly. Safety is the top priority and can be discussed at any time either at or outside our regular meetings.

London (Buses)

40. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to increase the use of buses in London.

Mr. Portillo: The Government believe that the use of buses in London will increase only if bus operators are able to offer improved standards of service. Our goal is to create an environment in which operators have the ability and the incentive to raise standards of service. Our policy of promoting competition in the London bus market, the quality of service objectives which we have set for LRT bus services and the proposals in "Traffic in London" are all intended to further this goal.

Third Party Insurance

41. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what administrative and legislative measures he proposes to take to reduce the number of vehicles being driven without third party insurance cover.

Mr. Atkins: Enforcement of motor insurance law is for the police, who have wide powers to inspect drivers' insurance certificates. We have no plans to change current legislation or administrative procedures.

Regional Airports

45. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of Government financial support for regional airports for the current financial year and for the previous year.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department authorised borrowing totalling £29 million in 1989-90 for the development of facilities at local authority airports. For 1990-91 borrowing approvals totalling £59 million will be available. The Department does not pay grant for airport development.

49. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made any estimates of the future growth of passenger traffic in regional airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's most recent air traffic forecasts for the United Kingdom, published in December 1988, predict that passenger movements at regional airports will be in the following ranges:

Million passengers per annum

	Number
1988	30·9
1995	42·1—51·0
2000	52·4—68·2
2005	62·6—87·4

The figures indicate that regional airports' share of United Kingdom passenger traffic is expected to increase from 33 per cent. to over 37 per cent. by 2005.

Network SouthEast

46. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received regarding the quality of service provided by Network SouthEast.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend receives many representations about Network SouthEast, the majority of which are about quality of service. He met the Central Transport Consultative Committee on 26 March.

Breath Tests

47. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on his policy on the introduction of properly monitored random breath tests for drivers.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary announced on 21 March (Official Report, c. 635) the Government's view that existing police powers to stop and breath test drivers strike the right balance between effective enforcement of the law and the freedom of the individual.

We shall continue to encourage the police to make the fullest possible use of the wide breath-testing powers available to them.

Rail Industry

48. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next proposes to meet representatives of the trade unions in the rail industry.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

British Rail (Privatisation)

51. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received supporting the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a number of such representations.

M1 (Lighting)

55. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the lighting of the northerly sections of the M1 motorway.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) earlier today.

Light Railway Projects

56. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many light railway projects are planned throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: The Docklands light railway is being extended to Bank and Beckton, and the Tyne and Wear Metro to Newcastle airport.

The Government are providing grant for the £110 million Manchester Metrolink which is to be designed, built, operated and maintained by the private sector. This Department is in touch with the promoters of light rail projects in south Yorkshire, Avon, west midlands, Cleveland, Croydon and Nottingham. We are also aware of about 30 other schemes, most at an early stage of consideration.

Ship Inspections

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he takes to inspect ships not registered in the United Kingdom concerning their compliance with international or recognised insurance requirements; and how many vessels were inspected for this specific purpose, or in the course of other inspections, respectively in 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Secretary of State has no general powers to inspect ships not registered in the United Kingdom regarding the insurance cover they carry. Special provisions apply to oil tankers. The 1969 civil liability convention for oil pollution damage, enacted in the United Kingdom under the Merchant Shipping (Oil Pollution) Act 1971, requires the Secretary of State to ensure the presence of an appropriate insurance certificate on board vessels which transport oil in bulk. The surveyor general's organisation examines these certificates under its port state control inspection procedure. Customs authorities are similarly charged with inspecting the certificates. There is no available information on how many insurance certificates of non-United Kingdom-registered bulk oil carriers were inspected in 1989, under this procedure.

Road Accidents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many drivers of 25 years and under were involved in traffic accidents where death or serious injury occurred for each of the last five years; what percentage were female; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of the total number of drivers involved in such accidents.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is given in the tables for the most recent five years for which figures are available. It refers to drivers of all motor vehicles, but excludes riders of two-wheeled motor vehicles.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to eliminate discharges from shipping harmful to the marine environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom has acceded to the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships 1973 and its protocol of 1978, and to two of the optional annexes. Annex I deals with pollution by oil, annex II by chemicals in bulk, annex III by harmful substances carried in packaged form and annex V by garbage. There is a legal obligation for ships registered in the United Kingdom to observe the requirements set out in annexes I, II and V. Annex III comes into force in 1991. Other ships in United Kingdom ports and waters also have to meet these requirements under the terms of the convention. The regulations are enforced by inspections in port and by the regular patrolling of shipping lanes by surveillance aircraft which have been increased by more than 60 per cent. with effect from the beginning of April 1990. These efforts have been strengthened by agreements reached last month at the third North sea conference in The Hague.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the application of annex V of the MARPOL convention 73/78.

Mr. McLoughlin: Annex V of the MARPOL convention 73/78 came into force internationally on 31 December 1988. The Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Pollution by Garbage) Regulations 1988 (statutory instrument 1988/2292) which came into force on the same day apply the provisions of this annex to United Kingdom ships, and to other ships when they are within the United Kingdom or its territorial waters. The Merchant Shipping (Reception Facilities for Garbage) Regulations 1988 (statutory instrument 1988/2293) require harbour authorities and terminal operators to provide reception facilities for garbage adequate to meet the needs of ships using the harbour or terminal. The Department has organised a poster campaign under the title "Over the Side is Over" to publicise the introduction of annex V and has issued a merchant shipping notice (M1389) to further advise seafarers of its provisions. Marine surveyors who visit ships as part of their duties are instructed to examine and report on the on board arrangements for handling garbage.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many movements of radioactive material there were in the United Kingdom in each of the years from 1980-1989; and for each year what percentage of movements were by road, what percentage by rail, and what percentage by air, respectively.

Mr. Atkins: My Department does not collect this information.

The International Atomic Energy Agency is setting up a database and it may be possible to provide information on the mode of transport in future years.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to prohibit the overnight parking in urban areas of vehicles and trains carrying flasks containing radioactive material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Radioactive Substances (Carriage by Road) (Great Britain) Regulations do not permit the overnight parking of road vehicles carrying loaded irradiated fuel flasks in any area to which the general public has access. Flasks carried by rail which need to be kept overnight for operational reasons are held in the security of BR Board's private premises. It would not be practicable to make the distinction in these arrangements between urban and non-urban areas.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy for local authorities with responsibility for emergency planning to be notified in advance of the movement of high-level radioactive material through their areas.

Mr. Atkins: Contingency plans exist to provide a rapid radiological response to any incident involving radioactive materials in transit. Guidance has been provided by the Home Office to local authority emergency services. Prior notification would not contribute further to transport safety.

Railways (Intensified Use)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to provide compensation for domestic householders affected by intensified use of existing rail lines.

Mr. Portillo: The Government have no plans to impose such an obligation.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations exist concerning the effects of noise in domestic households arising from intensified use of existing rail lines.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Investment Criteria

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last reviewed the investment criteria as between road and rail employed by his Department; and what weight he gives to environmental factors therein.

Mr. Portillo: We keep the investment criteria between road and rail under continuous review. Environmental factors, where relevant, are fully taken into account when reaching decisions, although in general it is difficult to place monetary values on environmental effects.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for tolls on the present Severn bridge to be collected only on the route into Wales.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to do so.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the report of the efficiency scrutiny of vehicle excise duty enforcement will be available.

Mr. Parkinson: I have today placed copies of this report in the Libraries of both Houses. The scrutiny has produced a substantial and lucid study of a major part of the activities of the Department's new driver and vehicle licensing agency. Its 28 principal recommendations propose improvements in the management and detailed policy objectives of vehicle excise duty enforcement. Some can be adopted without delay, some will need the agreement of the police, courts and other Departments, and some would require legislation. As is usual for efficiency scrutiny reports, an action plan on the recommendations is now to be drawn up.

M1 (Repairs)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the current repairs to the M1 between junctions 8 and 9 are complete what proportion of that section will have been widened to four lanes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The major maintenance works in progress consist of essential resurfacing and drainage renewal. No widening is being carried out at this stage.

Hertfordshire county council has recently been commissioned to carry out design work in widening of the M1 between junctions 6A and 10. Possible options will be considered carefully. The public will then be consulted and a preferred option announced in due course.

SCOTLAND

Leukaemia

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give a breakdown by age group of the figures supplied in his answer to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute of 1 March, Official Report, column 600, on recorded cases of leukaemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma;

(2) whether the figures in this answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 600, on recorded cases of leukaemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma included (a) United States naval personnel and their families and (b) postcode sectors PA23, PA27 and PA28.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The breakdown requested is set out in the tables.

United States naval personnel and their families would have been included in these figures if they were treated for cancer in Scottish hospitals.

The tables show the total number of registrations in Dunoon and the surrounding area covered by postcode sectors PA23.7 and PA23.8 during the years 1975 to 1987. For the earlier years, 1968-74, which predate the postcode system, the Dunoon and Kilmun parish was used.

Rates Collection

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of collecting rates in Scotland per pound collected in each year from 1986-87 until the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will give separate estimates for both domestic and non-domestic rates collection costs for the same period.

Mr. Rifkind: The costs of collecting the rates in Scotland for the years 1986-87 to 1989-90 together with the collection costs per pound collected for the same period are as follows:

	Collection Costs £ million	Cost of collection per £ collected pence
1986-87	10·9	0·57
1987-88	12·1	0·57
1988-89	15·5	0·68
1989-90	1·6	0·13

The information for the years 1986-87 to 1988-89 inclusive is based on the costs relating to the collection of all rates in Scotland. Separate figures are not held centrally for domestic and non-domestic rates for these years. The figures for 1989-90 relate to non-domestic rates only.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Angus, East, Official Report, 30 March, column 360, he will list in the Official Report, the findings of the 1988 pilot survey of vacant land in Scotland, and the follow-up study when it is completed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The main findings of the pilot Scottish vacant land survey were as follows:

There were 7,392 ha of derelict land and 5,060 ha of vacant land recorded in Scotland, a total of 12,452 ha.

There were 5,261 vacant or derelict sites.

Three per cent. of land was known to be contaminated, 7 per cent. suspected and 32 per cent. not suspected. The situation was unknown for 58 per cent.

A commentary outlining the results of the survey has been placed in the Library. More information from the survey is available from the local authorities. The findings of the follow-up study will be published in due course.

Regional Expenditure

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the expenditure of each Scottish region and island council, by function, in each year from 1978-79 in (a) cash terms and (b) constant prices; and if he will indicate the percentage increase in each year in real terms.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested by the hon. Gentleman has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each constituency (a) the amount spent by Scottish Homes in the financial year 1989-90, and (b) the amount projected to be spent in 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In approving Scottish Homes programme for any year, my right hon. and learned Friend also agrees the amounts which Scottish Homes proposes should be spent on particular functions. The allocation of funds to specific areas is then a matter for Scottish Homes.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have been taken out against persons alleged to have poisoned or trapped birds of prey in each of the last three years; and how many convictions were secured.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Pesticides

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on the marine environment resulting from the use of organophosphorous pesticides in salmon farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 25 January.

A report on work by DAFS scientists on toxicity of Aquagard to other species is currently being prepared for publication.

Nurses

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the different kinds of conversion courses and bridging courses currently available to nurses within the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Scotland conversion courses are available in general, mental illness, mental handicap and sick children's nursing. They are open to first level registered nurses wishing to qualify in a different field of nursing and to second level nurses seeking eligibility to register as first level. Access by second level nurses is through a flexible programme of bridging studies tailored to individual needs.

Crofters (Building Grants)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applicants, for each of the last 10 years, have been refused assistance under the crofters etc. building grants and loans scheme on the grounds of their income being considered too low to meet the loan repayments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 April 1990]: During the past 10 years only four applications have been refused solely on the grounds that an applicant had insufficient income, and could not provide a satisfactory guarantee or guarantor, for repayment of a loan.

Ambulance Dispute

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the final cost to each health board of the provision of cover by the police and other bodies during the ambulance service dispute; and what was the total cost to public funds of the dispute.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 April 1990]: Final costs of the assistance provided by police and other bodies during the dispute are not yet available. Those costs incurred by health boards will be reimbursed by the Common Services Agency.

Road Casualties

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made any analysis of the likely effects on the total of road casualties if the clock were to be advanced by one hour throughout the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 April 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 28 to 36 of the Green Paper "Summer Time: A Consultation Document" (Cm. 722), copies of which are in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iraq (Arms Component Exports)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will initiate an investigation into the role played by Euromac Ltd. of Thames Ditton in the sale of nuclear weapons components to Iraq.

Mr. Ridley: Any evidence of alleged breaches of the United Kingdom's export controls is carefully investigated. The particular incident to which the hon. Member refers is currently the subject of legal proceedings.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date he received the first indications that there was a problem in relation to the export from Walter Somers and Company concerning forgings and related equipment destined for Iraq.

Mr. Ridley: Earlier this month.

Hong Kong

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the level of British exports to Hong Kong; and what is the level of invisible income from Hong Kong.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the value of United Kingdom visible exports to Hong Kong is published in the "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", Business Monitor MM20, tables Ib and V. Information on invisible income is not available.

Accounting Practices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce legislation to require auditors to adopt an active approach to satisfy themselves regarding the going concern assumption specified in paragraph 10 of schedule 4 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: No. Auditing guidelines already advise auditors of the need, when planning, performing and evaluating the results of their audit procedures, to be satisfied that the going concern basis of the accounts is appropriate.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will appoint an independent committee of inquiry to examine the possibility of requiring all large companies to have an annual social audit.

Mr. Redwood: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to his question on 3 April at column 507.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will amend the Partnerships Acts to require all firms authorised to act as auditors to file annual reports and accounts.

Mr. Redwood: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to his question on 21 February at column 781.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce legislation to require company auditors to state in their audit report the matters for which they claim not to be responsible.

Mr. Redwood: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to his question on 5 April at column 803.

Shareholder Rights

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, following the recent House of Lords ruling on Caparo Industries plc v. Dickman and Otters (1) he will introduce legislation to restore the shareholder rights existing prior to that case;

(2) he will introduce legislation to clarify auditor responsibility to shareholders.

Mr. Redwood: We have no plans to do so.

Cotton Goods

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his assessment of the implications for sales of cotton goods in north-east Lancashire if the multi-fibre arrangement is not renewed.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 April 1990]: The implications of the non-renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement for sales of cotton goods produced in north-east Lancashire will depend on a number of factors. These include the exact arrangements for phasing out MFA restrictions over a transitional period, which remain to be negotiated, and the extent to which Lancashire production is competitive in meeting the needs of customers. The Government are continuing to press the case within the EC for satisfactory transitional arrangements.

DEFENCE

Ship Charters

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends to use only British merchant ships for Ministry of Defence charters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 18 April, Official Report, column 939.

Joint Ocean Surveillance Information Centre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) from which subheads of which votes the annual operating costs of the joint ocean surveillance information centre are taken;

(2) if he will make a statement on the joint ocean surveillance information centre;

(3) in which year the joint ocean surveillance information centre was established;

(4) what geographical areas are covered by the joint ocean surveillance information centre;

(5) what is the annual operating cost of the joint ocean surveillance information centre;

(6) what sources of information are used to input data into the joint ocean surveillance information centre;

(7) where the joint ocean surveillance information centre is located;

(8) whether information gathered by the joint ocean surveillance information centre would be used as a real-time data input into (a) UKADGE or (b) NADGE;

(9) whether the United States of America makes any financial contribution to the annual operating cost of the joint ocean surveillance information centre.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The annual operating costs of the joint ocean surveillance intelligence centre, which was established in 1990 and is located at HMS Warrior, are some £2·7 million from votes 1A1 and 2F. It would not be in the public interest to disclose the other information for which the hon. Gentleman has asked.

Over-the-horizon Radar

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) from which subheads of which votes the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the cost of construction in support of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be built at RAF Brawdy and associated sites will be taken;

(2) from which subheads of which votes the United Kingdom financial contribution to the cost of design work for the construction in support of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be built at RAF Brawdy and associated sites will be taken.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom's financial contribution to construction, including design work, in support of a two-year trial of a United States over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom will be taken from the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force subheads of defence vote 2.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which subheads of which votes the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the cost of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar equipment to be installed at RAF Brawdy and associated sites will be taken.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom Government will be making no financial contribution to the costs of the United States over-the-horizon radar equipment to be located for a two-year trial in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which subheads of which votes the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the annual operating costs of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar will be taken.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom's financial contribution to the running costs of the two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar will be taken from the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force subheads of defence votes 1 and 2.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list each of the joint United Kingdom-United States over-the-horizon research, development, testing and evaluation experiments in which his Department has participated or contributed funds;

(2) if he will make a statement on the over-the-horizon radar experiment known as "Cobra Mist";

(3) what is the bearing by true north of the centreline of the sector that will be covered by the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar;

(4) what were the dates of (a) commencement and (b) cessation of the over-the-horizon experiment known as "Cold Witness";

(5) what were the dates of (a) commencement and (b) cessation of the over-the-horizon experiment known as "Cobra Mist";

(6) where was the site of the experimental radar system that was used during the over-the-horizon experiment known as "Cold Witness";

(7) where was the site of the experimental radar system that was used during the over-the-horizon experiment known as "Cobra Mist";

(8) whether the radar used during the over-the-horizon experiment known as "Cold Witness" had its receiver and transmitter antenna at the same location;

(9) whether the radar used during the over-the-horizon experiment known as "Cobra Mist" had its receiver and transmitter antenna at the same location.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is classified.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the over-the-horizon radar experiment known as "Cold Witness";

(2) what is the connection between the over-the-horizon radar experiments "Cobra Mist" and "Cold Witness" and the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be built at RAF Brawdy and associated sites.

Mr. Alan Clark: "Cold Witness" was at one time the name given to a joint United Kingdom-United States programme of studies aimed at testing the feasibility of siting an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom. I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the former right hon. Member for Western Isles on 21 December 1984 at column 378.

The results of the joint programme of studies have now been fully considered, and a decision has been taken in principle to undertake a joint two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the dimensions of the receiving antenna for the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be installed at Blakehill in terms of (a) longest length and (b) area covered.

Mr. Alan Clark: The length of the receiving antenna of the proposed over-the-horizon radar, to be sited at Blakehill radio station, Wiltshire, is 8,500 ft. The total area required for the installation is 145 acres.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the dimensions of the transmitting antenna for the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be installed at RAF Brawdy in terms of (a) longest length and (b) area covered.

Mr. Alan Clark: The length of the transmitting antenna of the proposed over-the-horizon radar, to be sited at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, is 2,480 ft. The total area required for the installation is 85 acres.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what exclusion zones are planned round the transmitting antenna of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be built at RAF Brawdy for people at ground level.

Mr. Alan Clark: The transmitter site for the two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom will be at the MOD-owned St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire. A safety exclusion zone, within which a radio-frequency hazard could exist, will be established around the transmitter. This safety exclusion zone will be well within the boundary of the site.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what exclusion zones are planned round the transmitting antenna of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be built at RAF Brawdy for aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: Notification of a high intensity radio transmission area (HIRTA) will be made as part of the process of application for military clearance to use the site. Details will be made available to the national air traffic services and the civil aviation community.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is (a) the maximum range and (b) the minimum range of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: The theoretical maximum and minimum ranges of an over-the-horizon radar are 1,600 nautical miles and 500 nautical miles respectively.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the United Kingdom financial contribution to the cost of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. The equipment for the trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom will be provided by the United States Government.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of (a) United Kingdom military personnel, (b) United Kingdom civilian personnel, (c) United States military personnel and (d) United States civilian personnel who will be based at the transmitter site of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: No United Kingdom or United States military personnel will be based at the transmitter site of the proposed over-the-horizon radar. Up to 19 civilian maintenance and support staff will be based there; the proportion that will be United Kingdom personnel has yet to be determined.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the number of (a) United Kingdom personnel, (b) United Kingdom civilian personnel, (c) United States military personnel and (d) United States civilian personnel who will be based at the receiver site of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar;

(2) what is the number of (a) United Kingdom personnel, (b) United Kingdom civilian personnel, (c) United States military personnel and (d) United States civilian personnel who will be based at the operations control centre of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: Sixty United Kingdom military personnel will be based at the receiver site of the proposed over-the-horizon radar, including the control centre. A small number of United States military personnel, and a number of civilian staff of both nationalities, will also be stationed at Blakehill. Precise numbers have yet to be determined.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proposed location for the operations control centre for the relocatable over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: The control centre for the two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom will be collocated with the receiver at the Blakehill radio station, Wiltshire.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total acreage of land to be used by the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar station at RAF Brawdy and associated sites.

Mr. Alan Clark: The total area required at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, the site of the transmitter for a two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom is 85 acres, including buildings and a safety exclusion zone around the installation. The total area required at Blakehill radio station, Wiltshire, the site of the receiver, is 145 acres, including buildings.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the cost of construction in support of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar;

(2) what is the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the cost of design work for the construction in support of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom Government will bear the full cost of preparing the sites, including all design and construction work, for the two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar. The maximum cost of this work is expected to be £11·3 million. It is not practicable to separate the cost of design work from that of the construction itself.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has carried out into the potential problems of interference with the signal returns to a relocatable over-the-horizon radar caused by aircraft flying through the radar beams close to the transmitter site.

Mr. Alan Clark: The characteristics of the over-the-horizon radar, and the way in which it is to be operated during its two-year trial, lead us to conclude that there will be no such problems.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the annual operating costs of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: The cost of the United Kingdom's contribution, including manpower, to the operating costs of the proposed two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar will be about £3 million in each year.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he was first made aware of United States proposals to instal a relocatable over-the-horizon radar at RAF Brawdy and associated sites.

Mr. Alan Clark: Defence Ministers have been aware for a number of years of the joint UK-US programme of studies aimed at testing the feasibility of siting an over-the-horizon radar system in the United Kingdom. I refer the hon. Member to the written answers given by my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the then Member for Bosworth, to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) and the then right hon. Member for Western Isles on 21 December 1984 at column 378.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any formal agreement has been signed between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government, or any armed service or agency under the control of the United States Government, regarding use of the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: A memorandum of understanding between the United Kingdom and United States Governments was signed on 20 April 1990 covering the planned two-year trial of a United States navy over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be built at RAF Brawdy and associated sites will be linked to the joint ocean surveillance information centre;

(2) whether information gathered from the proposed relocatable over-the-horizon radar to be built at RAF Brawdy and associated sites would be used as a real-time data input into (a) UKADGE or (b) NADGE.

Mr. Alan Clark: It would be premature to consider the possible operational assignment of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom before the results of its planned two-year trial have been fully assessed.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the necessity for the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: Studies have indicated that an over-the-horizon radar (OTHR) situated in the United Kingdom could substantially enhance our air defence and early warning capabilities. No firm decision has been taken to put such a radar into operational service. We have, however, decided in principle to embark on a two-year joint trial, with the United States Government, of a United States navy OTHR to demonstrate whether the possible advantages of this radar can be achieved in practice.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has as to the annual running costs of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: Once the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter is installed, the running costs of its two-year trial are expected to be limited to those of manpower, maintenance and the consumption of utilities and spares. It is not possible to be more precise at this stage.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the hon. Member for Pembroke was not given prior warning of the proposal to construct an over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield in his constituency.

Mr. Alan Clark: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 29 March 1990, as soon as possible after a formal decision had been taken in principle to undertake a two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom.

I greatly regret that, in error, my hon. Friend was not informed in November 1988 that consideration was being given to undertaking the trial.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Preseli-Pembrokeshire district council was first informed of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation at the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no formal requirement for the Ministry of Defence to inform the Preseli-Pembrokeshire district council of the proposed installation of an over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield. I understand, however, that the Pembrokeshire national park authorities plan fully to consult local communities and all other interested parties once the formal notice of proposed development has been submitted.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what impact the installation of the proposed over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, would have on the local tourist industry;

(2) what measures are proposed to protect the environment of the Pembrokeshire national park in the event of the construction of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation taking place on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire;

(3) what impact the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation at the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, would have on the local farming community;

(4) what impact the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, would have on the local economy of the area.

Mr. Alan Clark: This will be one of the aspects to be fully considered by the independent environmental impact assessment of the proposed installation, which will be undertaken shortly.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial contribution is to be made by the United States Government towards the construction of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United States Government will be responsible for providing, installing and preparing for operation the over-the-horizon radar planned to be situated in the United Kingdom for a two-year trial.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, if approved for construction, the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, will be built by private enterprise companies after tender.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the exact Ordnance Survey grid reference for the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation at the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be installed at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, will be situated in the area around grid reference SM 7907 east/2551 north. The exact location will depend on the outcome of the planned environmental impact assessment.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any interference would be caused to radio, television or other telecommunications equipment by the operation of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The design of the planned over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be installed at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, is such that no interference to radio, television or other telecommunications facilities is expected.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to any hazards to health which might be found within the boundary of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be installed at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, will emit high-frequency electromagnetic radiation. In common with radiation from similar sources, such as radio broadcast transmitters, such radiation can, at very close ranges, be harmful. A safety exclusion zone will therefore be installed around the transmitter; its boundary will be well within the MOD perimeter boundary of the airfield.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many other sites were considered for the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation which is proposed for the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: A total of 166 sites were considered for the installation of either the transmitter or the receiver for the proposed trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who was informed of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation for St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, in November 1988; and what response was received from those so informed.

Mr. Alan Clark: The then Parly Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman), wrote to inform my hon. Friend the Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) and the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Howells) on 22 November 1988 that the Ministry of Defence was considering the installation of an over-the-horizon radar for a two-year trial; but that no decisions had been made. I greatly regret that, in error, my hon. Friend was not similarly informed at that date that we were considering undertaking the trial.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wiltshire, North was subsequently, at his request, briefed more fully by my hon. Friend the then Parly Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, in April 1989.

The Pembrokeshire national park authorities were separately notified in late 1988 that the Ministry was considering the use of St. David's airfield as the transmitter site for this trial.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received to date on his proposal to construct an over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement on the nature of the representations.

Mr. Alan Clark: In addition to a number of parliamentary questions on the subject, I have received to date four letters from members of the public expressing concern about the possible environmental effects of the installation of an over-the-horizon radar transmitter at St. David's airfield, Dyfed.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the acreage and number of buildings and other ancillary equipment which would be used on the former St. David's airfield for the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation if approved.

Mr. Alan Clark: The total land area required for the installation of an over-the-horizon radar transmitter at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, is about 85 acres, including a safety exclusion zone around the installation. Included in this area will be a single-storey temporary building and about 15 equipment containers.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to the siting of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation within the Royal Air Force station at Brawdy, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: RAF Brawdy, as an operational airfield with limited available space, would not be capable of accommodating an over-the-horizon radar transmitter with its associated safety exclusion zone.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a visit to the St. David's area of Pembrokeshire to discuss his Ministry's proposals for an over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have no immediate plans to do so; but officials from my Department, together with United States Government representatives, plan to make a full public presentation of our proposals to the local community and other interested parties once a formal notice of proposed development, supported by an independent environmental impact assessment, has been submitted to the Pembrokeshire national park authorities. We expect this to take place in late summer.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Dyfed county council was first informed of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation at the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no formal requirement for the Ministry of Defence to inform Dyfed county council of the proposed installation of an over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield. I understand, however, that the Pembrokeshire national park authorities plan fully to consult local communities and all other interested parties once the formal notice of proposed development has been submitted.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has as to the number of (a) United States armed forces personnel, (b) Royal Air Force personnel, (c) other military personnel and (d) civilians who would be employed at the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire after construction.

Mr. Alan Clark: No United Kingdom or United States military personnel will be based at the transmitter site of the proposed over-the-horizon radar. Up to 19 civilian maintenance and support staff will be based there after construction is complete.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the effects on civil aircraft of the proposed trials of a new radar transmitter at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Alan Clark: As is the case with all transmitting systems, there is a high intensity radio transmission area (HIRTA) associated with the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, within which it would be unsafe for aircraft which are susceptible to induced electrical currents to operate. Notification of this HIRTA will be made as part of the process of application for military clearance to use the site. Full details will be made available to the national air traffic services and the civil aviation community.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the number, height, width and construction of the aerials proposed for the over-the-horizon radar installation at the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be installed at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, will consist of 35 aerials. These will consist of metal lattice masts with the copper aerial elements vertically strung from a wire that runs down from the top of the aerial to a pole in front. Sixteen of the aerials will be about 135 ft high; the rest will be lower. The total land required for the installation is about 2,480 ft by 1,450 ft; this includes the safety exclusion zone surrounding the installation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial contribution towards the annual running costs of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, is to be made by the United States Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United States Government will be responsible for providing spares, specialist support and system maintenance for the trial of an over-the horizon radar in the United Kingdom; they will also provide the personnel necessary to support their own participation in the trial.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has as to the likely construction costs of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The construction costs of the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, are estimated to be about £3·5 million.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the consultation process which he intends to institute for consideration of his proposals for an over-the-horizon radar installation at the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: In accordance with the formal notification procedures established by the Government in 1984 for developments to be undertaken by Government Departments, the Ministry of Defence plans to submit a notice of proposed development (NOPD) to the appropriate planning authority, Pembrokeshire national park, in respect of the proposed installation of an over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield, Dyfed. This will be supported by a full and independent environmental impact assessment. Once the NOPD has been submitted, it is intended to give a full public presentation of proposals for the installation jointly with the United States authorities. We expect this to take place in late summer. I also understand that the Pembrokeshire national park authorities intend fully to consult the local community and all other interested parties once the formal NOPD has been submitted.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has as to the number of people who would be employed on the construction of the over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: This will depend on the detailed proposals of the contractor who wins the competition to carry out this work.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Pembrokeshire national park was first informed of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The authorities of the Pembrokeshire national park, which is the appropriate planning authority in this case, were notified in late 1988 that the Ministry of Defence was considering the possible use of St. David's airfield as the transmitter site for the two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proposed date for the start of construction of the over-the-horizon radar installation; and what is the likely construction period.

Mr. Alan Clark: Construction is planned to start in mid to late 1991 and is expected to take about a year to complete.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of the proposed trials of a new radar transmitter at RAF Brawdy will test its ability to integrate with NATO communications systems.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proposed two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom will not specifically include its ability to integrate with NATO communications systems.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the effects on the human body of the proposed trials of a new radar transmitter at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has no plans to trial a new radar transmitter at RAF Brawdy.

Communications

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on Royal Navy use of the SSIXS—the submarine satellite information exchange system—communications system;

(2) whether SSIXS channels can be used by the Royal Navy without clearance from United States authorities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our usual practice to disclose information of this nature.

Norwegian Sea

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of Royal Navy involvement in the United States maritime strategy with regard to plans for the defence of the Norwegian sea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: United States maritime strategy is designed to meet United States requirements. NATO as a whole is agreed on the need for forward maritime defence in the Norwegian sea to safeguard vital transatlantic and cross-channel reinforcement and resupply routes and to enhance the security of the northern flank. The Royal Navy makes a significant contribution to these tasks.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Royal Navy's policy of forward defence in the Norwegian sea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraph 5 of the article entitled "The Forward Defence of Europe" which is to be found on pages 15 and 16 of volume 1 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988.

NATO Maritime Operations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the NATO concept of maritime operations;

(2) what is his policy on the NATO concept of maritime operations;

(3) whether the concept of maritime operations is now official NATO doctrine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO's concept of maritime operations is a concept developed by the NATO military authorities, in consultation with member nations, for the employment of allied maritime forces in support of NATO's defensive strategy. It is taken fully into account in United Kingdom planning for maritime operations.

Kola Peninsula

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any noticeable change in the level of Soviet naval activity in and around the Kola peninsula in the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has been no noticeable change in the level of Soviet naval activity in and around the Kola peninsula in the last five years.

Environmental Guidelines

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what environmental guidelines his Department follows in deciding on the location of new installations.

Mr. Alan Clark: Where appropriate, the MOD undertakes full environmental impact assessments in accordance with the regulations laid down in the appropriate DOE, Welsh Office and Scottish Office circulars.

Radar Transmissions

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been carried out for his Department in the last 10 years into the effects of radar transmissions on the human body.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to carry out research into the effects of radar transmissions on the human body.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Compensation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements his Department has to compensate local residents who may be affected by the construction of Ministry of Defence installations.

Mr. Alan Clark: Where applicable, the MOD observes the provisions of the Land Compensation Act 1973.

RAF Brawdy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed construction of a new tower at RAF Brawdy, giving details of its height, width, cost and purpose.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The height of the new tower to be erected at RAF Brawdy will be 17·44m from ground level to the top of the cabin roof. The internal diameter will be 3·6m while the reinforced concrete walls will be 200mm thick, giving an overall diameter of 4m. The total estimated cost of the project is commercially confidential.

The purpose of the tower is to support a secondary surveillance radar head which will improve the air traffic control facilities of the station.

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which date he and the Minister of State for Defence Procurement, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark) were first alerted to the fact that there was a problem over the Sheffield Forgemasters' export to Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: Earlier this month.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates when the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) contacted his Department regarding export orders for Iraq; what was the subject of the hon. Member's representations on behalf of Walter Somers; and what was the response of his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: These matters are being looked into at present.

Voluntary Release

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the premature voluntary release survey form for other ranks contains a question on house purchase;

(2) what have been the results from surveys over the last five years of members of the (a) Army and (b) Royal Air Force involved in premature voluntary release relating to the satisfaction level among officers with regard to house purchase opportunities; where this ranks in terms of dissatisfaction in relation to other items; and if he will place a copy of the blank forms for premature voluntary release surveys of (i) officers and (ii) other ranks in the Library;

(3) what surveys involving house purchase satisfaction levels exist for the Army and the Royal Air Force other than those relating to premature voluntary release; if he will give the results for the last five years, indicating the ranking in relation to other items for dissatisfaction; whether a survey is carried out at JDSC among Army high-fliers; whether there is a Royal Air Force equivalent; whether there are any equivalents for other ranks in either service; and if he will place a copy of any blank forms relating to such surveys in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend.

Binary Hydrogen Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has done any recent research on the development of binary hydrogen fuel for firing long-range projectiles from artillery carriers.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. My Department is not undertaking and has not recently undertaken research in the development of binary hydrogen fuel for artillery purposes.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Heyhoe report relating to his Department's maladministration on the Colin Wallace case has been completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The report by Mr. David Heyhoe on the Ministry of Defence's handling of papers relating to the case of Mr. Colin Wallace has been completed and is being studied. As my right hon. Friend has undertaken, its conclusions will be made available to the House.

Explosion (Deal)

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a report on the explosion at the Royal Marines school of music at Deal on 22 September 1989 was commissioned; by what date it was due to have been completed; when he received the report; and when, and in what form, it will be made available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A board of inquiry was directed by the Commandant-General Royal Marines on 29 September 1989 to investigate all aspects of security in force at the Royal Marines school of music (RMSM) Deal, with particular reference to the period preceding the terrorist bomb explosion on 22 September. The board was instructed to present its report to the Commandant-General by 24 October. My right hon. Friend received advice on the report on 8 December and is considering its recommendations. The report is classified and will not be published. I would, however, expect a summary of its principal findings to be made available to the House of Commons Select Committee on Defence when my right hon. Friend has completed his deliberations.

Genetically Engineered Organisms

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many animals have been involved in tests undertaken by or on behalf of his Department for each of the last five years in which genetically engineered micro-organisms were involved; what was the nature and purpose of these tests; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what funds were deployed by his Department on work in connection with genetically engineered micro-organisms in (a) 1984, (b) 1985, (c) 1986, (d) 1987, (e) 1988 and (f) 1989; how many personnel were involved in such work; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the purpose of work carried out by his Department in connection with genetically engineered micro-organisms.

Mr. Neubert: As we have repeatedly made clear, the United Kingdom has no chemical or biological weapons and no plans to acquire any. All research undertaken by or commissioned by the MOD in the chemical and biological field is defensive in nature and is to provide information which assists in the provision of effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons might be used against the United Kingdom armed forces.

It is not our policy to go into details of specific research areas. Such information could enable an informed observer to gain a useful insight into the scope and direction of MOD work, to the detriment of national security.

Defence Export Services

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries were visited by representatives of the defence export services organisation in 1989.

Mr. Alan Clark: DESO representatives travelled extensively during 1989 and visited numerous countries. Because of the confidentiality of many of the matters involved it is not the practice to list individual countries visited.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the overseas offices of the defence export services organisation, giving in each case the date when the office was opened.

Mr. Alan Clark: DESO's interests are covered by MOD staff at embassies throughout the world, but specific defence sales offices have been set up in:

Washington	(1972)
New Delhi	(April 1984)
Riyadh	(January 1984)
Kuala Lumpur	(June 1986)
Seoul	(August 1988)
Ankara	(August 1988)
Kuwait	(February 1988)
Canberra	(August 1989)

Space Research Corporation

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department had any information regarding the Space Research Corporation prior to 11 April.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department was aware of the existence of the company before that date.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sea Erosion

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has asked the National Rivers Authority to undertake into protecting land and dwellings from sea erosion, particularly in Suffolk and Norfolk; and if he will make public such reports.

Mr. Maclean: My officials have encouraged the National Rivers Authority (NRA)—and previously the former regional water authorities to undertake studies of the coastline generally.

In particular, we have provided grant aid towards a major study of the coastline between the Humber and the Thames which was originally commissioned by the former Anglian water authority and is now being carried out on behalf of the NRA.

The initial phases of the study are complete and the resulting sea defence management atlas has been made available to interested parties. The remaining phase of the study is designed to lead to a better understanding of coastal processes and should be complete by summer 1991. The data are expected to be used to support the subsequent development of coastal management strategies and again will be made available to interested parties.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his criteria for evaluating agricultural land, land of special scientific or heritage interests and dwellings in terms of sea defence schemes; and if he has plans to review the criteria.

Mr. Maclean: It is one of the conditions of grant that a proposed sea defence scheme must be economically worth while. The basic criterion is that its discounted benefits should at least equal its discounted cost.

Valuation of agricultural land depends on the extent of flood damage expected in the absence of a scheme. In general, land subject to slight flooding, leading to a lower value land use, would be valued by assessing the consequent drop in gross margin, more severe flooding causing irreversible loss, would usually be valued at the "risk-free" market price of the land.

A number of approaches are used to value land of special scientific or heritage interest. This may involve finding the price a conservation body is willing to pay for the land, or encouraging visitors to place a monetary value on their enjoyment of the site. (It is also a condition of grant that schemes must be environmentally sympathetic).

As with agriculture, the approach to property valuation depends on the frequency and severity of flooding likely to occur in the absence of a scheme. Minor losses are treated as recurrent losses and evaluated using well established techniques; for more severe damage the "risk-free" open market value of the property is used.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of the coastline of Suffolk and Norfolk, in terms of sea defences and natural erosion, and his Department's plans until the end of the century.

Mr. Maclean: We fully recognise the need for improvements to coastal defences constructed in East Anglia following the floods in 1953 and now reaching the end of their useful life. Several major grant-aided schemes are already under way or in the course of preparation. Government grant allocated to the Anglian region has increased by 28 per cent. this year and represents over half of the total provision to the NRA.

We review national long-term flood defence needs annually and the National Rivers Authority Anglian region's 10-year needs programme, which will take account of improvements in understanding of coastal processes, plays an important role in the considerations.

The criteria are kept under continual review. We encourage and actively support research aimed at the improvement of evaluation techniques and Middlesex polytechnic is currently developing, with Ministry funding, a manual for the assessment of the benefits of coast protection and sea defence which will represent a considerable advance in this field.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the number and species of birds of prey poisoned in England and Wales during 1988, 1989 and 1990 to date.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the poisoning of wild, farmed, and domestic creatures by pesticides is collected by the agriculture departments through wildlife incident investigation schemes. Reports on the results are published. The report for 1988 will be published soon. A report on 1989 is in draft and will be published after it has been accepted by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

The information requested for England and Wales is as follows:

	Numbers
Buzzard	6	18	2
Goshawk	0	1	0
Hen Harrier	0	0	1

Consumer Panel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give biographical details of each of the members of his consumer panel, including their involvement with particular organisations.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested has been published in a Food Safety Directorate press release issued today. A copy has been sent to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations which submitted names of individuals to him to serve on the consumer panel.

Mr. Gummer: The following organisations were invited to submit names of individuals to serve on the consumer panel: Consumers Association, Consumers in the European Community Group, the National Consumer Council, the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland, the Scottish Consumers Council and the Welsh Consumers Council.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many individuals' names were submitted to him to serve on his consumer panel.

Mr. Gummer: Nine people were appointed to serve on the consumer panel—all nine names were submitted by the organisations which were requested to make nominations.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish the contact addresses for the individuals represented on his consumer panel.

Mr. Gummer: The panel secretariat is the contact point for requests for interviews and further information.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he used in selecting the individuals to serve on his consumer panel.

Mr. Gummer: The criteria for selecting individuals to serve on the panel were that they should be able to represent the views and concerns of ordinary consumers. They have been nominated by consumer organisations but they serve in an individual capacity and do not represent any particular organisation.

Whaling

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement resolution 929 (1989) of the parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe in respect of the powers of the International Whaling Commission to be extended to dolphin and porpoise species of cetaceans.

Mr. Curry: We have for a long time insisted that the convention of the International Whaling Commission (IWC) as drafted already covers small cetaceans. A significant number of members of the IWC however take the opposite view and do not acknowledge that it has the legal competence to regulate catches of small cetaceans. Nevertheless we will continue our efforts alongside other like-minded countries within the IWC. In addition we work through other international fora for the protection of small cetaceans, most recently in relation to the indiscriminate use of large-scale drift nets.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Her Majesty's Government will support an extension of the international whaling convention moratorium on all quotas in commercial whaling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom played a leading role in the International Whaling Commission in securing the current moratorium on commercial whaling. We shall continue our policy that the moratorium should be maintained until the scientific committee of the IWC can clearly advise that the state of stocks is satisfactory and that a management procedure which safeguarded the stocks has been devised.

Drift Net Fishing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about those EEC countries which have banned the use of drift net fishing.

Mr. Curry: Within the European Community, drift nets are used for fishing for a range of commercial species and are subject to control and regulation under individual member states' legislation. Most recently Italy introduced a ban last October on drift netting for swordfish by its fishermen in the Mediterranean.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made any representations to the French Government about the slaughter of dolphins arising from drift net fishing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: No. Recent reports are unclear but marine mammals can be accidentally caught in nets. Much concern recently has been focused on the tuna fisheries in the Pacific ocean and the European Community has supported the United Nations resolution which was passed in December to deal with the indiscriminate use of large-scale pelagic drift netting on the high seas.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of cattle herds in December 1989 in each of the respective countries of Great Britain, where bovine spongiform encephalopathy was confirmed, had (a) a single case, (b) two cases or (c) three or more.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

	One case	Two cases	Three or more cases
England	63·0	18·9	18·1
Wales	80·9	11·8	7·3
Scotland	88·1	7·9	4·0

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many offsprings of cows which had been confirmed as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy have been continuously monitored in each county of England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: The identities of known offspring of confirmed BSE cases are recorded as part of the Ministry's epidemiological investigations into the disease. These records are compared with the identities of suspect cases of BSE reported to the Ministry as part of this on-going study. The numbers of offspring recorded in each county are as follows:

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the total population of adult cattle in Great Britain for the year ending 16 March.

Mr. Gummer: The annual incidence of confirmed cases for the year 17 March 1989—16 March 1990 is 0·2 per cent.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by age the cattle confirmed as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy in 1989 in England and Wales.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were notified as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each of the two months prior to 100 per cent. compensation being paid; and what are the figures for the months following that date.

Mr. Gummer: Increased compensation was paid from 14 February 1990. The information requested on a weekly basis for Great Britain is as follows:

Week ending	Number of suspects
5 January 1990	245
12 January 1990	292

Honey Bees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of bee officers employed by his Ministry for each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The number of bees officers employed by the Ministry in both 1988 and 1989 was 35. In order to make the most effective use of resources inspection of bees is concentrated on those colonies where foul brood is suspected or which have a recent history of the disease.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to control varroasis in honey bees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: At present the Importation of Bees Order 1980 prohibits imports of all bees of the genus Apis (honey bees), except under licence from countries of high bee health status which are free from varroasis. It remains our aim to keep this country free of varroasis. The European Community Commission has proposed that after 1992 national measures on animal health, including bee health should be replaced by European Community controls. Discussions are still at an early stage and we shall continue to press for the best possible safeguards.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has plans to include Apis Bombus in the Bee Control Order 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have at present no plans to extend the powers under the Bees Act 1980 to exclude importation of bees of the genus Bombus (bumble bees). However, I am keeping this issue under careful review and would be prepared to consider action to control the importation of bumble bees should there be evidence that their importation poses a risk to the health of United Kingdom honey bees.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which of his Ministry's offices his bee officers are located; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In 1989 bees officers were located in Ministry offices as follows:

North Riding Lamb Ltd.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of his report on the tests on lamb carcases carried out at North Riding Lamb Ltd. prior to Christmas 1989.

Mr. Gummer: My officials will shortly be writing to the managing director of North Riding Lamb Ltd. to inform him of the results of tests on previously certified lamb carcases.

It is not our practice to place in the Library details of correspondence between the Department and the individuals or companies on matters such as this.

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the maximum permitted becquerel levels in different foodstuffs on food produced in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the European Community and (c) Third world countries (i) in 1988 and (ii) currently; whether he has plans to change these levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In 1986, as a result of the Chernobyl accident, a limit of 1,000 becquerels of radiocaesium per kilogramme was introduced in the United Kingdom for home-produced sheepmeat. This remains the current limit.

In the event of a future nuclear accident, the levels which would automatically apply to food produced throughout the European Community were established in Council regulation (Euratom) No. 3954/87. These maxima still apply today, supplemented by Council regulation (Euratom) 2218/87, and are given in the table.

Guidance on similar levels to be applied to food traded internationally was promulgated by the Codex Alimentarius Commission in July 1989.

No changes are envisaged in the above position.

Foodstuffs (becquerels per kilogramme)

	Baby foods	Dairy produce	Other foodstuffs except minor foodstuffs[1]	Liquid foodstuffs
Isotopes of strontium, notably Sr-90	75	125	750	125
Isotopes of iodine, notably I-131	150	500	2,000	500
Alpha-emitting isotopes of plutonium and transplutonium elements, notably Pu-239 Am-241	1	20	80	20
All other nuclides of half-life greater than 10 days, notably Cs-134, Cs-137	400	1,000	1,250	1,000

[1] For minor foodstuffs as defined in Commission Regulation (Euratom) No. 944/89, the maximum permitted levels to be applied are 10 times those applicable to "other foodstuffs except minor foodstuffs".

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has conducted to establish the presence of viruses in sewage sludge dumped in the North sea; and if he will make a statement on the implications of the results of the research for the fishing industry.

Mr. Curry: Under the conditions of licensed dumping at sea the concentrations of viruses offshore at sewage sludge disposal sites will generally be much lower than in inshore areas near sewage outfalls. The Ministry is therefore concentrating its research on viruses on shellfish in inshore waters receiving sewage discharges. The Department of the Environment is funding research by the water research centre to assess the risk of contracting illnesses from sea bathing.

There have been complaints from some fishermen of illness as a result of fishing at disposal sites. The Ministry has taken these complaints seriously and in spring 1989 asked the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations to arrange for evidence to be provided to the employment medical advisory service. Over the last year four cases have been referred to EMAS, including one medical history which is being evaluated.

The Ministry's studies of disposal sites have shown no clear relationship between the prevalence of disease in fish stocks and the presence of sewage sludge in these areas.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the extent and nature of his Department's monitoring of sewage sludge disposal grounds.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the first report of the marine pollution management group's co-ordinating group on monitoring of sewage sludge disposal sites. This was issued as aquatic environment monitoring report No. 20 by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's directorate of fisheries research.

A copy is in the Library of the House.

Organic Farming

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 18 December 1989, Official Report, column 31, whether the Soil Association or British Organic Growers would also be eligible to receive grant aid.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is already grant-aiding the United Kingdom register of organic food standards (UKROFS) with £60,000 per annum. It also supports research directly related to organic farming amounting to £198,000 last year and other research of assistance to organic farmers amounting to £892,000 last year. Other aids to organic farmers were listed in the written answer given on 16 January to a question from the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor), Official Report, columns 215-16. Further grant aid to the Soil Association or British Organic Growers is not envisaged.

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what European Community support is being made available to farmers intending to change from traditional to organic methods.

Mr. Maclean: Payments for leaving land fallow under the set aside scheme can assist with the cost of conversion to organic farming, whilst grants can be made under the farm and conservation grant scheme towards investment in organic production. Both schemes are part funded by the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. Similar funding arrangements would apply to the pilot whole farm organic extensification scheme, on which a consultation document will be issued shortly. For details of the full range of assistance to the organic sector I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 16 January 1990 at columns 215-16.

Contaminated Food

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to transfer responsibility for dealing with food contamination arising from a nuclear incident to local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out to establish whether tuberculosis infection can be spread from badgers to cattle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: It has been demonstrated under laboratory conditions that badgers infected with bovine tuberculosis can transmit the disease to cattle. Additionally, since the removal of all badgers from a study area in Avon during 1981, there have been no instances of tuberculosis infection in cattle in the area.

Environmental Research

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much, for each year from 1980 to 1989, inclusive, was spent on environmental research by his Department.

Mr. Gummer: All research and development funded by MAFF takes environmental consideration fully into account. That work which is specifically concerned with the environment is listed in the second edition of the "Register of Government-funded Agriculture/ Environment R and D in the United Kingdom", a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House. Details for 1980-83 are not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Details for 1989 are not yet available.

Pesticides

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the use of the controlled droplets application method of applying pesticides.

Mr. Maclean: This method of applying pesticides uses equipment which generates spray droplets by means, most commonly, of a spinning disc rather than by conventional hydraulic pressure spray nozzles. Britain has a good record of innovation in the important area of finding effective ways of delivering pesticide to the target. Practical equipment for applying sprays by rotary atomisers was substantially developed in the mid-1970s and a number of systems for generating spray droplets of a controlled size are now available to users. The Government welcome all the efforts which are being made by equipment manufacturers to minimise the amount of pesticide which needs to be sprayed and to make it easier for users to meet their obligations to avoid pesticide drifting into areas where it might harm people, creatures, plants or the environment in general.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has in respect of the quantities of formulated pesticides sprayed on farmland in (a) 1970, (b) 1975, (c) 1980, (d) 1985 and (e) 1989; and what percentage for each year it is estimated was applied by (i) tractor, and (ii) aerial spraying.

Mr. Maclean: Estimates based on pesticide usage surveys of farms and holdings in England and Wales are as follows:

Year	Quantity of active ingredient of all pesticides applied by all methods (tonnes)	Applied from the air (percentage by area treated)
1970	22,062	[1]—
1975	25,497	[1]—
1980	35,533	1·74
1985	34,124	1·80

[1] Not available.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement (a) on the progress of his expert working party on cereal control failure as a result of misapplied chemicals, (b) what studies his Department is sponsoring in relation to those genes which trigger toxin production and (c) what studies his Department is conducting on resistance to insecticides, in view of the 1990 explosion in aphid populations.

Mr. Gummer: I am not aware of the expert working party to which the hon. Member refers in part (a) of his question.

On part (b), I assume that the hon. Member is referring to those genes which reduce Bacillus thuringiensis toxin. Although my Department is not providing funds directly to research on the insertion of genes into crop plants, it is financially supporting the work of the researchers (funded by the Department of Education and Science) to incorporate the more applied aspects of genetic improvement into their integrated research programmes.

On part (c), my Department is supporting extensive programmes of research into the genetics and biochemistry of pesticide resistance in cereal aphids, flies and other pests of growing and stored crops.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase the levels of support offered to farmers under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans at present to increase the level of support offered to farmers in ESAs. Payment levels in ESAs are reviewed three years after the scheme is established. We carried out a payments review on ESAs designated in 1987 (Broads, Pennine dales, Somerset levels and moors, south downs and west Penwith) last year and concluded there was no strong evidence to suggest an increase or decrease in their levels. We shall be carrying out a payments review of ESAs designated in 1988 later this year. The rate of uptake in ESAs has been well up to expectations which suggests that payments are pitched broadly at the right levels.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the cost, at present uptake, of increasing the payment for ESAs from £64 to £90 per hectare; what estimate he has made of the percentage increase in land governed by the ESA scheme of such an increase; and what the inclusion of such additional land under the ESA would cost.

Mr. Maclean: The level of ESA payments varies between £10 and £300 per hectare reflecting the agricultural and environmental circumstances of each area. In no ESA is there a current payment rate of £64 per hectare.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received (a) from the National Farmers Union and (b) from other sources in respect of the operation and levels of payment of the ESA scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: During the course of our review of ESA payments in those areas designated in 1987 (Broads, Pennine dales, Somerset levels and moors, south downs, west Penwith) the NFU reiterated its view that ESA payments should be index-linked. We received no representations from other sources. The level of ESA payments are reviewed three years after the area is designated. We concluded that the recent review showed no strong evidence to suggest payments should be increased or decreased from their current levels. The rate of uptake in ESAs has been well up to expectations which suggests that payments are pitched broadly at the right levels.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to review the level of payments made under the ESA scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The levels of payments in ESAs are reviewed three years after each scheme is introduced. We carried out a payments review on those ESAs designated in 1987 (Broads, Pennine dales, Somerset levels and moors, south downs, west Penwith) last year and concluded there was no strong evidence to suggest an increase or decrease in their levels. We shall be carrying out a payments review of those ESAs designated in 1988 later this year. The rate of uptake in ESAs has been well up to expectations which suggests that payments are pitched broadly at the right level.

Microwaves

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further research has been commissioned in the current year into the safety of microwaves in respect of food cooked therein; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Following on from the extensive research commissioned by this Department last year on the performance of domestic microwave ovens on heating food, three further studies are being funded this year:

a. Evaluation of the decline in power when domestic ovens are used continuously, (Institute of Food Research—Completion date June 1990).

b. Assessment of the performance of commercial microwave ovens, (Campden Food and Drink Research Association—Completion date Autumn 1990).

c. The influence of the physical, thermal and electrical properties on the quality of food heated by microwaves, (Campden Food and Drink Research Association—Completion date March 1991).

Meat Restructuring

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) of 9 February, Official Report, column 824, whether he will review his decision to curtail research into factors controlling meat restructuring processes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This research project was considered thoroughly during the near-market review and, as explained in the reply on 9 Februar; to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) at column 824 was clearly identified as being suitable for industrial support. No new information has led us to review this decision.

Extensification

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further plans he has to encourage extensification schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 2 April at column 448.

Arctic Fox Farms

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the locations of the three arctic fox farms in England and Scotland.

Mr. Maclean: No. We do not publish this information.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the gap in percentage terms between the green pound and the pound sterling for each of the common agricultural policy commodities at the latest convenient date;

(2) what was the size of the monetary compensatory amounts on each of the commodities covered by the Agriculture Council at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Maclean: The real monetary gaps (RMGs) which represent the percentage difference between green and market rates of exchange and the United Kingdom monetary compensatory amounts (MCAs), to be applied for the week beginning 23 April 1990, are shown in the table.

	RMG Per cent.	MCA Per cent.
Beef	−16·450	−15·0
Milk	−20·273	−18·8
Pigmeat	−12·872	−11·4
Eggs and Poultry	−20·273	−16·2
Cereals and Sugar	−21·194	−19·7
Olive Oil	−21·194	−11·2
Sheepmeat	−21·549	—

Notes:

1. Negative MCAs are normally calculated by deducting a franchise of 1·5 points from the RMG. A 10 point franchise is deducted from the RMG in the olive oil sector.

2. The eggs and poultry MCA is calculated by deducting a 5 point franchise from the cereals RMG.

3. No MCA is applied in the sheepmeat sector.

ENERGY

Electricity Supply

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the basis for the assumption that the area supply companies in the electricity industry will require a £5 billion programme of capital investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The estimated capital expenditure of £5 billion is based on the public electricity supply companies' (the successors to the area boards) assessment of the investment requirements of their local networks over the next five years. It includes projected expenditure on providing new connections, reinforcing the network where necessary and replacement of old equipment. The actual level of expenditure will be a matter for the companies themselves, subject to their licence and statutory obligations.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to advise prospective house purchasers on how to save energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Energy Efficiency Office within my Department provides information and advice on energy efficiency in the home, and runs publicity campaigns for which those moving and improving their homes are a priority target. It is also lending its support to home energy labelling schemes, designed to inform house purchasers on energy running costs.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what plans he has to promote energy efficiency and energy conservation by means of media advertisements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what funds have been allocated for (a) the current and (b) the next financial year for advertising aimed at encouraging the public to save energy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The total marketing budget of the Energy Efficiency Office in support of its programmes, including publications, seminars and workshops throughout the country, is £2·6 million in the current financial year. Plans for the advertising component of this budget are not finalised. The marketing budget for the next financial year has yet to be determined.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will permit energy conservation measures as an option to meet the requirements of the non-fossil fuel obligation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. Energy efficiency is being promoted by other means. The NFFO is designed to maintain diversity in generation and to share out the additional costs of achieving that diversity.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy why the energy efficiency demonstration scheme was closed in 1989.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The energy efficiency demonstration scheme was terminated when it was replaced by the best practice scheme, which has a wider scope and coverage.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what incentives exist to encourage electricity generating companies to invest in energy-saving measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Electricity generators have substantial commercial incentives to minimise their fuel costs by improving the thermal efficiency of their existing generating plant and by building more efficient plant in future. This will improve their competitive position compared with any other generators which fail to do so.

Best Practice Scheme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the budget for the best practice scheme operated within his Department; what are its primary objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The budget for the best practice programme for 1990-91 is £11·9 million. The programme's primary objectives are to foster research, development, demonstration and dissemination of energy-efficient technologies and techniques and so to advance and spread good practice in energy efficiency in industrial processes, commercial and public sectors and buildings including housing.

Sizewell B

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to require Sizewell B nuclear plant to be fitted with a special filtered containment venting system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The question of whether filtered vented containment should be fitted at Sizewell B is a matter for Nuclear Electric, which must satisfy the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate (NII) on the safety of the station. If the NII concludes that the balance of safety considerations favours the use of filtered vented containment, it has the power to require it to be fitted.

Methane Leakage

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent information he has on leakage levels of methane from the gas distribution system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information on methane emissions from a variety of sources, including the gas distribution system, is contained in table 2.12 on page 24 of the 1989 edition of the Department of the Environment's publication, "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics". A copy of this publication is in the Library of the House.

The Department of the Environment is currently undertaking a study to improve the understanding of methane emissions and thereby the accuracy of the inventory.

Office of Electricity Regulation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will outline the powers and duties of the Office of Electricity Regulation in respect of investments by the electricity generating companies.

Mr. Baldry: The director has no specific powers or duties relating to investment in electricity generation, beyond his general duties under the Electricity Act 1989. In a competitive market, special regulatory powers should not be necessary.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made an assessment of the implications of the recent European Commission ruling in respect of subsidy for renewable energy schemes for the development and application potential of the schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 18 April to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) at column 853.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the nature, scale and implications of any changes or corrections that have been made recently to the assessment of the costs of renewable energy in reports and papers for which his Department is responsible.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Each renewable energy technology is reappraised periodically in the light of the most up-to-date information. For example, a study to update the prospects for wave energy in the United Kingdom is currently under way. The Department of Energy through its agent, the energy technology support unit, makes available to the public any new information through publication of project results and studies.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his assessment of the cost of offshore wave energy, calculated on the basis of a return on investment equivalent to that achieved by the Central Electricity Generating Board over the past five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As I announced to the House on 13 November 1989, an updating study to review cost, technical and commercial viability and prospects for wave energy in the United Kingdom is currently under way. Progress reports on that study will be made available as the work is undertaken and the final report will be published.

Electricity Generating Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the potential benefits and disbenefits resulting from the introduction of least-cost planning to the electricity generating industry.

Mr. Baldry: "Least-cost planning" can sometimes increase energy efficiency in highly regulated and vertically integrated energy monopolies. In competitive industries, such as that being established in electricity generation in England and Wales, it would not increase energy efficiency but would create unnecessary bureaucracy, thereby risking inappropriate market distortions and consequent inefficiency.

Environmental Research

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much was spent in each year, from 1980 to 1989 inclusive, on environmental research by his Department.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Environmental issues are taken into account across the range of my Department's R and D programmes, but in general the environmental elements of individual programmes or projects are not separately costed.

National Society for Clean Air

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he regularly obtains for his departmental library copies of reports produced by the National Society for Clean Air; and if he has any plans to meet representatives from that organisation.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department's library obtains the society's members' handbook and the annual pollution handbook. I have no plans to meet representatives of the society.

Energy Audits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the support being offered by his Department to home energy audits.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Energy Efficiency Office (EEO) within my Department promotes and publishes a guide to householders who might wish to conduct an energy audit of their home themselves. Under the proposed home energy efficiency scheme, the EEO would offer support for the provision of expert advice on energy efficiency to householders on low incomes. For other householders who seek expert advice, the regional offices of the EEO can suggest appropriate consultants.

Radioactive Material (Transport)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what security measures are taken to ensure the safe transport by road and rail of radioactive material.

Mr. Baldry: It would not be in the nation's interest to divulge security measures. The existing arrangements are kept under continuous review and I am satisfied that they are adequate to protect public safety. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) to the then Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Lewis) on 27 July 1982 at column 438.

EMPLOYMENT

Pop Concerts (Safety)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was spent by the Health and Safety Executive in fulfilling its obligations under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 in respect of safety at pop concerts during the last year.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available as it is not possible to identify separately from other responsibilities the level of resources spent by the Health and Safety Executive on safety at pop concerts.

Agricultural Inspectorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the target frequency of visits by inspectors of the agricultural division of the Health and Safety Executive to farm premises; what is the actual frequency of visits to farm premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate's programme of preventive visits to work premises, including farm premises, is planned on the basis of an inspection rating system which is reviewed at each visit to the premises. In addition, an annual review is undertaken to take into account the period since the last preventive inspection.

Information is not available on the actual frequency of visits to farm premises, but between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 agricultural inspectors made a total of 32,041 inspection visits.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps the agricultural inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive is taking to ensure compliance with the code of practice on the sale and supply, including storage, of pesticides approved for agricultural use; what assessment he has made of the extent to which the code is being observed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate are responsible for seeking compliance with the Food and Environment Protection Act (FEPA) 1985 and the code of practice for suppliers of pesticides at premises for which they have enforcement responsibility under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and other health and safety legislation. Inspectors consider compliance with FEPA at preventive inspection visits and at visits for other purposes such as to investigate accidents, complaints and dangerous occurrences.

Information is not available on the extent to which the code of practice is being observed.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time workers there were in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: In December 1989, there were 17,071,000 full-time employees in employment in Great Britain. Details of full-time employment are not available on a regional basis.

Skill Centres

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date those persons tendering for the skill centres were informed that £11 million was to be made available to the prospective purchaser; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Skills Training Agency was offered for sale by private tender, and bidders were invited to submit offers. The sale of training businesses announced on 13 February, Official Report, columns 141-42, will involve a payment from the Government to Astra of some £11 million. This is a price determined in the sale process after open and competitive bids and subsequent negotiations. It reflects the costs of turning round a business which is currently unprofitable and creating a training business with good prospects of viability.

Earnings

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average earnings figure for all full-time workers in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available information on average earnings for full-time employees in Scotland and Great Britain is published in table X5, part A, of the 1989 new earnings survey report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Private Security Firms

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether there is any mandatory minimum rate of pay for employees of private security firms operating in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Pay in the security industry is a matter for businesses to determine in the light of all the relevant circumstances.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to monitor and to influence the employment conditions and rates of pay being applied by private security firms in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: None. Pay and conditions are a matter for the industry to determine in the light of all relevant circumstances.

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the new flexibility available to training and enterprise councils, including the new eligibility rules, in the delivery of employment training.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will have considerable freedom and flexibility in the delivery of employment training. The TECs' operating agreement outlines the arrangements for the delivery of employment training and details the eligibility rules. A copy of this document is available in the Library.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure in both cash and real terms on youth training excluding community industry in each of the years 1987-88 to 1989-90 and the planned expenditure in each of the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 for Great Britain and each of the standard regions.

Mr. Nicholls: Expenditure on YTS and planned expenditure on youth training for Great Britain are as follows:

	Column 1 Real Prices £ million	Column 2 Cash Prices £ million
1987-88	1,137·7	987·8
1988-89	1,063·4	993·8
1989-90	983·0	983·0
1990-91	836·0	878·2
1991-92	728·4	778·5
1992-93	679·5	732·8

The figures shown in column 1 are at constant (estimated) 1989-90 prices and were calculated by use of the GDP deflator index shown in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

The figures exclude community industry (included under the heading "Youth Training" in the public expenditure White Paper), evaluation, research and development and marketing.

This information is not available by standard regions.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all of the changes to youth training for the year 1990-91 and the implications for (a) the number of planned entrants, (b) the level of expenditure, (c) the duration of trainee places and (d) the provision for trainees with special needs.

Mr. Nicholls: Youth training will replace YTS nationally from 29 May. Compared with YTS, the main changes are:

except for young people with special difficulties, all young people on the programme are to be offered training programmes capable of securing for them qualifications at or equivalent to the second level of qualifications in the framework established by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications; a greater emphasis on training at craft and technician levels;

improved job finding;

greater flexibility concerning eligibility, duration of training and funding of training providers.

Youth training will, of course, be delivered by the training and enterprise councils as they come into operation. In 1990-91, 260,000 young people are expected to join youth training. Planned Exchequer funding is set at £907 million in 1990-91—this figure includes community industry expenditure.

Duration of training will be more flexible than was the case with YTS and will depend upon the time needed by the young person to acquire the skills and the recognised vocational qualifications which are contained in the young person's training plan.

Training and enterprise councils will be expected to ensure that the Government's guarantee of a suitable training place for every school leaver without a job continues to be met. The councils will also be expected to ensure suitable, quality training provision for young people who have disabilities or other significant training needs.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the details of the agreements made with the first 10 training and enterprise councils and, in particular, the arrangements for the delivery of employment training and youth training.

Mr. Eggar: The arrangements for the first 10 TECs, including those for employment and youth training, are given force by the TEC operating agreement, a copy of which is available in the Library. The details of delivery are to be found in the plans for each TEC. Summaries of plans are being prepared and will be placed in the Library on publication within three months following the plans coming into operation.

Quasi-religious Cults

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on the inclusion in publications of his Department and its associated agencies of advertising or promotional material for companies linked with quasi-religious cults; and if he will make a statement on the appearance in the Training Agency's open learning map of London of material promoting the activities of Programmes Training Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: The open learning map of London published by the Training Agency provides basic details of nearly 100 organisations producing open learning materials or providing open learning. Programmes Training Ltd. is one of these. The map includes a statement which makes it clear that inclusion of an organisation does not imply Training Agency endorsement of those organisations or a recommendation of their products.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on the provision by the Training Agency of grants to companies sending employees on courses provided by companies associated with quasi-religious cults; and what sums of money have been expended by the Training Agency on grants relating to courses run by Programmes Training Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: The provision of local training grants to companies sending employees on courses ended in March 1989 with the introduction of business growth training.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information his Department collects on the activities of religious and quasi-religious cults in the field of employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. Our policy is that proposals for employment training which could be used either directly or indirectly to promote religious views cannot be accepted for support.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of whether the recent outbreaks of violence in Britain will influence the number of tourists visiting the United Kingdom this summer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority does not believe that these events will significantly influence the number of tourists visiting Great Britain.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Health and Safety Commission concerning the need for further resources for the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has received from the Health and Safety Commission a draft of its latest plan of work and will be discussing resources with the commission in the forthcoming public expenditure review. Its judgment on the resources required for its work will be considered in that context.

Tributyltin Oxide

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what uses are still permitted for the biocide TBT; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides is currently finalising its review of tributyltin oxide (TBTO) and a statement will be issued shortly relating to the approval of pesticides containing TBTO. Currently TBTO is approved as the active ingredient in a variety of pesticide products including wood preservatives and anti-fouling products. The ACP has recently commenced work on other tributyltin compounds used in surface biocides and wood preservatives.

Pesticides

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent storage of pesticides is subject to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Pesticides within the scope of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards (CIMAH) Regulations 1984 are those which:

(i) are listed in schedule 2 to the regulations and are kept in isolated storage above specified threshold quantities; or

(ii) meet the indicative criteria set out in schedule 1, or are listed in schedule 3 and are kept in quantities above specified thresholds, where the storage is associated with a process operation subject to the regulations.

An amendment to the CIMAH regulations is currently in preparation in order to implement the second amending directive (88/610/EEC) to the "Seveso" directive (82/501/EEC). This will broaden the scope of CIMAH so that among other things it will have greater application to the storage of pesticides.

COSH Regulations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what number and percentage of employers have completed their workplace assessments as required by section 6 of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 20 April 1990]: There is no requirement under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations to notify to the Health and Safety Executive the completion of the assessments required under those regulations. The information requested is not therefore available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of prosecutions, (b) the average fine and (c) the number of improvement and prohibition notices issued to date under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 20 April 1990]: These regulations did not become operative until October 1989. Consequently the information requested, relating to the 1989-90 statistical year, is not yet available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prescription Charges

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will set out the arrangements governing repayment schemes relating to prescription charge repayments for policemen, firemen and their families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Police regulations and the National Joint Council for Local Authorities Fire Brigades (NJC) scheme of conditions of service provide for the reimbursement of certain National Health Service charges incurred by police officers and local authority fire fighters. These are charges for drugs, medicines and appliances or for dental treatment incurred under sections 77 to 79 of the National Health Service Act 1977 as amended.

The NJC scheme, but not police regulations, also provides discretion for fire authorities to reimburse certain other medical costs in the interests of efficiency. Arrangements for reimbursing charges do not extend to the families of police officers unless they are also members of the service or to the families of firefighters.

Prisoners' Earnings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the range of weekly earnings for prisoners on standard piece rate.

Mr. Mellor: Under the standard piece rate scheme, individual inmates are paid according to their own output or that of a group and may earn up to a maximum of £3·95 per week.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the maximum earnings of a remand prisoner.

Mr. Mellor: In certain very limited circumstances a remand prisoner may earn up to £5·87 per week (the maximum for a sentenced prisoner), but generally the maximum weekly pay is £2·25.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the range of weekly earnings for prisoners on the modified piece scheme.

Mr. Mellor: The modified piece work scheme is an incentive earnings scheme applied to certain workshops and parties with a designated working week of 23 hours or more. The pay range for production workers is from £3·18 to £5·87 per week and for support workers from £2·23 to £5·27 per week.

Television Licences

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish for each of the last five years the number of successful prosecutions for not possessing a valid television receiver licence, separately disfinguishing Wales and England.

Mr. Mellor: Information supplied by the national television licence records office is given in the table. The data are based on the areas covered by each television licence inquiry office. The Llandudno office covers part of England and the Shrewsbury office covers part of Wales.

Penal Establishments

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles are currently being held in prison department establishments; in which establishments and in which wings of those establishments they are situated; whether juveniles are at all times separated from young adult or adult offenders; and whether unconvicted juveniles are separated from convicted prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: For the number of juveniles and the establishments in which they were held I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 23 April at column 24. Details of the location of each juvenile within the establishment are not recorded centrally. The table, however, gives the readily available information about accommodation for juveniles in the establishments concerned.

In local prisons and remand centres male juveniles are at all times separated from adult prisoners and, so far as is practicable, are accommodated separately from young adults. Unconvicted prisoners are separated from convicted prisoners so far as this can reasonably be done, but mixing under close supervision may occur for certain regime activities such as education. Wherever possible, convicted juveniles are accommodated in separate wings or discrete units.

In the female prison system sentenced female juveniles are held in establishments which also house young adult and adult female offenders, but their sleeping accommodation is in areas specifically designated for young offenders. Unconvicted female juveniles are not held in prison custody.

Welsh Courts

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of males under the age of 17 years remanded in custody in remand centres from Welsh courts during 1988;

(2) what was the total number of males under the age of 17 years who were made subject to unruly certificates from Welsh courts during 1988.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the question from the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 8 March 1990 at column 821.

Puppy Farms

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning puppy farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following the Adjournment debate on 21 December initiated by the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams), I have received a number of representations on this subject from a variety of sources, including hon. Members, local authorities and members of the public. I am conscious of the need to ensure that all dog breeding establishments comply with the requirements of the law.

Katyn

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in the light of the events of Friday 12 April, whether the circumstances surrounding the massacre of Katyn are no longer within the ambit of the War Crimes Bill provisions.

Mr. John Patten: The Government welcome the recent acknowledgement by the Soviet authorities concerning responsibility for the Katyn massacre. We are unaware of any allegations that any of the perpetrators of the massacre may now be living in the United Kingdom, and there is therefore no reason to broaden the terms of the Bill.

Cardiff Prison

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners Cardiff prison is designed to accommodate.

Mr. Mellor: Prior to the recent disturbances at Cardiff, the certified normal accommodation was 252 in the local prison and 85 in the remand centre. Some 95 places have since been lost in the local prison, but should be repaired and available for use within the next four weeks.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many prisoners were accommodated at Cardiff prison on 1 February, 1 March, 1 April and 15 April, respectively, and how many on each occasion were (a) awaiting a court hearing, (b) awaiting sentence and (c) young prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is set out in the table below:

	1 February 1990	1 March 1990	1 April 1990	15 April 1990
Total population	441	451	433	347
(a) awaiting a court hearing[1]	192	206	187	111
(b) awaiting sentence[2]	55	60	56	21
(c) young offenders[3]	80	92	88	0

[1] Includes adult and young offenders, convicted unsentenced and inmates on remand. The number of sentenced inmates subject to a further court appearance is not recorded centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.
[2] Includes young and adult convicted unsentenced.
[3] Includes remand, convicted unsentenced and sentenced.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Home Improvements

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what steps his Department and/or the Northern Ireland Executive have taken to encourage and assist elderly home owners to take up repair/improvement grants to bring their homes up to acceptable standards;

(2) which voluntary organisations have been providing services on an agency basis to the Housing Executive, in encouraging and assisting elderly home owners to take up repair/improvement grants to bring their homes up to acceptable standards; how long such arrangements have been in operation; and in which areas of Northern Ireland they have operated.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These matters fall within the day-to-day administration of the renovation grants scheme by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand that it is estimated that 40 per cent. of applicants for repair grants are elderly and in 1989 the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's priority groups for receipt of such grants was extended to include the elderly. There is a disproportionately lower number of improvement grant applications from the elderly and this reflects not only the financial difficulties facing them but the disruption caused by improvement work.

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive provides advice and guidance via its network of local grants offices throughout the Province to elderly home-owners wishing to take up repair and improvement grants to bring their homes up to acceptable standards. In response to the level of demand the executive also provides a dedicated home improvements for the elderly service in three of its six regions (Belfast, south-east and north-east) through which assistance is provided at each stage in the grants process from preliminary inspection through to completion. A similar type of service is also available to rural dwellers in the executive's west region.

Voluntary organisations continue to play a vital role in providing assistance to elderly and disabled home owners. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is currently finalising an agreement with Fold Housing Trust for a "Care and Repair" agency service which is intended to provide a comprehensive service of advice and assistance to the elderly, disabled and those in financial hardship. Within the next 18 months this service is expected to be made available throughout the Province and initial estimates are for an annual turnover of around 400 cases of which approximately 200 would be grant-aided.

Until now voluntary organisations have provided a home improvements for the elderly service on an agency basis in various parts of the Province as follows:

(i) from 1982 Fold Housing Trust has provided a service in the south-east and north-east regions;
(ii) from 1982 to 1987 the Northern Ireland Federation of Housing Associations provided a service in the Belfast area; and
(iii) from January 1988 Shelter (NI) has provided a service in the Strabane and Londonderry areas.

Hedgerows

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many miles of hedgerows have been removed, and how many miles planted (a) since 1 January 1960 and (b) since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available because grants for the removal of hedgerows stopped a number of years ago.

Bus Services

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what conclusions he has reached on the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the bus services in Northern Ireland provided by Ulsterbus Ltd. and Citybus Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have today placed in the Library of the House the initial response produced by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, in consultation with the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company and the bus companies, to the report submitted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in June 1989.

I am grateful to the commission for the comprehensive review it carried out and the series of 58 recommendations it made. The commission found an effective, low-cost and lean organisation with short chains of command supported by loyal, hard-working and often courageous staff. The report noted the high level of civil disorder with which the companies have had to cope, reflected in the destruction of over 1,100 buses since 1969. It especially commented on the dedication of staff at all levels in maintaining services in the face of severe harassment.

The commission confirmed that the companies do not operate against the public interest. The report contained 58 recommendations most of which have been accepted and, where appropriate, are being implemented. This should result in a marked improvement of services to the public and the management of the companies. The companies are still considering the feasibility of a few recommendations.

The Department continues in dialogue with the companies about the implementation of the recommendations and I will report on progress to the House in due course.

Lough Foyle

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the area of land lost to the sea between the estuary of the River Roe and Magilligan Point during the last (a) five years, (b) 10 years, (c) 15 years and (d) 20 years; what evidence he has on changes in the rate of erosion; what evidence he has on the long term change in the level of the land above sea level in that area; and whether he has any approaches to the EEC for funding for coastal protection works to protect the environment of the Lough Foyle foreshore.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 3 April 1990]: The information is not available.

The expenditure necessary to stop erosion on this portion of the Lough Foyle coast could not be justified as the cost of coastal protection works would be greatly in excess of the value of the land at risk, consequently EC funding has not been sought.

Police Rent Allowances

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make an estimate of the cost to public funds of (a) uprating rent allowance for the Royal Ulster

Constabulary by the index agreed by the police negotiating board and (b) by the movement in the retail price index since the force maximum was last reviewed.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 April 1990]: The actual indices for the period 1 April 1988 to 1 April 1990 are not yet available, but it is estimated that uprating by the index recommended by the PNB would cost approximately £5·8 million and uprating by the retail prices index would cost approximately £5 million.

Farm Woodlands Scheme

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to improve uptake under the farm woodlands scheme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 18 April 1990]: The farm woodlands scheme has, since its inception, had extensive advisory and media coverage and will be widely publicised again in August-September prior to the new planting year.

The scheme as it is administered in Northern Ireland is, for all practical purposes, identical with the scheme in the rest of the United Kingdom with the same terms and conditions. The scheme is being kept under review throughout the United Kingdom and any measures adopted to improve uptake will apply in Northern Ireland.

Vehicle Imports

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table of how many motor vehicles, what types and class, were imported as (a) new vehicles and (b) secondhand vehicles into Northern Ireland from the Irish Republic in each of the last five years; and what percentage of the total sales of (i) new vehicles and (ii) secondhand vehicles this represents in each class and type in each year, or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 April 1990]: The Department of Environment for Northern Ireland does not hold information about actual sales of new or second-hand vehicles.

The information set out in the tables relates to vehicles registered for the first time in Northern Ireland and vehicles imported as new or having previously been registered and used in the Republic of Ireland.

	A New (excl Imports)	B Imported new from ROI (not previously registered)	C B as per cent. of A and B	D Registered in ROI prior to importation to NI	E D as per cent. of A and B and D

Fish Stocks

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show how many cases of pollution of rivers and lakes were known to him in each of the last three years; how many in each year resulted in fish kill; and how many of these cases were the result of pollution by (a) the Department of the Environment and (b) the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 April 1990]: The number of pollution incidents investigated on behalf of the Department of the Environment by the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland and the Foyle Fisheries Commission over the last three years and the number of associated fish kills are as follows:

Pollution incidents	995	1,001	903
Fish kills	33	27	57

Pollution investigations were also undertaken by environmental health (rivers) officers who act in conjunction with the fisheries bodes as required. We are unable to identify incidents directly attributable to the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. For the three years in question there were 39, 32 and 36 incidents respectively reported which involved sewage or water treatment works.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research has been carried out into the stocks of brown trout in Lough Neagh over the past decade; and where the results of such research have been published.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 April 1990]: None that I am aware of.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the stocks of brown trout in Lough Neagh are now higher or lower than was the case five years, 10 years and 15 years ago; and whether the size and weight of the fish has increased or decreased.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 April 1990]: In the absence of any research into the stocks of brown trout in Lough Neagh and detailed catch statistics from fishermen, it is not possible to state whether the stocks of brown trout are now higher or lower than was the case five years, 10 years and 15 years ago or whether the size and weight of fish has increased or decreased.

The spawning record shows that there are fluctuations from year to year in the number of redds counted in the various tributaries of the Lough Neagh catchment, but as a general guide they do not indicate any long-term trend in the overall state of the stock.

A copy of the spawning record is provided at table V in the 1988 annual report of the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Belfast Ministerial Visit

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of the police and Army security operation mounted for the visit to Belfast of the Prime Minister of the Republic of Eire; and whether any part of the cost will be met from (a) European Community funds, (b) the Eire Government and (c) the Institute of Directors.

Mr. Cope: The extra cost of the police operation could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. None of the cost will be met from European Community Funds, the Government of the Republic of Ireland or the Institute of Directors. The cost of the Army operation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Woburn House, Millisle

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of carpeting, furnishing and general refurbishment of Woburn house, Millisle, when it was decided to use it as a prison officers' school; how many staff are employed; and what is the number of recruits in training.

Mr. Cope: Woburn house became the Northern Ireland prison service college on 12 January 1981. As payment records are not retained beyond the minimum of seven years in accord with Her Majesty's Treasury regulations the information required is not available.

As at 19 April 1990, there was a total of 54 staff employed at the prison service college, Woburn house, Millisle. There are presently 24 recruits in full-time training at the college—21 males and three females. Other part-time and short courses are run at the college as well.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any valuation was made of the woodworking and other equipment formerly housed at the young offenders centre, Millisle, before it was disposed of when the centre was transferred to Hyde park, Purdysburn.

Mr. Cope: The available records relating to the equipment and machinery used for vocational training at the borstal at Millisle indicate that the bulk of these items were transferred to the new young offenders' centre at Hydebank Wood and to Lisnevin training school. A few items which were not required, were disposed of under the Government regulations covering the disposal of surplus equipment. As detailed financial records for this period some 10 years ago no longer exist, it is not possible to say what the value of these items were.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Firms

75. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures the Government are taking to reduce the burden of bureaucracy on small firms.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

The Government recognise that the burden of complying with regulation is greater for small firms. The deregulation initiative, co-ordinated by my Department, therefore takes particular account of their problems. Additional departmental deregulation reviews under the rolling programme and wider cross-departmental work on, for example, simplification of small company accounts, which I announced on 21 December last, promise useful improvements in the regulatory environment. Recent studies by my Department of the problems of getting established in particular sectors will help us target future deregulatory activity more effectively.

Examples of recent action which should help small firms include the Department of Employment's easing of restrictions on the employment of women and young people and publication of their "self-employment starter pack". Also, important changes were announced in the Budget, including a new scheme of comprehensive bad debt relief and an increase in the VAT registration threshold. My own Department has simplified the provisions for shareholder information and streamlined radiocommunications licensing.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies in Scotland applied for assistance under the Department of Trade and Industry's enterprise initiative between April 1988 and April 1989, and from April 1989 to date; and how many companies in Scotland were actually given assistance under the scheme during each of these periods.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The enterprise initiative is a comprehensive package of DTI services, including the consultancy initiatives, regional selective assistance (RSA), regional enterprise grants (REG), collaborative research programmes, the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART), the enterprise and education initiative, the managing into the '90s programme and the export initiative.

Applications for assistance are only made under project—based programmes. The information requested for Scotland under these programmes is as follows:

	1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989	1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990
Consultancy initiatives:[1]
Applications	1,529	1,405
Projects approved	1,299	1,162
Regional selective assistance:
Applications	255	313
Projects approved	221	242
Regional enterprise grants:
Applications	482	673
Projects approved	226	432
Smart:[2]
Applications	74	196
Projects approved	9	20

[1] The consultancy initiatives also provides assistance in the form of a business review which is provided to 98 per cent. of applicants.
[2] SMART is a competition-based programme. Due to a change in the closing date for the 1990 competition, the 1989-90 statistics include the applications for the two years competitions, but only one year's winners, as the 1990 winners have yet to be announced.

Accounting Practices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policies regarding off-balance sheet financing schemes.

Mr. Redwood: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 4 April at column 621.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in view of his Department's criticisms of the standard of audit work done by major auditing firms, he will issue statements to warn investors of the quality of work done by such firms.

Mr. Redwood: No. It is for investors to form their own view about those criticised in reports of inspectors which my Department has published.

CCAB Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether following the letter dated 16 November 1989 from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, he has examined the annual report and accounts filed by CCAB Ltd.

Mr. Redwood: Yes.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is planning to cease using the auditing firms criticised by his inspectors as auditors for the public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: When making or approving such appointments my Department takes all relevant factors into account.

Institute of Chartered Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish any comments made by his Department on the draft syllabus published by the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr. Redwood: No. It would not be appropriate to do so.

Company Directors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations from the Bank of England concerning the encouragement or otherwise of the appointment of non-executive directors by major companies.

Mr. Redwood: The Bank of England has over a long period encouraged the appointment of non-executive directors and this is also the Department's policy.

Libya

Mr. Jannan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current estimate for the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Libya.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the value of United Kingdom visible trade with Libya is published in the "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom, Business Monitor MM20", table Ib.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to bring in regulations to define private persons in the sections of the Companies Act 1989 which restrict actions for damages under section 62 of the Financial Services Act 1986; and what consultations he has carried out on such regulations.

Mr. Redwood: My Department will undertake public consultation on its proposals for defining private investor before making the relevant regulations under section 193 of the Companies Act 1989. The intention is to commence such consultations shortly.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many actions for damages under section 62 of the Financial Services Act 1986 have been brought; by whom; and with what result.

Mr. Redwood: Actions under section 62 of the Financial Services Act 1986 are private actions for damages, and as such my Department would not necessarily expect to hear of such cases. In the only instance of which I am aware, the case was decided against the plaintiff.

Education-Business Partnerships

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans the Government have for local education-business partnerships and for the teacher placement service.

Mr. Ridley: I am pleased to announce on behalf of myself and my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Employment, that the Government intend to support local education business partnerships across the country. The new partnerships will build on the work already done under the enterprise and education initiative, TVEI and compacts, and foster the development of the work-related aspects of the national curriculum.

Partnerships involve local education and business interests in work that brings schools and other educational institutions, industry and commerce closer together for the benefit of young people and the economy.

The Government also intend to build wherever possible on existing partnership work. Where they are in a position to make effective proposals, the new training and enterprise councils will be offered the first opportunity to lead and co-ordinate the development of this activity; otherwise, other local bodies and organisations will be invited to bid for this role.

There will be a development phase over the next 12 months in which my colleagues and I will collaborate closely. The Foundation for Education Business Partnerships, which has been established by industrial and education interests to foster partnership activity will be kept closely in touch.

Financial support will come initially from my Department. With the formation of partnerships from April 1991, the Department's Training Agency will take the lead.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland will make separate announcements about their arrangements for partnerships.

The teacher placement service will continue. Arrangements for its future administration will be developed together with those for local partnerships.

Mergers

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning his policy on referring completed mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Ridley: Section 64(4) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 provides that I may refer a qualifying merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) within six months of the date of the completion of the merger or the date on which material facts about the merger are made public or made available to me or to the Director General of Fair Trading. In addition, I am required, under section 64(5) of the Act, to make my decision on whether or not to refer the merger as soon as is reasonably practicable.

Many mergers are either made public or discussed with the Director General of Fair Trading before they take effect. But when a merger is completed before any such announcement or discussion, I am anxious to be in a position as soon as possible to decide whether it should be referred to the MMC. In such cases therefore I shall be looking to the director general for early advice, and to the companies concerned for their cooperation with his Office to enable him to give it. If, in such a case, I had reason to believe that the merger could raise competition or other public interest issues, and that the director general's inquiries were not being answered fully and promptly, I would not allow the lack of full information to deter me from requiring an investigation by the MMC.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the number of companies which his Department have prosecuted for the failure to meet the disabled employee quota since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

There have been no prosecutions since 1979 against companies that failed to fulfil their obligation under the quota scheme established by the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Government assistance has been given to Liverpool through housing investment programmes (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: Details of the allocations made to Liverpool city council since 1978-79, the first year in which housing investment programme allocations were made, are listed below. Since 1981-82 authorities have been able to augment the borrowing power of their HIP allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts. For 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation does not convey borrowing approval directly.

Housing investment programme allocations for Liverpool city council

1978-79	35,460
1979-80	42,430
1980-81	47,230
1981-82	39,788
1982-83	49,337
1983-84	41,850
1984-85	38,499
1985-86	31,000
1986-87	27,500
1987-88	25,300
1988-89	20,588
1989-90	[1]23,207
1990-91	[2]33,687

Notes:
[1] Provisional.
[2] Initial allocations only.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 5 April given by the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central, if he will list the public meetings held by or attended by the Leeds Development Corporation to which he refers.

Mr. Moynihan: The development corporation has held and attended public meetings with the local business community about the planning framework for the Calls and Riverside area and with residents of Armley, Kirkstall and Beza road, Hunslet.

The planning meetings of the development corporation are also open to the public.

Earthquake

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location the damage that was recorded in the counties of Yorkshire and Humberside after the earthquake that was felt in these areas on 2 April and the seismographic scale.

Mr. Moynihan: No comprehensive list of damage caused by the Bishops Castle earthquake of 2 April 1990, exists at present. Information on damage and other felt effects is being collected by the British Geological Survey under the United Kingdom seismic monitoring and information service which is funded by a number of organisations including the Natural Environment Research Council and my Department. The survey has yielded about 6,000 replies so far and further information is being received daily.

It will be several months before all of the information has been studied in detail, but preliminary analysis indicates that little or no damage occurred in Yorkshire and Humberside. The earthquake measured about 5·4 on the Richter seismographic scale.

Kilbury Sewage Treatment Works

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he hopes to reply to a letter written on 27 February by the Staverton parish council about discharge consent standards at Kilbury sewage treatment works, Buckfastleigh, Devon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I wrote to Staverton parish council and to my hon. Friend on 23 April.

Waste

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what examination he is making of alternatives to the source separation of the waste stream prior to recycling; if he has any information concerning the effect mechanical separation would have on the percentage of refused derived products from waste; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of source separation of the domestic waste stream on the ability to recycle domestic waste output; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list those local authorities in England and Wales that his Department is aware of that currently recycle all or part of the domestic waste stream, using the mechanical sorting of waste as opposed to source separation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is not available at present but is currently being sought from local authorities through a comprehensive survey of their recycling activity. Issues relating to the collection and sorting of waste are being considered by the advisory group on recycling jointly run by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Refuse-derived Fuel Pellets

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much public money has been spent on plants sponsored by his Department investigating the manufacture and use of refuse-derived fuel pellets; if he will list the performance figures from those plants; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list such private sector research of which he is currently aware into the manufacture and use of refuse derived fuel pellets; and if he will undertake a comparative study between their findings and data from plants sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: About £12 million has been spent by my Department between 1974 and 1986 on pilot schemes for the manufacture and use of refuse-derived fuel pellets. The results have been published by the Warren Spring laboratory, for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is responsible. Technical problems have now largely been solved, but further work is needed on marketing. Any comparison of these results and private sector research results would be a matter for prospective purchasers of equipment.

Housing Transfers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the light of the outcome of the arrangements to transfer the housing stock of Rochester-upon-Medway city council, he will revise his guidelines regarding voluntary transfers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our criteria remain those set out in the guidelines, "Large Scale Voluntary Transfers of Local Authority Housing to Private Bodies", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy not to approve any future proposal by Rochester-upon-Medway city council to transfer its housing stock to another landlord which is not accompanied by financial assistance to the tenants' association to emply independent financial and legal advice.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Any local authority wishing to dispose of tenanted housing must comply with the requirements of schedule 3A to the Housing Act 1985. The Secretary of State will consider whether the authority has, in his view, met these requirements before deciding whether to give consent to the disposal. It is for the authority to decide whether it will provide tenants with financial assistance for obtaining external advice.

Hillingdon Vehicle Maintenance Department

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what grounds he used his powers under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 to compel the London borough of Hillingdon to close its vehicle maintenance department.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton on 13 March at column 189.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the National Rivers Authority for additional staffing and resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The National Rivers Authority is currently preparing its first corporate plan. My officials are in discussion with the authority about this and about resources generally. The Government are committed to ensuring the NRA has the necessary resources to carry out its functions effectively. Grant in aid to the NRA for 1990-91 is £93 million.

Sports Clubs (Rate Relief)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many councils have agreed to grant discretionary rate relief to sports clubs for the year 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: The information for which my hon. Friend asks is not available. Authorities will not necessarily yet have dealt with all applications for relief. We intend, however, to collect later in the year information about the use that authorities have made of their discretion.

Ozone Levels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why, in the light of his Department's news release of 3 August 1989, no public announcement was made in respect of ozone levels on 17 March and 18 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In accordance with the Department's news release of 3 August 1989, information on ozone levels occurring on 17 and 18 March, and also 31 March and 1 April was available from the Department's press office the morning of the day after the episode commenced. No journalist asked for this summary.

Petrol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to assess (a) the level of carcinogens and (b) the health risks associated with the carcinogens produced by (i) leaded and (ii) unleaded petrol.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department funds a substantial programme of research investigating pollution emissions from vehicles using leaded and unleaded petrol. Special emphasis is placed upon organic micro-pollutants, including benzene.

The evidence on human exposure to these pollutants provided by this research will be evaluated by the Department of Health for possible health effects.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his meeting at Sandringham in Norfolk with European Commissioners; and whether he discussed rain forest issues.

Mr. Chris Patten: His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales invited Sr. Ripa di Meana, European Commissioner for the Environment, and Mr. Ray McSharry, European Commissioner for Agriculture, to visit Sandringham on 19-20 April. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I were also invited. Discussions were wide ranging.

Victoria Tower

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to undertake the restoration of the stonework to the Victoria tower at the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I am pleased to announce that a contract for the repair and restoration of the stonework on the Victoria tower and the south elevation of the Palace of Westminster overlooking Victoria tower garden was let to John Laing Construction Ltd. shortly before Easter. Work will start later this month. It will take four years to complete at a cost of some £7 million.

The placing of this contract marks the start of the final stage of the restoration of the exterior of the Palace of Westminster which began in 1981. It is intended to follow on with the restoration of the stonework of the internal courtyards.

Community Charge

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his statement of 3 April on charge capping, what were his decisions in relation to capping Lambeth borough council for 1990-91.

Mr. Chris Patten: On the basis of the principles that I adopted for inner-London boroughs, Lambeth's revised budget of £293·9 million is, in my opinion, excessive. On 10 April, I therefore designated the authority for charge capping in accordance with those principles, and proposed a cap of £285·1 million, a reduction of £8·8 million or £51 per adult. I am satisfied that, on the basis of the information available to me, the proposed cap is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of Lambeth. The authority has 28 days, beginning on 10 April 1990, in which to let me know whether it accepts the proposed cap or, if not, what alternative cap it is proposing together with the reasons for it.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of people who will be required to pay standard community charge in respect of second homes in each local authority in England.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 April 1990]: This information is not available.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there are any circumstances under which those residing on islands would qualify for a reduction in their community charge bills; and whether such residents qualified for a reduction under the old domestic rating system.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The qualifying conditions for a reduction in community charges, either through community charge benefit, student status or transitional relief apply equally to residents on islands as to residents on the mainland. Under the old domestic rating system, the same principles in respect of rebates and reliefs applied.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent estimate of the total expenditure on the collection of the poll tax (a) in Scotland in the year 1989-90 and (b) in (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales in the year 1990-91.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The Government's latest estimate for collecting the community charge in England in 1990-91 is £400 million. The cost of community charge collection in Scotland and Wales are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales respectively.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to fix the maximum standard community charge at nil for empty dwellings in England and Wales on agricultural or forestry land.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 23 April 1990]: We have prescribed nine classes of property in respect of which no standard charge is payable. We have also given wide discretion to local authorities to specify additional classes of property for special treatment. Local authorities could, if they saw fit, specify a class of property relating to empty agricultural dwellings for which a lower multiplier would be applied. However, such a discretion may be exercised only before the start of the financial year in which it is intended to operate.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to change the arrangements whereby local authorities may fix a standard community charge on self-catering holiday cottages, chalets and the like, with an impact above the level of current rates on farm income from this source.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 23 April 1990]: A standard charge will be payable in respect of self-catering accommodation only if the property is to be treated as domestic property, does not give rise to business rates and if no person has his or her sole or main residence there. In such circumstances, unless the local authority had chosen to specify such a class of property for special treatment, the property would be subject to the standard charge in the same way as other qualifying properties. A property will be subject to business rates if it is available for letting commercially for short periods of 140 days or more per year to individuals whose sole or main residence is elsewhere.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take either to secure the retention of the South Yorkshire hazardous waste unit or to provide for the environmental protection of south Yorkshire as far as the tipping, storage and management of harmful or toxic waste is concerned.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I were concerned to receive notice of the intention of Sheffield and Doncaster to withdraw from the voluntary agreement on waste regulation in South Yorkshire with effect from 1 April 1991. We believe that satisfactory arrangements for the management of hazardous waste within the metropolitan areas require effective co-operation between all the districts in these areas and that is why, in cases where voluntary agreements were not forthcoming in 1985, statutory arrangements were introduced under the Local Government Act 1985. Consequently, I would hope that Sheffield and Doncaster will reconsider their position in relation to the voluntary agreement. In the meantime, I have asked Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to let me have a full assessment of the position.

Acid Deposition

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent assessment he has made of the effect of acid deposition on trees; what percentage of trees he estimates are (a) dying from (b) otherwise affected by acid deposition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The Forestry Commission has carried out a national monitoring programme of annual tree health surveys since 1984. In 1989, tree health showed an overall improvement for the second year running.

A study of the effects of air pollution, including acid deposition, on trees was carried out for the Department by the United Kingdom terrestrial effects review group (TERG). The report was published in July 1988 and copies placed in the Library of the House. It concludes that there is as yet no direct proof that air pollution is damaging trees in the United Kingdom, but that some forests are subjected to pollution climates which may be expected to cause stress.

Further laboratory and field study data, including information from the Forestry Commission's programme, have become available since the publication of the TERG report which may enable more precise conclusions to be drawn. The Department has therefore set up a sub-group of TERG specifically to evaluate this new information. The group will report in January 1991.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) of 20 February, Official Report, column 656, if he will now make a further statement on the feasibility of compiling a register of contaminated land.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 April 1990]: I am sympathetic to the idea of compiling registers in appropriate form and expect to receive later this week, the report of the internal working party which has been looking at this. I will announce my proposals at the earliest opportunity.

Environmental Research

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much, for each year from 1980 to 1989, inclusive, was spent by his Department on environmental research to meet (a) United Kingdom needs, (b) European needs, and (c) global needs.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The expenditure of the Department of the Environment on environmental research to meet United Kingdom needs between 1980 and 1989 is as follows:

Year	£ million
1980-81	24·1
1981-82	23·7
1982-83	21·3
1983-84	20·4

Year	£ million
1984-85	20·8
1985-86	24·9
1986-87	25·7
1987-88	27·3
1988-89	29·9
1989-90	35·5

None of the above expenditure has met European needs directly. The above expenditure does, however, cover research on global issues amounting to £190,000 in 1988-89 and £950,000 in 1989-90.

Oil Spillage (Antarctic)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the pollution from oil spillage in the Antarctic.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 23 April 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

There are no comprehensive data on the quantities of oil spilled in the Antarctic. Overall the impact of oil pollution is believed to be insignificant. The British Antarctic Survey reports only three spills of any size from its operations within the last 10 years. None of these spills, of marine gas oil, amounted to more than six barrels and none had any recorded environmental impact.

Following a number of reported incidents by other national operators in the Antarctic, notably the sinking of the supply vessel Bahia Paraiso, the Antarctic treaty consultative parties discussed at their 15th meeting in Paris in October 1989 the prevention, control and response to marine pollution. Recommendations passed included measures to prohibit certain discharges and disposal from vessels, requirements for vessels to comply with specific international conventions on vessel safety and pollution control and a requirement for Governments to increase mutual co-operation in hydographic survey and charting in Antarctic waters, to assist in navigational safety and environmental protection.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Libya

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the number of British nationals currently working in Libya; and what were the figures for each year since 1985.

Mr. Waldegrave: Not all British citizens in Libya register with the British interests section in Tripoli, but we estimate that since 1985 the British community there has numbered between 3,500 and 5,000.

Peru

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has raised with the Peruvian Government the detention of Victor Taipe Zuniga, president of the National Mineworkers Federation.

Mr. Maude: No.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Peruvian Government about the detention of politicians, trade union leaders and trade union representatives.

Mr. Maude: We frequently raise with the Peruvian authorities the cases of individuals who have been detained or who have disappeared in Peru, including politicians and trade union leaders and representatives.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Peruvian ambassador; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last met the Peruvian ambassador on 18 January, at a lunch given by the Latin American heads of mission in London, at which a wide range of issues were discussed.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised with the Peruvian Government the subject of the violation of human rights in that country.

Mr. Maude: We frequently stress to the Peruvian Government our support for democracy in Peru and our wish that human rights be fully respected.

Uganda

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Ugandan High Commissioner; and whether at that meeting he raised the subject of claims for compensation on behalf of British citizens.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since his appointment last October, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not had a formal meeting with the Ugandan high commissioner. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development raised this subject with President Museveni when she visited Uganda in March.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the bilateral agreements between the United Kingdom Government and Uganda, (b) when they were signed and (c) when they are individually due for review or and renewal.

Mr. Waldegrave: The main bilateral agreements signed by Her Majesty's Government with Uganda since 1986, when President Museveni came to power, are:

(i) The Overseas Service (Uganda) Agreement; signed at Kampala 18 March 1986 and entered into force on 31 March 1986. Treaty Series/Command number not yet allocated. To be reviewed before 31 March 1991.

(ii) The Public Officers' Pensions (Uganda) Amendment Agreement; signed at Kampala on 29 October 1987 and entered into force the same day. Treaty Series/Command number 057/1988 Cm. 145. To be reviewed as necessary.

(iii) The United Kingdom/Ugandan Debt Agreement No. 3 (1987); signed at Kampala on 26 April 1988 and entered into force on 5 May 1988. Treaty Series/Command number 067/1988 Cm. 482. Under review.

A number of aid agreements have also been concluded during the period.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens have outstanding claims for compensation against the Government of Uganda.

Mr. Waldegrave: No exact figure is available, but the Ugandan Government have reported that they have received slightly over 1,000 claims for compensation from persons in Britain. The majority of these will have been from British citizens and remain outstanding.

Lithuania and Kashmir

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct his Department to convey to the official representatives of the Governments of the Soviet Union and India, respectively, the views of Her Majesty's Government on the demands for independence emerging from Lithuania and Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are in regular contact with both the Soviet and Indian Governments on the situations in Lithuania and Kashmir. Both Governments are well aware of our views on the issues arising.

Iraq

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to raise at the United Nations the human rights record of the present regime in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have raised, and will continue to raise, our concerns about Iraq's human rights record, both directly with the Iraqi authorities and in all suitable international bodies. We expressed our views firmly at the recent UN Commission of Human Rights in Geneva.

EC Foreign Ministers (Meeting)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the topics discussed, and conclusions reached, at the meeting of Foreign Ministers of the European Community at Dublin castle on 21 April.

Mr. Maude: EC Foreign Ministers met in Dublin on 21 April to discuss preparations for the informal meeting of Community Heads of State or Government on 28 April. Ministers first considered the latest developments in Lithuania and the economic measures introduced by Moscow. The Twelve issued a statement expressing their serious concern and underlining that measures of a coercive nature could make no contribution to the search for a solution through dialogue. Ministers agreed to keep the situation and its policy implications under continuous review. An official working group will meet for this purpose this week.

Ministers discussed the implications for the Community of developments in central and eastern Europe. They welcomed the prospect of German unification and the integration of GDR territory into the Community: the meeting on 28 April will discuss how to ensure this is achieved as quickly, fully and smoothly as possible. They also discussed—as will the meeting on 28 April—how best to ensure the healthy development of the Community's relations with other countries of central and eastern Europe, and envisaged a network of association agreements, tailored to the individual circumstances, and the pace of reform, in each of the countries concerned.

Ministers also briefly discussed EC institutional reform, and the Franco-German proposal that Foreign Ministers should be asked to consider member states' ideas and report to the June and December European Councils. This issue, too, will be further discussed on 28 April.

DEFENCE

Security Costs

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total cost of the security operation by Army and Royal Air Force personnel in connection with the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Belfast on Wednesday 11 April.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The armed forces in Northern Ireland provided military support as requested by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. It is not our practice to detail the costs of military assistance provided for specific security operations in Northern Ireland.

Low Flying

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish for each of the last 10 years (i) the number of low-flying Royal Air Force training aircraft that have crashed over Wales, (ii) the dates of those crashes, (iii) the number of casualties and (iv) the value of the aircraft lost.

Mr. Neubert: Details of major incidents involving RAF training aircraft flying at low level over Wales in the last 10 years are as follows:

Date	Aircraft type	Casualties
22 April 1982	Hunter	One major injury (RAF) No civilian casualties
13 May 1982	Jet Provost	No casualties
5 August 1982	Hunter	No casualties Two fatalities (one RAF and one Royal Brunei
20 April 1983	Gazelle	Armed Service) No civilian casualties

It is not our policy to publish unit production costs.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force pilots have been disciplined for flying below the minimum height while involved in training exercises over Wales.

Mr. Neubert: Very few complaints reveal irresponsible breaches of low flying regulations and, therefore, formal disciplinary action is infrequent. Since 1979, from when records are available, no Royal Air Force pilots have been formally disciplined for flying below the minimum height during training exercises over Wales.

Armed Forces (Pay)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what percentage armed forces' salaries were abated in respect of imputed contributions to pensions in the armed forces in each year since 1960; and what information he has on previous years' abatements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no abatement of the pay of members of the armed forces in respect of imputed contributions to pensions. However, in recommending rates of pay for the armed forces, the armed forces pay review body (AFPRB) makes an adjustment to comparator earnings to reflect its judgment on the additional pension benefit received by members of the armed forces compared with that available for civilian schemes. Between 1981 and 1986 that adjustment was set at 11 per cent.; since then it has been set at 10 per cent. The basis of these adjustments is explained in greater detail in the AFPRB's 10th and 15th reports, Commands 8241 and 9784.

RNAD Milford

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on negotiations for the disposal and future use of RNAD Milford after 31 March 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence expects shortly to receive the report of the consultancy study, commissioned in conjunction with the Welsh Development Agency, into potential future uses for the RN armament depot at Milford Haven. In consultation with the Welsh Development Agency and the local authorities, we shall be carefully considering the options identified in the report and will be consulting the trade unions before a final decision is made.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the closure of RNAD Milford including the early retirement of staff, the transfer of staff to other MOD establishments and the job resettlement programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The closure programme for the royal naval armament depot at Milford Haven is proceeding to schedule, with the progressive transfer of the remaining tasks to the MOD's depot at Trecwn. Milford Haven is scheduled to close on 31 March 1991.

The position of the 163 staff employed at the depot is as follows:

(a) Thirty-three non-industrial and 42 industrial staff (total 75) are to transfer to the royal naval armament depot at Trecwn during the period leading up to March 1991.

(b) Nine non-industrial and four industrial staff (total 13) are to transfer to other Government Departments during the period leading up to March 1991.

(c) A total of 67 industrial staff are to be made redundant in two groups: 30 on 2 November 1990 and 37 in early March 1991. All staff being made redundant are being referred to the Manpower Services Commission jobcentre at Milford Haven under the job resettlement programme.

(d) Seven industrial staff will be normally or medically retired before the closure date.

(e) One non-industrial grade is currently seeking early retirement.

Aircraft Shelters (RAF Stornoway)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimated cost of the hardened aircraft shelters to be installed at RAF Stornoway.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Tenders for this work have not yet been invited, and it is not our practice to disclose estimates for specific work projects which will be the subject of contractual negotiations.

Iraq (Gun Order)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ministers in his Department were first made aware of the Walter Somers export order for Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: Earlier this month.

Menwith Hill Base

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the works carried out at Menwith hill base during the past five years; what is the total cost and sources of payment for the work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 5 April 1990]: I understand that within the last five years five works projects have been completed at Menwith Hill station. Two involved improvements to operational buildings; a further two involved the provision of additional married quarters; and the final project was for the installation of additional generators. The projects were paid for by the United States Government and I am unable to comment on their cost.

PRIME MINISTER

South Africa

Q18. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the political situation in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: We welcome the recent announcement that President de Klerk will meet members of the ANC on 2 May. We hope that these discussions will lead to negotiations on the peaceful end of apartheid and its replacement by a system of government acceptable to all South Africans.

Police

Q39. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the discussions with the Police Federation regarding the Police (Amendment) Regulations 1990.

The Prime Minister: The regulations laid on 9 March took account of representations made by my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) and representatives of the staff side of the Police Federation, at a meeting with my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary on 17 January. Since the regulations were laid, further representations have been made about the position of officers in forces whose maximum limits of rent allowance were last reviewed in 1988. As a result my right hon. and learned Friend has decided that the protected rent allowances in such cases should be increased in line with the movement in the retail prices index since the date of the force's last rent allowance review. Further amending regulations to give effect to that decision will be laid as soon as possible.

Germany (Foreign Troops)

Q118. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she intends to hold discussions in the near future with Chancellor Kohl and other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation leaders concerning the present and future stationing of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation armed forces in the Federal Republic of Germany and the continuing presence of Warsaw Pact armed forces in the German Democratic Republic.

The Prime Minister: When I met Chancellor Kohl on 30 March, we agreed on the importance of keeping United States and other NATO forces in Germany, as well as the need to look at transitional arrangements for Soviet forces in the GDR. These issues will be discussed further at NATO meetings this summer.

Chinese People's Republic (Ambassador)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met the ambassador of the Chinese People's Republic; where the meeting took place; and if she will state the subjects discussed.

The Prime Minister: The Chinese ambassador called on me on 16 March at 10 Downing street. We discussed Hong Kong and other issues of common concern.

Engagements

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. Later this afternoon I shall depart for Turkey to be present at the 75th anniversary of the Gallipoli landings on 25 April.

European Council Meeting, Dublin

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister under what arrangements the forthcoming European Council Meeting in Dublin on 28 April was called; what procedural rules will apply; when the agenda will be announced; and if she will place in the Library any document presented to that meeting for its consideration.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The meeting on 28 April is not a formal European Council, but a special informal meeting of Heads of State and Government. It was called to consider the implications for the Community of developments in central and eastern Europe, in particular, progress towards German unification. It will also look at preparations for the CSCE summit. There may be discussion of institutional reform. The agenda, and any papers, for discussion will be a matter for the presidency.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Corporation Tax

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has as to the number of small businesses that will benefit as a result of the decision announced in his Budget statement to increase (a) the profits limit for corporation tax and (b) the limit for marginal relief.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that 20,000 companies will benefit from the increase in profit limits for the small companies' rate of corporation tax and associated marginal relief.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Lee: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated loss of revenue if the 40 per cent. rate for capital gains tax were lowered to 25 per cent.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that the cost of charging all taxable capital gains realised by individuals in 1990-91 at 25 per cent. would be about £350 million. The estimate allows for some increase in disposals in response to the reduction in the effective rate of the tax but does not allow for possible short-term effects, nor for possible substitution by higher rate taxpayers of gains for income. No allowance has been made for any change in the treatment of capital gains of companies which are taxed within corporation tax.

Taxation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many income tax payers there were in Scotland in each year from 1986-87 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: The estimated number of individuals resident in Scotland and liable to income tax is 2·04 million for 1986-87 and 2·16 million for 1987-88, the latest available year. Married women are included where their earned income exceeds the wife's earned income allowance and any personal allowances and reliefs unused against the husband's income.

Value Added Tax

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will amend VAT leaflet 700/11/88 to include a paragraph on not using VAT form 100 where deregistration applies.

Mr. Major: Customs and Excise is currently reviewing its published guidance and instructions relating to traders deregistering for value added tax following representations made by the right hon. Member to my noble Friend the Paymaster General. That review will consider whether leaflet 700/11/88 is the appropriate vehicle for guidance along the lines suggested.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the operation of the tour operators' margin scheme concerning the application of value added tax in relation to conferences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I am not aware of any recent representations.

Budget Surplus and Deficit

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the budget surplus or deficit for each of the European Community countries, the United States of America and Japan for each of the last three years, on a comparable basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Following is the data requested for the United Kingdom:

United Kingdom general government financial balance deficit (−) or surplus (+)

	Per cent. of GDP
1987	−1·2
1988	+1·1
1989	+1·3

Source: CSO.

General government financial balances as a share of GDP for the United States, Japan and the other EC countries are published by the OECD in "Economic Outlook" December 1989.

European Investment Bank

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year since the inception of the scheme the total funds lent by the European investment bank; if he will show as a proportion of the total the amounts provided to businesses and others in each of the member states; whether the rules governing eligibility of loan finance from the European investment bank are identical in various member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 April 1990]: The European investment bank was set up in 1958. The membership of the bank has expanded as new members have acceded to the European Community—Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom in 1973, Greece in 1981 and Spain and Portugal in 1986.

Tables have been placed in the House Library which show the total of funds lent by the European investment bank including lending outside the European Community, the total of funds lent by the bank within the Community and the proportion of the total lent to the European Community provided to each of the member states. Records are available centrally only from the date when the United Kingdom joined the EIB and not for previous years. The rules governing access to European investment bank loan finance apply equally to each member state.

Friendly Societies

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many responses he received to the Green Paper on Friendly Societies; and how many were favourable to his proposals.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 23 April 1990]: To date, I have received around 60 written responses to the Green Paper. The proposals have been generally welcomed. I shall, of course, give all responses careful consideration.

WALES

Toxic Waste Disposal

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish before the end of June his response to the report by the Committee on Welsh Affairs on toxic waste disposal in Wales.

Mr. Grist: It is my right hon. Friend's intention to provide a considered response to all such reports within the shortest possible time scale.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of people in Wales who will (i) be eligible to pay the personal community charge, (ii) be eligible to pay the standard community charge, (iii) be eligible for the 80 per cent. rebate on the personal community charge, (iv) be eligible for the 20 per cent. rebate on the personal community charge and (v) be exempt from the personal community charge.

Mr. Peter Walker: The available information is given in the table:

	Number (to nearest thousand)
People registered for the personal community charge[1 2]	2,175,000
Properties subject to the standard community charge[1]	61,000
Estimate of chargepayers expected to receive 80 per cent. rebate[3]	320,000
Estimate of chargepayers expected to receive rebate of less than 80 per cent.[3 4]	230,000
People exempt from personal community charge[1]	39,000

Notes:

[1] As at 1 December 1989.

[2] Including students.

[3] In 1990-91. It is not possible to provide estimates of those eligible for rebates.

[4] It is not possible to estimate the number of people eligible for or receiving a 20 per cent. rebate on the personal community charge.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail the (a) number of ratepayers and (b) number of electors in each Welsh local authority area in 1989-90 together with the percentage that the number of ratepayers represented as a proportion of total electors for each local authority; and if he will give the cost of collecting the rates per head of ratepayers in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is given in the table:

Interest Rates

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received, since occupying his present post, on the effect on home ownership of high interest rates.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information cannot be supplied as no record is kept, but I am pleased that home ownership has substantially increased during my period of office.

Health Service Funding

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research he has commissioned on past patterns of fund-raising and charitable giving and the potential for future income from such sources in order to inform policy-making by health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 23 April.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the costs of the Health Service were met by charitable donations and fund-raising in each of the past 10 financial years (a) in Wales as a whole and (b) in each health authority district in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested, as recorded in health authorities' trust fund accounts, is as follows:

It should be noted, however, that trust fund income may be used for various purposes, depending on the respective deeds of trust applying to individual trust funds. Thus some of the above income will have been used for the benefit of staff as well as for the provision of equipment, vehicles, furnishings and so on to enhance patient services. It should also be noted that information on any donations or proceeds from fund-raising which are not associated with authorities' trust funds is not available centrally, since it is not recorded in the authorities' statutory accounts. It is therefore not possible to say what proportion of the costs of providing health services over the past 10 years has been met by funds from charitable sources.

Industrial Land Sales

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take appropriate measures to ensure that the speeding up of the Welsh Development Agency's programme of selling off parcels of industrial land to the private sector will not mean that companies renting factories on this land will face increased charges from new landlords.

Mr. Peter Walker: The level of rents charged by the private sector is a matter for commercial judgment based on prevailing market conditions. The Welsh Development Agency itself currently seeks to obtain the best price practicable in negotiating both rents and sales for its property and has for some time sought to operate on a commercial basis wherever possible.

Moreover, tenants rights are unaffected by a change of ownership and they also have statutory protection through the Landlord and Tenants Act 1954 which provides recourse to arbitration if settlement of rent cannot be achieved between the parties.

Estuarial Crossings

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those estuarial crossings in Wales for which a toll is charged and those for which no toll is made.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There is no definitive list of estuarial crossings in Wales readily available. The following crossings are tolled:

	River estuary
Cleddau Bridge	Cleddau
Penmaenpool	Mawddach
Barmouth Bridge (footbridge)	Mawddach
Penrhyndeudraeth	Dwyryd
Porthmadog	Glaslyn

Road Improvements, Pembroke

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail all road improvement schemes currently under construction in the former county of Pembroke together with their cost and target date for completion.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Three schemes are currently under construction:

Schemes	Estimated cost £ milliion	Expected completion date
A40 Haverfordwest eastern by-pass	3·9	Autumn 1990
A40 Green Bower to Pricketts Gate	0·448	Summer 1990
A40 East of Pricketts Gate	0·289	Autumn 1990

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of all road improvements completed by the Welsh Office in the former county of Pembroke in each year since 1979, together with the cost of each scheme.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Major schemes completed since 1979 are as follows:

Year and schemes	Cost (£ million)
1979 A477 Castell Heli bridge	1·4
1984 Kilgetty-Stepaside by-pass	14·2
1987 A40 Pengawse hill diversion	3·9
1987 A40 Treffgarne quarries	1·2
1988 A40 Haverfordwest relief road phase I	9·3

In addition a number of smaller schemes have been completed on the A40, A477, A4076 and A40/A487 at a total cost of some £6 million.

Local Authorities Land Holdings

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total amount of vacant land held by each Welsh local authority, the percentage this represents of each local authorities total land holding and as a percentage of the total land within each authority's area, and the estimated value of the vacant land held by each local authority together with the measures being taken by his Department to encourage local authorities to release such land.

Mr. Grist: Information on local authorities' total land holdings and on the value of registered land is not available centrally. Information summarising the Department's land registers could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Measures to encourage the disposal or bringing in to use of authorities' vacant land include incentives for disposal available under the capital and revenue finance systems, the public accessibility of the land register and of individual owners' registers, publicity given to the public right to order disposal, and in appropriate cases directions under section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to take steps to dispose of particular sites. We are currently considering what further measures might be appropriate to reduce the amount of public sector vacant land.

Welsh Language

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the number and percentage of people in Wales whose first language is (a) Welsh and (b) English; and how many in each case speak only one language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information is not collected in the form requested in that the census does not ask about a person's first language or any language other than English or Welsh. However of the 2·6 million people, aged three and over, usually resident in Wales at the time of the 1981 census, 503,549 or 19 per cent. were recorded as Welsh speaking and of these 21,283 or 0·8 per cent. were recorded as not speaking English.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra resources are to be made available to recruit and train additional staff to teach through the medium of Welsh to meet the requirements of the new national curriculum in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A wide range of measures have been introduced to increase the supply of both Welsh medium teachers and teachers of the Welsh language. These include:

(i) the Welsh teacher training incentive supplement scheme introduced in 1988 on a trial basis to attract Welsh speaking graduates to train for Welsh-medium secondary teaching by making a supplementary grant of £1,200 available. This pilot scheme is to be extended for a further two years and will include primary courses;

(ii) increasing the amount of money available for LEA in-service training for Welsh from £233,000 to £900,000. This comprises the training of teachers transferring from English-medium to Welsh-medium teaching and teachers with limited knowledge of Welsh who wish to teach it as a second language within the national curriculum.

(iii) support for the 'athrawon bro' mobile teaching force which will be worth some £1 million in 1990-91 and will have an increasingly important role to play in preparing primary school teachers for the demands the national curriculum imposes;

(iv) £116,000 being made available to four local authorities in Wales under the teacher recruitment category of the education support grant scheme to support the development of schemes to increase the recruitment of former teachers and mature entrants to teaching. The overall objective is to improve the recruitment of Welsh and Welsh-medium teachers in primary schools and the recruitment of teachers in shortage subjects including Welsh and Welsh-medium teachers in secondary schools;

(v) new criteria for the training of primary teachers requires all initial teacher training institutions in Wales to provide opportunities for students to learn the Welsh language while they are training to become primary teachers and to have instruction in the methodology of teaching the language. As an interim measure the Department is providing £110,000 to institutions to enable them to provide additional Welsh language instruction. In the longer term institutions will look to their funding bodies to provide the necessary funds.

(vi) grant support of £47,000 to enable Trinity college, Carmarthen to develop courses for the teaching of Welsh to infant teachers and juniors teachers. In addition, grant of £29,000 has enabled the North East Wales institute to develop a training course for Welsh-speaking secondary teachers who are not at present teaching the language to enable them to do so.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to lay the draft measure dealing with the subject of a new Welsh Language Act submitted to the Welsh Office by the Welsh Language Board in November 1989.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The draft Bill proposed by the Welsh Language Board is currently receiving detailed consideration.

Asthma

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the funding agencies responsible for financing research into asthma and other related illnesses in Wales since 1986.

Mr. Grist: Research into asthma is carried out at the asthma research unit based at Sully hospital. Funding for this unit is made available from the South Glamorgan health authority. The Medical Research Council is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research in England and Wales; their remit extends to research into asthma.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amounts, on an annual basis, allocated by the Government for research specifically into asthma in Wales since 1986.

Mr. Grist: Asthma research is currently being conducted at the asthma research unit funded by South Glamorgan health authority. No other research specifically into asthma in Wales has been funded by this Department since 1986. Research into asthma has, however, been supported under the joint England and Wales programme of health research, some under the auspices of the medical research council.

Paediatricians

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of paediatricians engaged permanently by the area health authorities in Wales, who have undertaken specific and specialised training in the detection and treatment of respiratory diseases in young children.

Mr. Grist: At 30 September 1988 there were 39 consultants and 101 junior hospital doctors[1], excluding locums, employed by health authorities in Wales in paediatric specialties[2]. Respiratory disease in young children form a very substantial part of the illness treated by paediatricians, all of whom undertake specific training in the detection and treatment of these diseases.

[1] Includes house officers, senior house officers, registrars, senior registrars, associate specialists and senior hospital medical officers.

[2] The specialties of paediatrics, paediatric neurology and paediatric surgery.

Contaminated Land

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when it is planned to update the register of contaminated land in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The need to update the Welsh Office survey of contaminated land will be considered in the context of the response to the Environment Committee's first report recommendation to require local authorities to compile their own registers.

Flooding

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list any measurements currently being made of average sea levels in Wales; and whether these can be compared with similar measurements made in previous years.

Mr. Grist: A national tide gauge network, capable of accurately measuring mean sea levels, was set up more than 30 years ago and has been continually maintained and updated since then. The network is operated and data is collected by the Proudman oceanographic laboratory of the natural environment research council with funding by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Scottish Development Department.

Four of the 32 gauges are located in Wales, at Holyhead, Fishguard, Milford Haven and Swansea while others at Hilbre Island, Avonmouth and Ilfracombe provide data relevant to Wales. In addition, there are several other tide guages around the coast from which intermediate data can be obtained.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those coastal regions of Wales believed to be most vulnerable to inundations of sea water in the event of breaches of sea defences.

Mr. Grist: All coastal regions that lie below the highest sea level in their vicinity are at some risk of being inundated by sea water in the event of breaches of sea defences. The most significant such areas in Wales are parts of the north Wales coast, the Caldicot and Wentlooge levels and lands bordering the major estuaries, for example, Afon Glaslyn, Afon Mawddach, Afon Dyfi and Lougher inlet.

Sewerage

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if it is planned to review the question of ownership and adoption of sewerage systems serving existing and planned private housing developments in Wales.

Mr. Grist: No.

Imported Waste

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to instruct all importers of waste material which is intended for disposal in Wales to provide publicly-available details of the pedigree and exact chemical composition of the material concerned.

Mr. Grist: Control over the disposal of imported waste material is the responsibility of waste disposal authorities.

Teachers

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are to be taken to improve the recruitment of graduates into the teaching profession and to stem the further loss of men and women leaving the profession.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have introduced a number of measures to ensure that teaching remains an attractive career for graduates. The bursary scheme to attract students in the shortage subjects is being extended this year to include modern foreign languages. The bursaries have been increased from £1,300 to £1,500 with that for physics increased to £2,000. "Taster" courses are being run for mature people and others to encourage entry or return to teaching. These courses include seminars on subject content and delivery in teaching and information sessions on pay, conditions and career opportunities. £116,000 is being made available to four LEAs in Wales to support the development of schemes to increase the recruitment of former teachers and mature entrants to teaching. TASC (teaching as a career) has been established to promote teaching as a career and improve recruitment practices among local education authorities and initial teacher training institutions. One of the key areas addressed by the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions was the issue of attracting graduates. The IAC recommendations mean that the starting salary for a good honours graduate will be at least £10,500.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his maximum and minimum estimate of the number of people in Wales in part-time employment who are counted twice in the employment totals.

Mr. Peter Walker: Labour force survey estimates of the number of people in part-time employment and with a second job, which are subject to large sampling errors, suggest that there were about 18,000 such persons in 1989. Maximum and minimum estimates are not available.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres currently subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Restrictions affect approximately 416 holdings, 300,000 sheep and 210,000 acres in Wales.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in each county in Wales for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in Wales for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990 including the number of sheep with levels of radioactivity (i) over 4,000 bq/kg, (ii) 3,000 to 3,999 bq, (iii) 2,000 to 2,999, (iv) 1,000 to 1,999, (v) 500 to 999, and (vi) below 499; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The results of my Department's monitoring of sheep for radioactivity, including live-monitoring of sheep leaving the restricted area in north Wales, are published regularly and copies placed in the Library of the House. Some of the published information is in the form requested by the hon. Gentleman. Where it is not, it could be put in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in slaughterhouses in each county in Wales in each year since 1986; how many were found to be above the 1,000 bq/kg limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: A pilot programme of monitoring sheep carcasses at slaughterhouses has been in operation in north Wales since March 1989. In Clwyd some 2,300 have been monitored and in Gwynedd some 4,500; all were below 1,000 bq/kg.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Single-sex Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in respect of each of those local education authority maintained single-sex secondary schools in Merseyside and Greater Manchester which have been closed since 1985, he will list (i) the gender of pupils, (ii) the maintaining local authority and (iii) the number of pupils on roll at the most recent convenient date before closure.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The maintained single-sex secondary schools in Merseyside and Greater Manchester which have closed since 1985 and the number of pupils on roll before closure are as follows:

Education Costs

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the average cost, per student across all subjects, of education (a) in United Kingdom universities as a whole, (b) in United Kingdom polytechnics as a whole, (c) in Scottish universities, (d) in English universities, (e) in Welsh universities, (f) in English polytechnics and (g) in the Polytechnic of Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Non-university higher education in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. I shall reply to the hon. Member on the other parts of his question as soon as possible.

International Baccalaureate Examination

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of (a) independent, (b) local authority and (c) grant-maintained schools which offer pupils the international baccalaureate examination; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected centrally.

City Technology College, Brighton

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what price was paid by the city technology college trust for the purchase of the site for the proposed city technology college, Brighton; and how much of this price was paid for or guaranteed by public funds.

Mr. MacGregor: A sum of £2·3 million net, excluding legal expenses, has been paid from public funds for the acquisition of the proposed CTC site in Brighton. The site is held by the CTC trust.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what undertakings were given by Mr. Ivor Revere, managing director of Greenleaf Planters, a subsidiary of South Weald Properties, in respect of his financial support for the proposed city technology college at Woodingdean, Brighton; what sum or sums he pledged; and what has been paid over.

Mr. MacGregor: Mr. Revere undertook to donate £1 million in support of the Brighton CTC. Mr. Revere has now withdrawn from his original undertaking without having made any payment.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on progress towards the establishment of a city technology college at Woodingdean, Brighton.

Mr. MacGregor: The proposal to establish a city technology college in Brighton is under review because of the withdrawal of the principal sponsor. I hope to make a statement shortly.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what checks are made of the bona fides of potential donors to city technology colleges.

Mr. MacGregor: The CTC trust has the responsibility of identifying and putting forward potential sponsors. Detailed discussions then take place between the Department, potential sponsors and the CTC trust. If the project is to proceed, written heads of agreement are thereafter established.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is receiving or has received advice on the electricity privatisation from any accountancy firm, which has been criticised by the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Baldry: I have nothing further to add to the answers given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 19 December 1989 and 21 February 1990.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will outline the proposals that exist for the reorganisation of the four state-owned companies operating nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Energy and for Scotland announced proposals on 9 November 1989 to create separate nuclear generating companies from the assets of the CEGB and SSEB. Both companies, Nuclear Electric plc and Scottish Nuclear Ltd., were successfully vested at the end of March this year. There are no plans to change the present ownership of any of the nuelear power stations in the United Kingdom.

Electricity (Distribution Companies)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what consultation he has had with large industrial users of electricity about a review of the 15 per cent. upper limit of the distribution companies' market share that can be captured by National Power and PowerGen before 1994;

(2) if he intends to review the 15 per cent. upper limit on the market share of (a) all, (b) any one or (c) any group of the 12 electricity distribution companies that can be captured by National Power and PowerGen from 1990 to 1994.

Mr. Baldry: The application, enforcement or amendment of licence conditions are a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply under the appropriate provisions of the licences and the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has consulted the Director General of the Office of Electricity Regulation on the possibility of raising or reviewing the 15 per cent. upper limit on each of the 12 electricity distribution companies' market, that can be captured before 1994 by National Power and PowerGen.

Mr Baldry: My right hon. Friend has discussed various aspects of the new regulatory regime with the Director General of Electricity Supply on a number of occasions.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list local authorities' expenditure by service for each Scottish region from 1979-80 to the most recent estimates available, at constant prices and in percentage terms.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave on Monday 23 April 1990.

Scottish Pride

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what consultations he has had on the report by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland entitled "The Scottish Pride Study";

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that the commercial relationship between the Scottish Milk Marketing Board and Scottish Pride meets the requirements of European Community legislation; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he expects to make a decision on the report by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, entitled "The Scottish Pride Study", which was placed in the Library on 18 May 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland published a report on the commercial activities of the Scottish Milk Marketing Board in May 1988, investigating in particular the extent to which the activities were on an equal footing with those of the independent dairy companies, as required by European Community legislation. My noble Friend the Minister of State has since met the chairman of the Scottish Milk Marketing Board and the president of the Scottish Dairy Trade Federation to discuss the report, and officials of the Department have also held discussions with the two bodies concerned. These discussions are continuing.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of non-white personnel currently employed by the Scottish ambulance service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the number of non-white personnel is not available.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will identify the location and status of waste disposal sites in Scotland by waste disposal authority, waste type, town, location of facility, name of facility and land size.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: District and islands councils as waste disposal authorities maintain public registers which provide up-to-date information on waste disposal activities in Scotland. The full data requested are not held centrally.

A survey by the Scottish Development Department in 1989 indicated that licences and council resolutions had been issued in respect of 835 waste disposal facilities in Scotland. Of these, 700 licences and resolutions related to landfill sites and the balance to other operations such as incinerators, transfer stations, baling plants and civic amenity sites.

The table gives the number of open and closed landfill sites and other types of facility for each waste disposal authority.

Education Service

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for local education and business partnerships and for the teacher placement service in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has announced today the Government"s decision to support local education business partnerships across the country. This will build on the work already done under the enterprise and education initiative, TVEI and compacts in Scotland. The teacher placement service is also to continue, and arrangements for its future administration will be developed together with those for local partnerships.

Partnerships involve local education and business interests in work that brings schools and other education institutions, industry and commerce closer together for the benefit of young people and the economy. I propose to ensure that these arrangements are built wherever possible on existing partnership work in Scotland. Our approach will be slightly different from that in England and in Wales to reflect the different circumstances affecting education and business links. I intend to invite interested parties, including the local enterprise companies if they wish, to submit proposals to lead and co-ordinate partnership activity in their areas. My aim will be to ensure the selection of the body with the most appropriate experience and best equipped to deliver a service effectively in each area. The Industry Department for Scotland will continue to be closely involved in the development of these arrangements.

There will be a development phase over the next 12 months in which my colleagues and I will collaborate closely. Support will come initially from the Department of Trade and Industry. With the formation of partnerships from April 1991 responsibility will pass to the Department of Employment's Training Agency with the Industry Department for Scotland maintaining a close involvement.

Bail Applications

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of cases in which bail was (a) applied for and (b) granted, by sheriff court area, in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report tables for the Scottish Development Agency comparable to tables 15.2.4 and 15.2.5 in Public Expenditure to 1992-93: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme, but covering the years 1984-85 to 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency does not record financial information on its activities in the form requested, but I have asked the agency to consider whether and how much information can be provided in that form. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in slaughterhouses in each county in Scotland in each year since 1986; how many were found to be above the 1,000 bq/kg limit; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for each region in Scotland is set out in the table:

Region	Year
	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	Total
Borders	42	34	12	5	9	102
Central	24	33	54	46	—	157
Dumfries and Galloway	25	25	32	44	9	135

Orkney and Shetland	39	29	25	28	5	126
Total	375	286	328	391	69	1,449

Only one reading was found to be above the 1,000 bq/kg limit, in 1986 in the Western Isles.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres currently subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 74 farms, approximately 64,000 sheep and about 66,000 acres are currently subject to restrictions.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in each county in Scotland for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in Scotland for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990 including the number of sheep with levels of radioactivity (i) over 4,000 bq/kg, (ii) 3,000 to 3,999 bq, (iii) 2,000 to 2,999, (iv) 1,000 to 1,999, (v) 500 to 999, and (vi) below 499; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The results of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's monitoring of sheep for radioactivity, including live-monitoring of sheep in the Scottish restricted areas and slaughterhouse monitoring of sheepmeat, are published regularly and copies are placed in the Library of the House. Some of the published information is in the form requested by the hon. Member. Where it is not, it could be put in that form only at disproportionate cost.

School Buildings

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what published comments have been made by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Scotland on the condition of school buildings.

Mr. Lang: Most of the reports by Her Majesty's inspectorate on individual schools contain comments on the state of the accommodation. The reports are published and copies are in the Library.

Class Sizes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information on class sizes resulted from the 1989 school census.

Mr. Lang: Information about class sizes obtained from the 1989 school census is not yet ready for publication and will be included in statistical bulletins to be published later in the year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average sizes of classes in (a) English, (b) mathematics, (c) science subjects and (d) history, geography, modern studies, home economics, physical education, technical education and modern languages in S1 to S6 in 1989.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not yet ready for publication. Information about class sizes in secondary schools in 1987, by subject, was published in SED statistical bulletin No. 14/C7/1989, a copy of which is in the Library.

Child Care Policy, Fife

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has met Sheriff Brian Kearney during the inquiry into child care policy in Fife region.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 April 1990]: No.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the findings from the inquiry into child care policy in Fife will be made public; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when the inquiry into child care policy in Fife will be completed; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on progress being made by the inquiry into child care policy in Fife region;

(4) when he is likely to receive the findings of the inquiry into child care policy in Fife from Sheriff Brian Kearney.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 April 1990]: I understand that Sheriff Kearney has reached an advanced stage in taking evidence but he is not yet able to indicate a final date for submission of his report. When the Secretary of State receives the report, he will decide whether to make its findings public.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the reasons why the inquiry into Fife regional council which was to be completed within three months from 1 March 1989 has now been running for over 12 months.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 April 1990]: It is for the chairman of the inquiry to determine the procedures necessary for carrying it out and to judge the length of time needed to explore the issues fully.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of the inquiry into child care policy in Fife and indicate who will pay the costs.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Since the inquiry is still in progress, it is not possible to estimate its costs reliably. When he has received the report of the inquiry, the Secretary of State will decide, in accordance with the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973, whether to hold Fife regional council liable to pay all or part of the expenses of the inquiry.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Flood Defence

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made of the effects on the flood defences around the Wash of storms of the nature of those in January and February but with the wind veering by five degrees at high tide.

Mr. Maclean: I am advised that the prevailing winds were such during the storms of January and February that there would have been no significant effects on the flood defences around the Wash had the wind veered by five degrees.

The state of flood defences, including sea walls, is continually monitored by the responsible authorities and close liaison is maintained by my river and coastal engineers with the authorities, particularly the National Rivers Authority, who undertake most of the works.

Orchards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the percentage of orchards in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland which would qualify for the European Community grubbing-up scheme on the basis of the criteria of (i) under 15 years old and (ii) more than 400 trees per hectare density.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to estimate the proportion of the orchards which would be eligible under the EC Commission's proposal for grubbing-up scheme without disproportionate cost.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his meeting at Sandringham in Norfolk with European Commissioners; and whether he discussed rain forest issues.

Mr. Gummer: His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales invited Mr. Carlo Ripa di Meana, European Commissioner for the Environment and Mr. Ray Macsharry, European Commissioner for Agriculture, to visit Sandringham on 19-20 April. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I were also invited. Our discussions covered a wide range of issues.

Deer Meat

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce compulsory inspection of deer meat intended for human consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The European Commission has published proposals for health rules governing game which, among other things, would require inspection of deer meat intended for human consumption. In advance of decisions in Brussels we have encouraged local authorities to introduce inspection procedures for farmed deer slaughtered in abattoirs.

The production of deer meat, in common with all other food sold for human consumption, is subject to the general provision of the Food Act 1984 and the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres currently subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 27 November 1989 at column 136.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in each county in England for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the total number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in England for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990 including the number of sheep with levels of radioactivity (i) over 4,000 bq/kg, (ii) 3,000 to 3,999 bq, (iii) 2,000 to 2,999, (iv) 1,000 to 1,999, (v) 500 to 999 and (vi) below 499; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The results of my Department's radioactivity monitoring in sheep, including live monitoring in Cumbria under the "mark and release" scheme, spatial surveys of sheep in and around the restricted area, slaughterhouse monitoring and laboratory analysis of tissues from sheep carcasses, are published regularly and copies placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in slaughterhouses in each county in England in each year since 1986; how many were found to be above the 1,000 bq/kg limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Since the introduction of our programme of slaughterhouse monitoring in February 1989, the following numbers of sheep carcasses have been monitored:

	Cumbria	Lancashire	Total
1989	5,405	5,101	10,506

[1]To 31 March.

None have been found above the 1,000 bq/kg limit. This programme supplements the continuing live monitoring mark and release scheme for all sheep moved out of the restricted areas. We continue to monitor to make sure that no consumer need have any concern whatsoever.

Farms

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has any plans to introduce definitions of small, medium and large farms.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 2 April 1990, c. 447]: For the purposes of economic and statistical analysis, the initial farm business surveys undertaken for the Department show farm incomes according to farm size. The size is measured in financial terms and based upon standard gross margins per hectare of crops and per head of livestock.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken to prevent the dumping by ships in (a) United Kingdom and (b) international waters of prohibited materials; and what estimate he has of the total tonnage of material so dumped.

Mr. Curry: Dumping at sea is controlled in the United Kingdom by part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, under which a licence is required for disposal operations. The Act's requirements apply to all vessels dumping in United Kingdom waters, and more widely to British vessels and to vessels loaded in the United Kingdom. The ban on dumping without a licence will be extended to all vessels in United Kingdom continental shelf waters by the Environment Protection Bill currently before Parliament. Licensed disposal operations are inspected, and samples of waste are analysed, to enforce the legislation.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has introduced regulations to implement the provisions of annex V of MARPOL 73/78—the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships 1973, as amended by the 1978 protocol. The regulations which came into force on 31 December 1988 enforce restrictions on the disposal of garbage into the sea and include a complete ban on the discharge of plastics. These regulations apply to all United Kingdom-registered ships and to foreign-registered ships while in United Kingdom waters.

From time to time reports are received of illegal dumping, normally of unlicensed rather than prohibited materials. All such reports are investigated but it is not possible to give any estimate of the tonnage involved.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by year for the last 10 years for the Doncaster area, the number of (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful appeals for (i) disability allowance and (ii) mobility allowance.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the Department does not hold the information on social security appeal tribunals in the format requested. National administrative statistics for appeal tribunals are not available for areas smaller than a social security region.

The tables give the details requested for social security appeal tribunals (SSATs) for the north-east region from 1984 until the nine-month period ending 30 September 1989—the latest figure available. SSATs decide non-medical appeal questions. Medical questions are decided by medical appeal tribunals (MATs), but the details requested are not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member when they are.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has received to "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" from the Royal National Instutite for the Blind; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Royal National Institute for the Blind was represented at a meeting I held on 5 April with the disability benefits consortium to discuss "The Way Ahead". We shall give careful consideration to all the institute's comments in carrying forward the detailed work on our proposals.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his current calculation of the value to all categories of income support recipients of all rebates for community charge in all Welsh district council areas based on the charges now published.

Mrs. Shephard: I regret the information requested is not available.

Spending Power

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 19 February, columns 554-58, what information he has as to the number of families in each category, for each earnings level, at the latest convenient date.

Mrs. Shephard: The information requested is not available.

HEALTH

Blood Donation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current restrictions are in force in respect of people wishing to donate blood.

Mr. Freeman: Healthy people between the ages of 18 and 60 are generally accepted as donors and those who have been regular donors can continue to donate up to the age of 65.

Individuals at risk of AIDS or hepatitis B or any other disease transmissible by blood are excluded. Visitors to those parts of the world where certain diseases such as malaria are endemic are deferred for an appropriate period.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year for the past five years and by regional blood transfusion service, the number of blood donations given.

Mr. Freeman: The number of donations made in the regional blood transfusion centres for the past five years is given in the table:

Region	Number of Donations
	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will show, by regional blood transfusion service, the frequency with which donors are requested to attend;

(2) if he will list by regional blood transfusion service the number of donors, by blood group, for the latest available date.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year for the last 10 years and by regional health authority, the take-up of hepatitis B vaccine.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advertising campaigns are being prepared by his Department, concerning the problems of bringing to public awareness the low take-up of the hepatitis B vaccine among high-risk groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department recognises the seriousness of hepatitis B. A new edition of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation's memorandum, "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease", will be published shortly and this includes advice on hepatitis B. The Health Education Authority is currently reviewing all its publications on sexually transmitted diseases, including information on hepatitis B.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth will receive a reply to his letter dated 23 February refering to Dr. Sylvia Cree of Wolston.

Mr. Freeman: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State replied yesterday.

Pulse Dye Laser

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if funds are to be made available to help specialist hospitals to meet the costs of installing and operating pulse dye lasers to help cure disfiguring facial birthmarks.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities are free to purchase equipment of this kind from their cash allocations. At present pulse dye lasers are more costly than argon lasers but this situation can be expected to change significantly in the next year or two as this new technology develops.

St. Catherine's House, Kingsway

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the public inspection rooms at St. Catherine's house, Kingsway; and whether he has any proposals to improve them, including the provision of refreshment and other facilities.

Mr. Freeman: We have received no representations during recent months concerning the public search room at St. Catherine's house. At the end of 1989 the Registrar-General published the findings of a survey of users of the facilities provided, entitled "Attitudes to the Public Search Room" and we have now placed a copy in the Library. The survey revealed that a number of improvements were suggested by visitors, but more than three quarters of those responding expressed general satisfaction with the service and facilities provided.

The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, which is responsible for the public search room, is seeking new premises in central London in anticipation of the expiry of the lease of St. Catherine's house later this decade. The views expressed by regular visitors will be taken into account in the quest for new premises but I regret that it is not possible to provide refreshment facilities at St. Catherine's house.

Census Information

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will consider reducing the time limit from 100 years to 80 years or less under which census information on individuals is kept secret, for the benefit of genealogical research.

Mr. Freeman: No. Census records in England and Wales are closed to public inspection for a period of 100 years to fulfil confidentiality assurances given to the public when a census is taken. This period comes near to ensuring that information is not disclosed about living people. However, with the consent of the person concerned or a direct descendant, or the next of kin if the person has died childless, researchers may be informed of the age and place of birth of an individual as recorded in the censuses of 1891 and 1901. These concessions do not extend beyond 1901 because of the stricter confidentiality assurances given in later censuses.

Car Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adverse effects of (a) increased benzene concentration levels in the atmosphere arising from the increased use of lead-free petrol and (b) the decreased lead levels arising from reduced use of leaded petrol.

Mr. Freeman: The increased use of lead-free petrol is not expected to result in a significant increase in benzene concentrations in the atmosphere.

As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 3 November 1989 at column 350, the levels of benzene in petrol are regulated under an EC directive. Because the exposure to lead and benzene from petrol is so low and the health effects attributable to these exposures difficult to measure, reliable comparative assessments are not possible. Since 1974 it has been the policy of successive Governments to contain and reduce exposure to lead wherever practicable. The Government will be participating in the European Communities review of benzene in petrol which will include the health implications of such use.

Hearing Aids

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress his Department has made on the proposals outlined in his reply of 27 July 1989, Official Report, columns 918-919, on provision of hearing aids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department issued a consultation paper earlier this month inviting comments on the proposed arrangements for setting up and evaluating a number of pilot projects based on the direct referral of patients from their general practitioner to the hospital audiology service. It also invites comments on issues relating to the training of NHS and private sector audiology staff and the provision of commercial hearing aids under the NHS. The consultation paper has been drawn up with the help of outside experts, including two from the audiology field, an ear nose and throat consultant, a community physician and representatives from Mersey regional health authority and the private and voluntary sectors. A copy of the paper has been placed in the Library. Some of the pilot projects, to which the paper refers, will involve contracts between health authorities and the private sector as well as the provision of some part of the hospital audiology service in a community-based setting. We expect to start the projects in the early autumn.

GPs (Contract)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions there are under the new contract for general practitioners to refuse to add new patients to their lists if (a) women refuse to have cervical smear tests and (b) parents refuse to have their children immunised.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The new contract does not affect the long-standing right of a general practitioner to decide whether or not to accept a patient on to his or her list. GPs have never been required to have or to state a reason for removing a patient from their list or refusing to accept a new patient on to their list. However, to refuse patients solely because they do not wish to be immunised or have a cervical smear test is most unprofessional and suggests a remarkable lack of responsiveness to the needs and wishes of the patient. I am sure that the professional bodies would support the Government in condemning such action.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the changes in waiting lists for each district health authority within the East Anglian region during the period 1979 to 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 April 1990]: The available information is given in the tables. Due to NHS restructuring in 1982, comparable figures are available only for the districts shown in the tables.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutory Instruments (Committees)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the estimated cost of the sitting of the First Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, held on 28 March; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is not possible to identify separately such costs.

EMPLOYMENT

Eastern Bloc Tourists

7. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to support schemes to attract tourists from eastern bloc countries.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority has increased the resources in its London and Frankfurt offices in order to attract more tourists from eastern Europe. The authority is also developing programmes aimed at key segments of this market, including business travel, language and other educational activities as well as at general visitors.

Labour Statistics

9. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what percentage United Kingdom unemployment has fallen since June 1987.

Mr. Howard: Since June 1987, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom has fallen by 44 per cent.

14. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the fall in the rate of unemployment since July 1986.

Mr. Howard: In March 1990 the rate of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 5·6 per cent., compared with a rate of 11·3 per cent., in July 1986, a fall of 5·7 percentage points.

32. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give figures for the number of unemployed in the London boroughs of Lambeth, Southwark and Wandsworth, respectively, for 1985 and the latest available statistics.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the London boroughs requested in March 1985 and March 1990:

Unemployed claimants in the following local authority districts (not seasonally adjusted)

	March 1985	March 1990
Lambeth	25,680	13,378
Southwark	20,590	11,354
Wandsworth	16,556	7,707

Note: Direct comparisons over the period cannot be made due to the changes in compilation of the unemployment count.

39. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is (a) the United Kingdom unemployment rate and (b) the European Community average unemployment rate.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest comparable data show that the standardised seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in the United Kingdom is 5·7 per cent. compared to an EEC average of 8·6 per cent.

58. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of employment in the north-west of England.

Mr. Nicholls: In December 1989, the civilian work force in employment in the north-west of England stood at 2,866,000. This represents an increase of 342,000 or 14 per cent. since March 1983.

63. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the east midlands.

Mr. Nicholls: In March 1990 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the east midlands was 95,200, a drop of 23,200 or 19·6 per cent. compared with a year ago.

69. Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the increase in the work force in employment in the United Kingdom since March 1983.

Mr. Nicholls: In December 1989, the latest date for which information is available, the work force in employment was 27,077,000, the highest level ever. This represents an increase of 3,513,000 or 15 per cent. since March 1983.

70. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the increase in the work force in employment in the year September 1989 represents women.

Mr. Nicholls: In the year to September 1989 women accounted for 68 per cent. of the increase of work force in employment in the United Kingdom.

Retraining

19. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve retraining opportunities for those in work.

Mr. Howard: Training through life is necessary for all those at work and to maintain Britain's competitiveness. The main responsibility must lie with employers. They will receive support through the network of training and enterprise councils I have established and through the action programme to encourage investment in people being developed by the national training task force and other business organisations.

Urban Programme

20. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total expenditure planned for his Department in the 57 urban programme authority areas.

Mr. Eggar: My Department will spend around £1·1 billion in the urban programme authority areas during 1990-91 to help inner city residents through employment, training and enterprise measures.

Community Industry Scheme

21. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional resources he intends to give to the Yorkshire and Humberside region to extend and improve the community industry scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department contracts with Community Industry Limited to deliver the community industry scheme. It is up to the company to decide how resources are allocated on a regional basis. The scheme plays a valuable role in helping up to 7,000 disadvantaged young people a year aged 16 to 19 to obtain and retain employment.

Employment Training

22. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total estimated expenditure on employment training in 1989-90 and 1991-2.

Mr. Howard: Expenditure on employment training (ET) in 1989-90 is estimated to be £1,112 million. For 1991-92 planned expenditure is £1,180 million.

33. Mr. Leighton To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve the employment training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) on 5 March 1990, Official Report, column 507.

56. Mr. Jim Marshall To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what procedures are undertaken when an employment training manager withdraws from employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Immediate action is taken by the Training Agency to ensure that trainees continue to receive their training with another training manager in the same locality and to secure the recovery of any outstanding public moneys.

Mr. Leighton To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training agents and training managers are involved in employment training; and how many of them meet approved training organisation criteria.

Mr. Nicholls: On 31 March there were 194 training agents and 1,378 training managers involved in employment training. They are required to achieve approved training organisation status by the end of a two-year assessment. Those providers who started employment training in September 1988 are due to achieve approved training organisation status by September 1990.

Mr. Worthington To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the public expenditure per trainee on employment training in 1989-90; and what it will be in 1990-91 in Scotland.

Mr. Nicholls: Estimated public expenditure per trainee week on employment training in 1989-90 in Great Britain is £104. Regional ET plans for 1990-91 are for internal management information purposes only.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting held on 19 April between the Minister of State, Department of Employment and representatives of the voluntary sector on the changes to employment training.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 April 1990]: I had an encouraging and helpful discussion with representatives of the voluntary sector.

Training Credits

23. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will ensure that every young person reserving a training place under the announced pilot schemes for training credits will have any additional costs met by either his employer or by the local training and enterprise council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In the prospectus "Training Credits for Young People", in which I invite training and enterprise councils (TECs) to bid to run pilot credit schemes, I have made clear that any training costs additional to those shown on the face of the credit are to be met either by the employer or the TEC. Young people will not have to meet such additional costs themselves.

49. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional funds the Government are making available to fund the training credit pilot schemes announced on 27 March.

Mr. Eggar: Training credit pilot schemes will be funded through: planned resources for youth training; transfer to the Training Agency of relevant provision previously made through the revenue support grant in respect of part-time courses of education and training for 16 to 18-year-olds; additional funding available specifically for credit arrangements, amounting to £12 million in 1991-92 and £25 million per year in subsequent years.

Disability

24. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of firms with more than 20 workers employ fewer than their quota of 3 per cent. registered disabled people and have no permit to do so.

Mr. Eggar: In June 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, 19·3 per cent. of firms with 20 or more workers employed less than 3 per cent. people with disabilities and did not have a permit to do so.

Employers who are below quota and without permits have not necessarily committed an offence unless they have engaged a person who was not registered as disabled when a suitable registered disabled person was available.

28. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to announce the results of his Department's review of services to people with disabilities.

Mr. Eggar: As I announced in my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 12 March Official Report, column 135, the consultative document which will give the results of the review will be published as soon as account can be taken in it of the results of the survey of people with disabilities in the labour market which my Department has commissioned. We anticipate that we will be in a position to publish the consultative document in June this year.

54. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals for the future of the quota system in respect of the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: The quota scheme is among the matters being considered in the internal review of services to people with disabilities which my Department has been undertaking. We anticipate that we will be in a position to publish a consultative document with the results of the review in June this year.

Employment Medical Advisory Service

25. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the staffing of the employment medical advisory service within the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1990, there were 134 staff in post in the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service.

Training and Enterprise Councils

26. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what concessions he plans for companies prepared to fund more training through the training and enterprise council structure.

Mr. Howard: The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his Budget speech on 20 March that any individuals or companies who donate funds to training and enterprise councils to support their activities will be able to claim tax relief on these contributions.

This concession is a significant step forward in encouraging contributions to training and enterprise councils from local businesses.

27. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have received contracts enabling them to become operational.

Mr. Howard: Operational contracts have now been signed with 12 training and enterprise councils.

31. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department intends to monitor the quality of training provided by TECs.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will be required to set out their strategy for ensuring the quality of training in their corporate and business plans. These plans will form part of a TEC's contract with my Department and will be subject to regular performance monitoring. In addition the training standards advisory service will be appraising the quality of training provision offered by TECs.

40. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what mechanisms are in place to enable regular financial monitoring of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils (TECs), under their contract with the Secretary of State for Employment, will be required to produce regular management and financial information on their performance and activities. Details of these requirements are set out in the TEC's operating agreement, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The TECs will also publish annual reports and will be subject to independent audit by my Department and the National Audit Office.

51. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has had from TEC board members on the funding of TECs.

Mr. Eggar: I have received a number of representations from training and enterprise council (TEC) board members on general funding issues. The TECs will receive agreed resources to carry out their plans and my officials are currently negotiating with a number of TECs as they prepare their corporate and business plans about the resources that will be made available.

53. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what original level of overall funding to the TEC network was outlined by his Department; and what is the latest figure.

Mr. Eggar: The prospectus for training and enterprise councils, "Training and Enterprise Councils: A Prospectus for the 1990s", indicated that TECs would have executive responsibility for almost £3 billion of public expenditure. The level of provision for training and enterprise programmes in 1990-91, including an estimate of spending through the TEC network is given in the supply estimate 1990-91, class VI Department of Employment (242-VI).

57. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure he has for the number of training and enterprise councils now in the development phase.

71. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have received development funding.

Mr. Eggar: Sixty-seven training and enterprise councils (TECs) have been awarded development funding to date. Of these, operational contracts have now been signed with the first 12 training and enterprise councils.

TVEI

29. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total expenditure planned by the Government on the technical and vocational education initiative over the next 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government currently plan to spend £801 million on the technical and vocational education initiative (TVEI) over the financial years 1990-91 to 1997-98. A total of £421 million has already been spent on the pilot-preparatory phase and on extending TVEI to all schools and colleges.

Health and Safety

30. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the statement by the right hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Cope), Official Report, 17 January 1989, column 141, what conclusions he has come to on the implications of the judgment in the Derek Cain case for health and safety on YTS schemes; how many families were contacted with regard to compensation following his review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given on 2 February 1989, Official Report, columns 336-37 and 11 April 1989, Official Report, column 809.

36. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what resources have been given to the Health and Safety Executive to implement the COSHH regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 6 February 1990, Official Report, column 556.

73. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of the Health and Safety Executive; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission and the director general of the Health and Safety Executive on 31 January when a range of matters relating to the responsibilities of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive were discussed.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many custodial sentences were given for Health and Safety offences instigated by the Health and Safety Executive for each year since 1974.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1974, two cases prosecuted by the Health and Safety Executive have resulted in suspended custodial sentences.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many field inspectorate staff there were on 1 March 1987, 1988 and 1989, within the Health and Safety Executive, how many trainee inspectorate staff there were on these dates; and what was the number of workplaces registered with each inspectorate on these dates.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not all available for the precise dates requested. On the nearest available dates, the information is given for those factory, agricultural, mines and quarries inspectors working from district or area offices. Field inspectors do not include nuclear installations or specialist inspectors.

	Composite
Year	Inspector Numbers	Number of trainees in total[1]	Number of workplaces as registered at 31 March
1 March 1987	727·5	[2]117	719,738
1 March 1988	716·0	102	707,444
1 March 1989	729·5	99	[3]692,078

[1] There are no trainee grades for mines and quarries inspectors.
[2] This includes figures for the factory inspectorate at 31 March.
[3] This includes agricultural premises registered in July 1989.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors there were in the Health and Safety Executive on 1 March 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990, in the (a) nuclear, (b) mines, (c) quarries, (d) agriculture, (e) factory, (f) industrial air pollution, (g) explosives and (h) specialist inspectorates; and what was the total number of Health and Safety Executive inspectors on each of these dates.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is as follows (1 March figures):

	1987	1988	1989	1990
(a) Nuclear	102	118	131·5	163
(b) Mines	66	63	57	46
(c) Quarries	16	11	12	13

	1987	1988	1989	1990

(h) Specialist[2]	208·5	201·5	197	194·5
Total HSE inspectors[3]	1,241	1,170·5	1,188	1,230

[1] The industrial air pollution inspectorate transferred to the Department of Environment on 1 April 1987.
[2] Explosives inspectors work alongside other specialist inspectors in HSE's technology division.
[3] The total number of HSE inspectors includes those working outside inspectorates eg, contributing to policy, standard work etc.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of cases brought to magistrates courts by the Health and Safety Executive between 1974 to 1989 and (b) the number of cases brought to Crown courts between 1974 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available. Figures available to date for informations laid, are for the year 1988-89. In that year, of the informations laid in England and Wales by the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates, 1,990 were heard in the magistrates courts and 66 in the Crown court.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of female inspectors as a proportion of all inspectors within the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the number of ethnic minority groups as a proportion of all inspectors, for 1974 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1 August 1975, the total number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive, the number of female inspectors, and the number of female inspectors expressed as a percentage of the total are as follows. Earlier figures are not available.

	Total inspectors in HSE	Female inspectors included in total	Female inspectors as per cent. of total

[2] (1 April).

Information on the ethnic origins of inspectors in HSE is available from 1988. Provision of the information by staff is voluntary. Details of those inspectors who responded to ethnic minority surveys are as follows:

	Total respondents	Respondents from ethnic minority groups included in total	Percentage of respondents in ethnic minority groups
1989	1,057	6	0·6

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each year from 1974 to 1989, the number of Health and Safety Executive field inspectors (a) appointed, (b) resigning and (c) retiring.

Mr. Nicholls: The information available is given for those factory, agricultural, mines, quarries and industrial air pollution inspectors working from district or area Offices. Field inspectors do not include nuclear installations or specialist inspectors.

[1] Figures relate to period July-December only.
[2] The industrial air pollution inspectorate transferred to the Department of the Environment on 1 April 1987.
[3] Centrally held information is not available for before 1985 (appointments) or July 1979 (resignations and retirements).

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the (a) number of cases brought to court by the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the number of successful prosecutions for 1974 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available. However, the table shows the number of informations laid and convictions obtained since 1975.

Informations laid by HSC/enforcing authorities (excluding local authorities), 1975-1988/89[4]

Date of hearing	Number of informations laid	Of which convictions
[1]1975	2,956	2,732

1986-87	2,199	1,771
1987-88	2,337	2,053
[4]1988-89	2,334	2,079

[1] Informations laid by Her Majesty's factory inspectorate only.
[2] Informations laid by HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates.

[3] Informations laid by HSE's factory, agricultural and mines and quarries inspectorates.
[4] Provisional.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of workplaces that last received preventive inspection within (a) the past year, (b) two years, (c) five years and (d) 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The table shows the total number of preventative inspection visits made by the Health and Safety Executive's factory, agricultural, mines, quarries and specialist inspectors for the periods for which information is available:

Period	Number of inspections
1 April 1988—31 March 1989	158,860
1 April 1987—31 March 1989	317,964
1 April 1986—31 March 1989	481,641

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the budget for the Health and Safety Committee and Health and Safety Executive for each year from 1974 to 1989; what was the amount as a proportion of total public expenditure in each year; and what was the amount in real terms with 1974-75 = 100.

Mr. Nicholls: The level of gross financial provision to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, for each year from 1974 to 1989 is shown in the table, expressed (a) in cash terms (b) at 1974-75 price levels and (c) as a percentage of total public expenditure.

	(a) (£)	(b) (£)	(c)
1974-75	13,320	13,320	0·031
1975-76	27,922	22,701	0·052
1976-77	38,398	26,802	0·064
1977-78	44,413	28,203	0·070
1978-79	47,508	27,555	0·063
1979-80	56,843	27,796	0·063
1980-81	72,063	31,275	0·066
1981-82	81,303	31,257	0·067
1982-83	82,533	30,224	0·062
1983-84	89,361	31,339	0·064
1984-85	91,488	30,566	0·061
1985-86	96,585	30,521	0·061
1986-87	97,808	29,831	0·059
1987-88	102,341	30,395	0·059
1988-89	109,426	30,092	0·061

For consistency, the figures have been adjusted to remove funds provided during 1981-82 to 1984-85 for HSE's dispersal to Bootle; and to remove provision in earlier years for the industrial air pollution inspectorate which transferred to the Department of Environment in 1987.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of doctors leaving the Health and Safety Executive for retirement or resignation reasons in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988, four doctors resigned and four retired. In the following year a further three resigned and two retired.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of inspectorate staff (a) retiring and (b) resigning from each Health and Safety Executive inspectorate within the last 12-month period.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested for the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990 is as follows:

Inspectorate	Inspectors: (a) Retiring	(b) Resigning
Nuclear	5	2
Mines	7	1
Quarries[1]	1	1
Agriculture	5	3
Factory	10	27
Specialists[2]	6	11

[1] From 1 October 1989 the quarries inspectorate was amalgamated with the factories and agriculture division.
[2] Includes explosives inspectors working in HSE's technology division.

Mr. Tony Lloyd To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of manslaughter charges in respect of health and safety offences for each year since 1974.

Mr. Nicholls: The offence of manslaughter forms part of general criminal law and consequently the Health and Safety Executive's inspectors are not able themselves to initiate prosecutions for manslaughter. However, when appropriate, cases are passed to the Crown prosecution service for consideration. The Health and Safety Executive does not, therefore, keep the information requested.

Mr. Tony Lloyd To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the average fines at (a) magistrates courts and (b) Crown courts in cases taken by the Health and Safety Executive in 1974 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is available in the form requested only for 1988-89. In that year, provisional figures show that the average fines obtained by HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates in England and Wales were £505 in a magistrates court and £2,145 in the Crown court.

Training Tax

34. Mr. Carrington To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to introduce a training tax on the payroll of every enterprise in Britain.

Mr. Eggar: No. The most effective incentive for companies to train is a knowledge and understanding of their skill needs, not centralised regulation based on statutory powers.

Tourism

35. Mrs. Maureen Hicks To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what impact tourism has made on employment in the west midlands.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the form requested, but it is estimated that the number of employees in employment in the hotel and catering industry in the west midlands in December 1989 was 89,000—5,000 more than in December 1988.

44. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to publicise the advantages for tourists of visiting areas outside the main tourist centres.

Mr. Nicholls: From 1 April 1990, much of the work of the English tourist board has been devolved to the 12 regional tourist boards, together with substantially increased resources. This will enable the regional boards to market their regions more effectively, thereby encouraging the wider dispersal of tourism.

65. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the tourism industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is published in table 8.1 of the April 1990 issue of Employment Gazette.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department has commissioned any research into the effects of withdrawal of section 4 tourism grant funding on the tourism industry.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department has commissioned research to look at the progress of those tourism projects whose applications to the English tourist board could not be considered before the suspension of the section 4 scheme.

Self-employment

37. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total increase in the numbers of self-employed in the periods (a) 1959 to 1979 and (b) 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimated number of self-employed in the United Kingdom rose from 1,906,000 in June 1979 to 3,241,000 in June 1989, an increase of 1,335,000 or 70 per cent.

Estimates before 1970 are not strictly comparable with later figures due to a change in methodology. In 1969, there were an estimated 1,853,000 self-employed in the United Kingdom.

Training Costs

38. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will set out the weekly level of funding to cover training costs per youth trainees in 1989-90 and 1992-93 in 1990 prices.

Mr. Nicholls: The Exchequer contribution towards youth training costs in 1989-90 and 1992-93 are set out in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93" (Cm. 1006).

Additional funds will be made available to training and enterprise councils, and local enterprise companies in Scotland, and whose bids to pilot training credits for young people are accepted. These will involve a transfer of the appropriate proportion of relevant elements from the revenue support grant, and additional sums of £12 million in 1991-92 and £25 million in subsequent years.

Factory Inspectorate

41. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to retain trained factory inspectorate staff within the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has already taken measures to retain trained factory inspectorate staff. These include improved pay, particularly for basic grade inspectors and the introduction of a flexible pay scheme which aims to reward good performance. Priority is also being given to creating improved career development and training opportunities.

Job-related Training

42. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase in the number of employers receiving job-related training between 1984 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Defining employers as self-employed people with employees, the number receiving job-related training in the four-week reference period of the labour force survey increased from 25,000 (2·8 per cent.) in 1984 to 56,000 (5·5 per cent.) in 1989.

Small Firms

43. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how TECs and LECs will respond to the interests of small firms.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies will develop plans based on a sound assessment of local needs, including those of small firms.

They will be directly responsible for major current programmes which help small firms and promote self-employment. These include the enterprise allowance scheme, business growth training and, except in Wales, business counselling for small firms. In Scotland, local enterprise companies will, in addition, provide a wide range of economic development and environmental improvement services.

59. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received in respect of small firms and their opportunities to contribute to training.

Mr. Eggar: I receive a number of representations from the small firms sector concerning a range of topics including training. My Department helps small firms through a comprehensive package of training and business support. This includes the small firms service which dealt with some 300,000 inquiries in 1989 and provided 50,000 consultancies, the enterprise allowance scheme, which since its commencement in 1983 has helped over 500,000 unemployed people take up self employment, and business growth training, which has already provided 92,000 training opportunities since its start in April 1989. Training and enterprise councils are taking over the running and development of these and will introduce new services for small firms.

Workplace Nurseries

45. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the Government's proposals to encourage an expansion in the provision of workplace nurseries.

Mr. Nicholls: Since the beginning of the year, Ministers in the Employment Department have answered six questions in the House, received 15 letters from hon. Members and 20 from members of the public on the subject of child care facilities including workplace nurseries.

Employment Service

46. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are placed into jobs in each year by the employment service.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1989 the total number of people placed in jobs in Great Britain was 1,890,790.

Wages Councils

47. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to improve the work of the wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: The councils are empowered to set minimum rates of pay in certain industries. Checks by wages inspectors show that compliance with wages councils orders is running at a very high level.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions for contravention of wages councils legislation there were in (a) the last three months, (b) the last six months and (c) the last 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of prosecutions was as follows:

(a) Four from 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1990
(b) Six from 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1990
(c) 13 from 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the establishments prosecuted for contravention of wages councils legislation under the Wages Act 1986 in 1989 together with (a) the number of charges levelled in each case and the charges on which they were prosecuted and (b) the number of employees underpaid in each prosecution for underpayment.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

	Number of charges	Charges prosecuted	Number of employees underpaid
Maurices Discount, Nottingham	1	1	1
Bishops of Swanage, Swanage	1	1	1
Ron Whites Fruit Basket, Southampton	2	2	1
Johns, South Ockenden	1	1	0
Kingfisher, Hull	5	5	5

Record Stores, Rochester	13	9	2
Gosport RN Association Limited, Gosport	3	3	3
Grahams Transport Stop, Bridgewater	2	2	2
Franklins of Saltburn	3	3	3

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a breakdown (a) by wages inspectorate division and (b) by wages councils, of establishments checked, and those found to be contravening wages council legislation in 1989, and the number of prosecutions under specific sections of the Wages Act 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 29 March 1990, Official Report, columns 251-56, tables 2 and 4, which gives the numbers of establishments checked and those found to be paying less than the statutory minimum in 1989.

The remainder of the information requested is given in the following tables:

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide breakdowns by wages inspectorate division of information given in the Official Report, 1 March 1989, columns 199-201, regarding the establishments underpaying and prosecutions for underpayment of wages councils rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 2 April 1990, Official Report columns 460-62.

Low Pay

48. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the eradication of low pay.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 13 March 1990, Official Report, column 207.

Workplace Training

50. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to establish a training body at every workplace in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Employers are best placed to determine the most appropriate arrangements to ensure that the training they undertake meets their needs and the needs of their employees. Anything else would be as bureaucratic as it would be impracticable.

Shell Site, Stanlow

52. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how often Health and Safety Executive officers have visited the Shell site at Stanlow.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Industrial Action

55. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many stoppages due to industrial action were recorded in January 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: It is provisionally estimated that there were 48.

Long-term Unemployment

60. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the measures which he is taking to deal with long-term unemployment.

Mr. Eggar: We have in place an extensive range of employment and training measures which have helped to ensure that long-term unemployed people have benefited fully from the general fall in unemployment.

Long-term unemployment has halved in the last two years and in that period has fallen faster than total unemployment. These measures are kept under regular review to ensure that they continue successfully and cost effectively to help long-term unemployed people back into work. Details of improvements to our counselling and advice services for unemployed people were provided in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 5 April 1990, Official Report, column 647.

European Community Meetings

61. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next expects to meet his European Community counterparts; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Howard: The next formal Council of European Community Employment Ministers will be on 29 May. The agenda has not yet been finalised.

Redundancies, Merseyside

62. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives his Department is taking to replace the 3,000 jobs lost on Merseyside after the announcement of redundancies at Ford's Halewood plant.

Mr. Nicholls: Ford has announced that as part of the company's continuing efforts to improve efficiency and productivity, employment at Halewood will be reduced by 2,800 over the next five years.

Government policies are aimed at developing an economic climate where industry and enterprise can flourish, thus allowing jobs to be created by the private sector, including jobs to replace those lost at Halewood.

My Department operates a wide range of employment, enterprise, training and inner city measures to help the unemployed and others, including those made redundant at Halewood, find new jobs, retrain or set up businesses of their own.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

64. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have started on the enterprise allowance scheme since it began.

Mr. Nicholls: Over 500,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business under the enterprise allowance scheme since it began in 1982. This most substantial achievement is being marked at a special ceremony today.

VAT

66. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the net increase per week in businesses registering for value added tax in (a) 1989 and (b) 1974 to 1979.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988, the latest year for which figures have been published by my Department, the net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses was an average of just over 1,200 per week. Early indications from data collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are that the net increase in 1989 was 1,500 a week. Between the end of 1974 and 1979, the number of businesses registered for VAT rose by an average of just over 300 a week.

School-Industry Compacts

67. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what resources the Government are providing over the next four years to support school-industry compacts.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are making available £7 million per year over the next four years towards the cost of developing and operating inner city compacts covering all urban programme authority areas in England, and designated priority areas in Scotland and Wales.

Low Pay Unit

68. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received the most recent report from the low pay unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend receives many reports from the low pay unit which he reads with interest.

Youth Training

72. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the level of funding in 1990 prices for youth training in 1989-90 and 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholls: Planned expenditure on youth training in 1989-90 and 1992-93, in 1990-91 prices, is £1,061 million and £716 million. Additional funds will be made available to training and enterprise councils, and local enterprise companies in Scotland, whose bids to pilot training credits for young people are accepted. These will involve a transfer of the appropriate proportion of relevant elements from the revenue support grant, and additional sums of £12 million in 1991-92 and £25 million in subsequent years.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the public expenditure per trainee in 1989-90 on youth training; and what it will be in 1990-91 in Scotland.

Mr. Nicholls: The gross public cost per trainee week on YTS in 1989-90 is estimated to be £50 per trainee week. Information about gross public costs per trainee week of youth training in Scotland in 1990-91 is not available.

Social Charter

74. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next expects to meet his European Community counterparts to discuss the employment aspects of the European Commission's range of social charter proposals.

Mr. Howard: The first formal proposals from the European Commission's social action programme are not expected to be published until May or June; substantive discussion of these proposals by the Labour and Social Affairs Councils is therefore unlikely to take place until the last quarter of the year.

Training Allowances

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of representations he has received from Staffordshire in respect of his draft proposals to cut back funding for training allowances paid in respect of training and enterprise council allowances.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Wages Inspectors

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil cases were taken by the wages inspectorate in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of civil cases taken by the wages inspectorate was as follows:

	Cases
1979	6
1980	4
1981	4
1982	1
1983	6
1984	4
1985	0
1986	3
1987	1

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many individual workers' complaints were received by the wages inspectorate division; what percentage of workers' lodging individual complaints was found to be underpaid; in those cases where underpayment occurred, what was the amount of arrears (a) assessed, (b) paid and (c) unpaid in each case; how many employees were affected by contravention of wages council legislation in instances where an individual worker complained; and what fines were imposed after prosecution in each case, according to each contravention, in 1989;

(2) what was (a) the total amount of arrears (i) assessed, (ii) paid and (iii) unpaid resulting from individual workers' complaints to the wages inspectorate in each year since 1979 and (b) the number of instances in which individual workers' complaints to the wages inspectorate resulted in criminal prosecution in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of complaints received by each wages inspectorate division in 1989 is given in the table.

The receipt of a complaint from a worker is only one of a number of circumstances which might cause the wages inspectorate to check the levels of pay at a particular establishment. The results of complaint inspections are not kept separately from the results of inspections which are conducted for other reasons, and the remainder of the information requested is not, therefore, available.

Division	Number of complaints received in 1989
London	68
South East	89
Eastern	64
South West	201
Midlands	145
North West	323
Yorkshire and Humberside	138
Northern	147
Scotland	246
Total	1,421

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages inspectors are currently in post; and how many are long term sick.

Mr. Nicholls: There are currently 68 inspectors in post in Great Britain. Three are absent due to sickness which has lasted for three weeks or more.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what proportion of instances, in which a worker makes an individual complaint to the wages inspectorate, the complaint results in a visit by the wages inspectorate; in those instances in which a visit occurs, what is the average length of time between receipt of the complaint and the visit; and in those instances in which under payment is uncovered, what is the average length of time between the visit and the issue of a schedule of arrears to the employer.

Mr. Nicholls: The specific information requested is not available.

All complaints made to the wages inspectorate result in a visit by an inspector, unless it is obvious from the information given by the worker at the outset that the complaint is groundless.

Complaints are given priority over all checking work and inspectors endeavour to complete inspection action, including the issue of an assessment of arrears if appropriate, within four weeks.

Training (North-West)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on proposals for training in the north-west.

Mr. Eggar: On 3 April my right hon. and learned Friend signed contracts with the Cumbria and South and East Cheshire training and enterprise councils in the north-west. These training and enterprise councils will be responsible for the provision of training and enterprise activities in their localities.

Employment Agencies (Literature)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will permit sponsored and commercial employment agencies to deposit their literature at jobcentres for a trial period.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for jobcentres, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the employment service agency's chief executive will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists concerning levels of staffing in the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has recently received a letter from the IPMS about staffing in the Health and Safety Executive.

Children (Safety)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to tighten the laws governing the responsibility of owners of industrial and commercial premises to ensure that sufficient security arrangements exist to prevent children venturing into potentially dangerous situations on those premises.

Mr. Nicholls: Section 3 of the Health and Safety at Work etc, Act 1974 already lays a duty upon every employer to conduct his undertaking in such a way so as to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, that persons not in his employ are not exposed to risks to their health and safety. Such care would include the provision of adequate security arrangements if this was necessary to prevent risks to the public.

Earnings

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time workers, by number and by percentage, earned less than the average earnings figure for all full-time workers in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Based on the distribution of earnings in the 1989 new earnings survey sample, the estimated proportion of full-time employees in Scotland was 61 per cent. The proportion of full-time employees in Great Britain earning less than the equivalent average for Great Britain was also 61 per cent. Information for the United Kingdom is not readily available.

Agricultural Inspectorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors have been employed in the agricultural division of the Health and Safety Executive for each year from 1975 to 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The number of agricultural inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive on 1 April in each year from 1976 was as follows:

	Inspectors
[1]1976	5
1977	187
1978	186
1979	190
1980	178
1981	176
1982	166
1983	159
1984	154
1985	162
1986	163
1987	166
1988	158
1989	165
1990	171

[1]Agricultural inspectors joined HSE from MAFF from March 1976, but the bulk of the field force was not in place until later in 1976.

Quasi-religious Cults

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that the Training Agency vets education institutions before accepting advertising material from them, with a view to excluding any institution having links with quasi-religious cults.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Steps are already being taken by the Training Agency to ensure that advertising received from educational institutions does not include any material from institutions having links with quasi-religious cults.

TRANSPORT

Troop Transportation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the agreements and arrangements made with British civil air carriers for the transport of American troops and equipment in a period of rising international tension.

Mr. McLoughlin: Details of plans for the movement of allied forces in a period of tension are classified.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any representations from Kernforschungszentrum, Karlsruhe, West Germany, regarding proposals for the transportation of spent radioactive fuel to the atomic energy research establishment at Dounreay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has not received any representations.

Coal Imports (South Africa)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year for the last 10 years and by port the number of tonnes of coal imported from South Africa.

Mr. McLoughlin: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise figures for imports of coal consigned from South Africa for the last 10 years and by port are as follows:

Ferries

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take to promote safety improvements on board ferries plying to and from British ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government regard safety as an overriding priority on ferries, as on other means of transport. We have taken a number of steps to improve ferry safety in recent years. New legislation has been introduced, supplemented by increased numbers of random and unannounced inspections of both United Kingdom and non-United Kingdom ferries by Department of Transport marine surveyors. We have also required all United Kingdom flag ferries, irrespective of year of build, to meet the United Kingdom residual stability standards introduced for new vessels in 1980. These requirements exceed current international stability standards.

In addition, we have recently published the results of an important research programme, which has considerable implications for ship design and stability standards. We intend to pursue the recommendations resulting from this research through the International Maritime Organisation, and have already taken steps to ensure the proposals are considered at the maritime safety committee in May.

National Dock Labour Scheme

76. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received of new working practices and productivity improvements in ports formerly covered by the national dock labour scheme since the abolition of the scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave on 5 December 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman), at column 183.

77. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the effects on the port of Southampton of the abolition of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of 508 redundancies, on which the Department provides 50 per cent. of the costs of compensation, have taken place or been announced. The trading performance of the port since the dock labour scheme was abolished is a matter for Associated British Ports, Southampton.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been made to him by employers in dock areas since the abolition of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: None.

Cycling

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress his Department has made towards developing a network for longer distance cycling in London; and if he intends to extend the initiative outside London.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has welcomed in principle the proposed development of a 1,000-mile strategic network of cycle routes for London.

The idea of establishing a network has been promoted by the London Cycling Forum, of which the Department is a member. It is for individual highway authorities to develop those parts of the network which fall within their areas, but the Department is ready to help London boroughs with guidance and technical advice.

The Department has already contributed towards the development of a cycle network in London by providing crossing points of trunk roads for cycle routes. We have also provided some cycle tracks on new trunk roads and additional cycling facilities on existing trunk roads.

In conjunction with the London planning advisory committee, the Department is organising a technical seminar to be held later in the year. This would be for London boroughs, and other bodies with an interest in providing cycling facilities in London.

The Department offers guidance to all local authorities on aspects of planning and designing facilities for cycling, through its traffic advisory unit and a wide range of publications.

Ferry Fire

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the fire on board B & I ferry Norrona en route from Pembroke dock to Ireland on Monday 9 April, and the subsequent involvement of the rescue services.

Mr. McLoughlin: At 2319 GMT on 8 April, the Master of the B & I chartered ferry Norrona, outward bound from Pembroke Dock for Rosslare, called Milford Haven Coastguard reporting a fire on board. The Coastguard immediately scrambled a rescue helicopter from RAF Brawdy, launched St. Davids and Fishguard lifeboats and made arrangements for a fire-fighting team from Dyfed county fire brigade to be airlifted to the ferry. It then became known that there were injured persons on board requiring evacuation. Additional helicopter help was requested: a further one from RAF Brawdy and one, with a doctor on board, from RNAS Culdrose.

Approximately one and a half hours after reporting the fire, the master indicated that it had been extinguished. The ferry returned to Pembroke Dock under her own power. The fire officers remained on board the ship up until she docked at 0315 GMT. Ambulances stood by at the dock to transport other injured persons to hospital.

The cause of the fire is being investigated by an inspector from marine accident investigation branch and, as arson is suspected, by the police.

Severn Crossings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the percentage distribution between the sources of finances offered by the European Investment Bank and other sources offered by the two consortia who bid for the construction of the second Severn crossing;

(2) what toll levels, over what period and rate of inflation on the Severn crossings were offered by the Trafalgar house/Balfour Beatty consortium and the Laing/GTM Entrepose consortium;

(3) whether there was any difference in the burden for bearing the risks of the growth of future traffic levels in the bids made by the two consortia who bid for the second Severn crossing;

(4) whether he advised the Trafalgar House-Balfour Beatty consortium of his concern at the perceived financial risk relating to the subordinated debt of £60 million on the existing crossing during the assessment period of the bids for the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Atkins: Both the final two shortlisted consortia offered a range of alternative financing and tolling options within their privately financed proposals. Details of these must remain commercially confidential. All proposals were assessed on the basis indicated to the bidders in the Department's tender invitation document, which explained that risks would need to be evaluated.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the experience of Laing GTM Entrepose of constructing estuarial bridges comparable with the Severn bridge and in current work in infrastructure in the British private sector.

Mr. Atkins: Following the assessment of tenders, my right hon. Friend was fully satisfied that the Laing-GTM consortium has the requisite experience and capability to construct the second Severn crossing.

M11 Service Areas

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which sites were given detailed evaluation for the establishment of a services area on the M11 motorway before Birchanger was nominated.

Mr. Atkins: In addition to Birchanger, 15 potential service area sites were examined between junctions 6 and 9 of the M11, at:

Audley End Estate
Wendens Ambo
Whiteditch Farm
Whiteditch
Between Elsenham Station and Ugley Green (six sites)
Parsonage Farm
Sheering
Moor Hall
Junction 7
North Weald Airfield

These sites were first considered at various dates between 1966 and 1981 when the planning application was made. In 1988 each site was revisited by consultants to check that earlier assessments of them remained valid.

Road Funding

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the proposed level, at 1990 prices, of central Government funding for road improvements and new construction for each of the next three years; what proportion that will represent of total road spending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The proposed level of central Government funding for new construction and improvement of roads in Great Britain for the next three financial years at 1990-91 prices is:

	£ million
1990-91	1,818
1991-92	1,785
1992-93	1,828

These figures include grants to local authorities for road construction and improvement. In addition, the financing costs of local authorities' use of credit approvals for road construction and so on, are taken into account in the determination of the standard service assessment on which the distribution of revenue support grant is based. Local authorities are free to undertake other local roads expenditure within their overall capital resources and it is therefore not possible to estimate what proportion of total road spending these figures will represent.

The spending on new construction and improvement of trunk roads and motorways represents the following proportions of total spending on these roads:

	Percentage
1990-91	70·1
1991-92	69·5
1992-93	70·4

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was invested by central Government, in each of the last five years at 1990 prices, in road improvements and new construction.

Mr. Atkins: In the last five financial years the total invested at 1990-91 prices by central Government in new construction and improvement of roads in Great Britain was:

	£ million
1985-86	1,211
1986-87	1,146
1987-88	1,227
1988-89	1,287
1989-90	1,509

Rail Investment

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of British Rail's capital investment programme, in each of the last five years, has been funded by central Government; and how much that represented in each year at 1990 prices.

Mr. Portillo: Tabie 7.33 in chapter 7 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93" (Cm. 1007) sets out British Rail's capital requirements and the internal and external resources from which these are met. "External finance" comprises subsidy paid by the Government and borrowing, principally from the National Loans Fund. We do not apportion particular forms of finance between investment and other expenditure. British Rail "rail" investment (which includes investment charged to revenue account) since 1985-86 is as follows, in £ million and at constant 1990-91 prices:

Year	Rail investment
1985-86	528
1986-87	511
1987-88	640
1988-89	647
1989-90	[1]675

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 25 April 1990

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to substitute stipendiary magistrates for lay magistrates in Wales.

The Attorney-General: No. Stipendiary magistrates are appointed in order to give support to the lay magistracy not to supplant them.

Immigration Appeals (Scotland)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions the immigration appeal tribunal has sat in Scotland in each of the last five years.

The Attorney-General: None. The immigration appeal tribunal sits at its headquarters at Thanet house, London.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Attorney-General how many persons qualified in Scottish law have sat as members of the immigration appeal tribunal in the last five years.

The Attorney-General: In the last five years none of the members of the immigration appeal tribunal has been qualified in Scottish law.

TRANSPORT

Private Street Works

107. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the allocation of grant aid for the improvement of private street works.

Mr. Atkins: I do not give specific grant aid for the improvement of private street works. Where these are undertaken by local authorities they normally bill the frontagers, but they can meet some of the costs themselves where they consider that wider community benefits justify it.

Under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 I give grants both to private sector developers and to local authorities towards providing road access for new industrial development in assisted areas. Expenditure by a local authority on these schemes which could otherwise be rechargeable to domestic frontagers can be taken into account in assessing eligible expenditure for these grants.

Marine Radionavigation

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached on the future of marine radionavigation in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Parkinson: Following a lengthy period of public consultation and careful consideration, I have concluded in principle that, on technical and cost grounds, the balance of advantage for the United Kingdom would be to join the international civil Loran C system currently proposed for north-west Europe and the north Atlantic. This would be dependent on a satisfactory international agreement being reached within an acceptable time scale with the other interested states.

This decision has not been an easy one. It would mean closing down in 1997 the present widely respected United Kingdom Decca navigator system, the origins of which date back to the second world war. The Decca system has been successfully operated by Racal Decca Marine Navigation Ltd. and its predecessors for several decades, and the marine community owes a considerable debt to the service, which is highly regarded.

I have had the benefit of a wide range of responses to the Department's consultative document of June 1989. Many in the marine community, here and abroad, agree that we should not be wholly dependent for marine navigation on non-European military satellite systems such as the American global positioning system (GPS) and the Soviet GLONASS system and that a terrestrial civil alternative is needed. I am satisfied that the Loran C system would meet the United Kingdom's navigational requirements to acceptable technical standards and additionally would provide more extensive cover, and be less affected by seasonal and night-time errors.

I have given particular consideration to the representations from the fishing industry, which is concerned about the costs of convering to Loran C. I fully appreciate the industry's extensive use of the Decca system for fishing as well as for navigation and I have considered the industry's points very carefully. However, if we introduce Loran C the fishing industry will gain some important benefits. Loran C's avoidance of seasonal and night skywave effects makes it a more consistent system. Moreover, a Loran C system would allow significant cost reductions, which will work through as lower light dues paid by fishermen. In the meantime I will look specifically at the light dues paid by fishermen at present, in light of representations they have made. The fishing industry will also be aware that I am currently considering a report by the British Ports Federation which recommends that pleasure craft should be brought into the light dues system so as to share the costs falling on the general lighthouse fund.

Moreover, I am determined to ensure that there is a reasonable transitional period between Loran C becoming fully available and the Decca system being switched off. Given satisfactory progress in the international negotiations, the new United Kingdom transmitter could be operating by the end of 1992 and satisfactorily validated for use in repeatable mode before the end of 1993. This would allow a transitional period of over three years to 1997 for the conversion of the fishing industry's Decca records. The final reconfiguration of the new system would be in place at the latest by January 1995. I am also satisfied that the financial considerations favour adopting the Loran C scheme. There would be an even stronger financial case for Loran C, were it not for the cost of running both systems in the transitional period. I am satisfied that the cost to users of premature replacement of receivers, while difficult to assess, is not sufficient to undermine the case for change.

My conclusion, therefore, is that the United Kingdom should not stand aside from the opportunity now offered for adopting a standard terrestrial regional radionavigation system under independent European control. Many countries are awaiting the United Kingdom decision before reaching their own, and in the longer term a favourable decision by the United Kingdom seems likely to increase the prospects of there being continuous Loran C cover throughout Europe, including the Mediterranean, the Iberian peninsula and the Baltic.

It remains to be seen whether an acceptable Loran C international agreement can be concluded among a sufficient number of interested countries to produce a suitable international system. Our appraisal of the proposal has been on the assumption that there would be cost sharing with Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Iceland, Ireland, the Netherlands and Norway. My officials will be making it clear to the countries involved in the international discussions that the United Kingdom will finally commit itself to a binding agreement only if the terms are right. This means that the eventually agreed system must remain a genuinely international dimension and have sufficient financial support from other benefiting countries in terms which for the United Kingdom are no worse than the current cost and cost share provisionally attributed to it. The United Kingdom's final commitment is also conditional on (a) the location of, and the obtaining of the necessary approvals for, suitable sites for the new transmitter stations needed in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland; and (b) Parliament's approval of an order under section 34(3) of the Merchant Shipping Act 1979 to define Loran C as a beacon for the purposes of the general lighthouse fund, which would bear the United Kingdom costs. I expect to lay a draft order shortly.

The United Kingdom will also be making it clear to the other potential partners in the international agreement that our window for a decision in favour of Loran is time limited. In the event of a firm commitment to Loran C, I would wish to give the marine community about six years' notice of the ending of Decca transmissions. Under Racal Decca's current contract with the general lighthouse authorities, the system could not continue beyond February 1997. I am also conscious of the need for an adequate transition period of at least three years during which both the Decca and Loran C systems would be operating. These constraints mean that a delay beyond early to mid-1991 in ratifying an acceptable international agreement would, as far as can currently be seen, effectively rule out the United Kingdom's adoption of Loran C. Thus, if a firm agreement acceptable to the United Kingdom has not been reached by then, it would be my intention to withdraw from the international discussions and to consider with the general lighthouse authorities whether to arrange for modernisation of the United Kingdom Decca navigator system so that it could continue to operate beyond 1997.

Scottish Lowland Airports

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley of 3 April, Official Report, column 501, when he decided not to publish the responses received to the consultation document on Scottish lowland airports policy; what objections were raised by respondents to the proposals of paragraph 17 of the consultation document on Scottish lowland airports policy that it was assumed that respondents have no objection to their responses being published, unless they specifically indicate otherwise; and what considerations of public policy underlay his decision to change his policy regarding the publication of responses to the consultation document on Scottish lowland airports policy from that set out in paragraph 17 of the consultation document.

Mr. McLoughlin: Paragraph 17 of the consultation document did not represent a policy statement. A presumption of publication was offered as the basis for respondents to make their wishes on this known. In the light of the wishes expressed, my right hon. Friend took a policy decision not to publish any responses, for the reasons explained to the hon. Member in my reply of 3 April 1990, Official Report, column 501.

Road Construction Costs

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost of construction of one mile of virgin road in respect of (a) single carriageway roads, (b) dual carriageway roads and (c) six-lane roads including average costs of land acquisition and design work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Construction costs of roads vary substantially depending on factors such as location and the need for structures. In view of this, the Department does not prepare information on the average construction costs per mile.

"Trunk Roads, England into the 1990s" contains full details, including estimated works costs, of all schemes in the trunk road programme.

Railways (Safety)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the amount of money spent by the railways and financed by Government on safety of the railways over the past five years, and the amount planned to be spent for the next three years for safety on the railways.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to identify separately figures for British Rail's expenditure on specific safety measures over the last five years. Much general investment brings with it enhancements in safety. On 20 March I announced that the public sector obligation grant cash ceiling for 1989-90 would be increased by £8 million specifically to accommodate the grant-aided sector's share of additional safety-related expenditure. We have endorsed BR's plans for expenditure of £125 million on specific safety measures over the next three years. BR is currently assessing the costs of implementing the longer-term recommendations of the Hidden report on the Clapham accident, and will include them in its 1990 corporate plan.

Coach Accidents (Schoolchildren)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has on the number of children of school age killed or injured in bus or coach accidents while on a journey to and from school, or on school-sponsored trips, over the last 10 years, five years and one year or over such period as such relevant information is available;

(2) what information he has on the number of children of school age killed or injured while boarding or alighting from buses or coaches while on a journey to or from school or on school-sponsored trips over the last 10, five or one year or over such period as such relevant information is available.

Mr. Atkins: The table shows the numbers of children up to 16 years of age killed and injured while on a journey to or from school on a public service vehicle for each of the last 10 years. Figures for children as seated passengers, as standing passengers, and in the acts of boarding and alighting are shown separately.

The data are taken from the information provided on casualties in the STATS19 accident report form. The information provided on vehicles in the accident report form does not identify school buses; nor does it record the purpose of bus journeys or give general information about passengers. Figures relating to school-sponsored trips are, therefore, unavailable.

Railway Gauges

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what gauge railway lines will be used for the channel link route.

Mr. Portillo: UIC "B".

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received representations seeking a change from the United Kingdom railway gauge to one that is compatible with continental railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have received some suggestions that BR should begin to convert some or all routes to the continental loading gauge. This is a matter for BR to consider but any ungrading must be commercially justified. BR considers that the cost of conversion to continental loading gauge is prohibitive and that it is more effective to use new wagon technology. All wagons presently in service with BR can run on continental gauge railways. BR are looking to develop a fleet of new, smaller wheeled intermodal and conventional wagons which have the same loading capacities as those generally available in mainland Europe.

Energy Efficiency

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the conclusions of the energy technology support unit report entitled "Energy Use and Energy Efficiency in UK Transport" up to the year 2010; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Morrison: I have been asked to reply.

This report was published in January as the 10th paper in the Energy Efficiency Series with the results and conclusions as chapter 6.

I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inner-City Task Forces

106. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many projects have been funded by the inner city task forces since they were set up.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am answering this question because the inner cities task forces are a responsibility of the DTI. Between the start of the initiative in February 1986 and the end of March this year, 1,870 projects have been approved.

Benzene

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department is aware of any evidence to suggest that the use of benzene in consumer products is carcinogenic.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any evidence which indicates a link between benzene in consumer products and the onset of cancer. Benzene is toxic at high doses and is classified by the International Agency for Research on Cancer as a human carcinogen on the basis of data from workers who were exposed to high levels in the past. The maximum concentration of benzene permitted under European directives in consumer products is 0·1 per cent.; except for motor fuels which are covered by a separate directive, this limits the amount of benzene in petrol to 5 per cent.

Rover Group

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will deposit in the Library (a) a copy of the provisional contractual agreement of March 1988 for the sale of Rover Group to British Aerospace, and (b) a copy of the final contractual agreement of July/August 1988 for the sale of the Rover Group to British Aerospace.

Mr. Ridley: I have today made arrangements to put in the Libraries of both Houses copies of both documents. The provisional agreement with British Aerospace of 29 March 1988 was subject to EC Commission clearance and was superseded by the final contractual agreement of 14 July 1988.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. Charles Haughey

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the total estimated cost of the Royal Ulster Constabulary operation in connection with the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Belfast; on what date the operation commenced; and on what date the operation was ended;

(2) how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary were involved each day in connection with the security operation for the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Belfast on Wednesday 11 April.

Mr. Cope: The extra cost incurred by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the operation could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It is not considered appropriate, for security reasons, to give details of the number of police involved and the time scale of the operation.

Student Grants

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the level of grants applicable to Northern Ireland students studying in Great Britain will be increased in the 1991-92 academic year to take account of the liability of students for community charge.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Robberies

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the bank, post office, wages and comparable robberies which have occurred in Northern Ireland since the beginning of 1989 where the Provisional Irish Republican Army or other paramilitary groups are deemed to have been involved; and what is the amount of moneys stolen in each case.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 April 1990]: It is not always possible to attribute robberies to particular organisations. Nor do paramilitary organisations have a monopoly of armed robbery. However, in the period from 1 January 1989, there are believed to have been around 751 armed robberies of all kinds in Northern Ireland, in which the amount of money stolen is estimated at over £1·7 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Patients (Thefts)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any representations about thefts of personal valuables from hospital patients.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am not aware that any such representations have been received by the Home Office.

Police Officers' Salaries

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the increases or otherwise in real terms of the pay of police constables, at various levels of seniority, for the periods (a) 1974 to 1979, (b) 1979 to 1984 and (c) 1984 to 1989; and if he will list other significant changes in the terms and conditions of service of police officers and the dates at which they became effective.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Increases in real terms in the basic pay of police constables for the periods in question are set out in the table. Since 1974 other significant changes in the terms and conditions of service of police officers have included changes in pension arrangements in 1975 (counting of war service) and 1982 (increase in contributions) and increases in annual leave (1979; 1983 and 1987). Allowances payable in addition to basic pay have been uprated on a regular basis.

Child Care and Family Services

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms his Department has to deal with services and policies on child care and family services.

Mr. John Patten: A ministerial group on women's issues was established in 1986 under Home Office chairmanship to co-ordinate policy issues of special concern to women. The group meets regularly and has focused in particular on child care and domestic violence in the last 12 months.

Home Office Ministers and officials also maintain regular contacts with the Equal Opportunities Commission, the Women's National Commission and with many voluntary organisations and groups.

In addition there are staff in the Home Office establishment department responsible for equal opportunities for women, and the Department's equal opportunities officers play their part in Cabinet Office-led activities designed to promote equal opportunities in the civil service.

Visa Stamps

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to introduce a standardised form of passport visa stamp.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for the format of visa stamps rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. My officials are consulted about the inclusion of safeguards against forgery. I understand that the possibility of introducing a single format, stick-in visa for the United Kingdom at all overseas posts is now under active consideration, although no final decision has been taken.

Football (Restriction Orders)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the provisions to make restriction orders under section 15 of the Football Spectators Act 1989 will come into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These provisions came into effect on 24 April. Guidance to the courts, the police, and to the Football Spectators Restriction Orders Authority which will administer the scheme centrally has been placed in the Library. These provisions are expected to be of value in deterring and preventing hooliganism in respect of certain football matches outside England and Wales by prohibiting offenders who are made subject to restriction orders by the courts from attending those matches.

Medical Care (Prisons)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what different types of medical qualification exist for prison staff involved in medical care of prisoners; and what is the minimum level of such personnel available at all times in prison.

Mr. Mellor: All prison service establishments are served by one or more medical officers all of whom are registered medical practitioners. Many have psychiatric or other special qualifications. Twenty-four hour medical cover is required and is achieved by a combination of daily attendance and an emergency "on call" rota.

Nursing services are provided by hospital officers (prison officers who specialise in health care) and civilian nurses. All the latter, and about 16 per cent. of hospital officers, have a recognised professional nursing qualification. Other hospital officers have received in-service training (currently of 24 weeks duration) in basic nursing techniques. The staffing levels and working patterns are conditioned by the size and function of individual establishments.

Cardiff Prison

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average number of prisoners accommodated at Cardiff prison during each of the past 10 years;

(2) what was the average number of (a) sentenced offenders, (b) remand prisoners and (c) young prisoners accommodated at Cardiff in each of the past 10 years, and in the current year to date.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the maximum number of prisoners accommodated at Cardiff prison at any point during each of the past 10 years and in the current year to date; and how many were (a) sentenced offenders, (b) remand prisoners and (c) young prisoners in each case.

Mr. Mellor: The greatest number of prisoners held in each establishment at a point during each year is calculated annually, and published in the report of the work of the prison service. Details are set out in the tables. Figures are not routinely collected in a way which enables the provision of a breakdown into the categories requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, subsequent to privatisation, he will require electricity companies to publish information about pollution control either in the directors' report or separately.

Mr. Baldry: I have no plans to require electricity companies to publish information about pollution control which is, in any case, a matter for the Department of the Environment. However, the Government will continue to collect and publish information on fuel consumption and pollution from the electricity industry.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the electricity privatisation prospectus will give information about the cash flow of the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Baldry: The prospectuses of those successor companies to the Central Electricity Generating Board to be floated will contain information about sources and applications of funds. The final years of the existence of the CEGB will be covered.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will seek powers to require electricity companies to publish information about the safety of its operations.

Mr. Baldry: I have no plans to do so. The industry has published information on safety matters annually both centrally and on a board-by-board basis and I see no reason why this should not continue. Should he consider it necessary, the Director General of Electricity Supply has the power to arrange for the publication of such material.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Chile

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been offered to the new Government in Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are aiming for some expansion in the existing level of UK programmes for training Chileans in this country and for supporting links between Chilean and UK academic institutions. We also hope to develop a new programme of assistance in the technical education sector, and an English language training project. We have in addition agreed to increase our support to the World University Service (UK) by providing £100,000 a year for three years from 1990 to assist Chilean exiles in the UK to return to Chile.

DEFENCE

Stores Depot, Trecwn

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to close the royal naval stores depot at Trecwn in Dyfed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans at present to close the royal naval armaments depot at Trecwn, but MOD storage requirements are kept under review in the light of changing needs and circumstances.

Low Flying

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Royal Air Force low-flying training aircraft using Wales for exercises carry any live ammunition or weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Practice bombs, using only small spotting charges, and practice ammunition are carried frequently in the United Kingdom. Inert bombs may also be used on some ranges. Live weapons with full charges are not generally carried in training, but there is a need for aircrew to have some very limited practice in their use and a range in Sutherland is normally used by the Royal Air Force for this purpose.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of and list any regular low-flying exercises which concern the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Regular exercises which incorporate a major military low flying element over the United Kingdom include Exercises Elder Forest (once every two years), Elder Joust (once a year), Central Enterprise (once a year), Mallet Blow (twice a year), OSEX (once a year) and Salty Hammer (once a year). Some of these exercises test and practice the United Kingdom air defences while others primarily provide aircrews with training in tactical low flying techniques. Several airborne exercises are also held each year to provide joint Army/RAF training in the parachuting or airlanding of troops and stores.

Radiation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the results of the survey into the effects of low-level radiation on the long-term health of those service men who served on Christmas Island in 1957 and 1958.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) published its report on mortality and cancer incidence in United Kingdom participants in "UK Atmospheric Nuclear Weapon Tests and Experimental Programmes" (NRPB-R214) in 1988. The study included service men who served on Christmas Island.

The NRPB concluded in its report that a long-term health study along the lines suggested by the hon. Member was impracticable and unnecessary and its advice has not changed. The Government must rely, of course, on the expert and wholly independent advice of the NRPB on this matter.

A follow-up mortality study is due to be completed by the end of 1991. The Government are confident that safety procedures during the tests were such that no one should have suffered harm as a result of exposure to ionising radiation. This was confirmed by the 1988 report which established no causal relationship between exposure to ionising radiation and increased incidence of any disease.

Exercise Elder Forest

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the exercise named Elder Forest and whether this is a regular exercise; how many of these exercises have recently taken place; which nations' aircraft were involved; over which countries the exercises took place; what aircraft were involved; what was the cost of each exercise to the United Kingdom; and if he will give details of any accidents which took place during the exercises.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many exercises along the lines of Elder Forest are planned for the years 1990-95; what is the number of missions in each exercise; what is the type of aircraft expected to be involved; which nations' aircraft are expected to be involved; over which countries are the exercises expected to take place; over which areas of the United Kingdom are the exercises projected to take place; and what will be the projected cost of each exercise.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Elder Forest is a biennial United Kingdom air defence exercise, centred on the United Kingdom air defence region, but involving aircraft from a number of NATO nations as well as the RAF. This year's is the sixth such exercise. Participating nations have typically included the United States, France, Germany, Norway, Italy, Denmark and the Netherlands, contributing attack and electronic warfare support aircraft. The RAF will contribute tanker, air defence and attack aircraft. The costs of individual exercises are not kept centrally and it would involve disproportionate cost and effort to collate them. There has been one major accident involving an aircraft participating in Exercise Elder Forest since the series began. This occurred on 20 April 1988 when an RAF Phantom crashed into the sea 20 nautical miles east of Dundee. It is not possible at this stage to say how many missions will be flown in this year's exercise or in future ones.

We expect the Elder Forest series of exercises to continue biennially for the foreseeable future, but it is too early to give precise details.

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications took place between his Department and Sheffield Forgemasters regarding the sale of metal tubes to Iraq prior to 11 April.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications took place between his Department and the firm Walter Somers regarding the sale of equipment to Iraq prior to 11 April.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has records of two occasions on which telephone conversations took place between Walter Somers Ltd. and a Ministry of Defence metallurgical expert in 1988.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications took place between his Department and the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) concerning contracts with Iraq prior to 11 April.

Mr. Alan Clark: These matters are being looked into at present.

Arms Exports

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice is provided by his Department to firms who have queries regarding the application of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989.

Mr. Alan Clark: Queries of this nature are a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry. My Department is not responsible for advising firms in this regard.

Binary Fuels

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the development of binary fuels for use in large-scale artillery.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department monitors developments in this field but is not currently undertaking any such research.

WRNS (Pay)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the pay of members of the Women's Royal Naval Service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government have consulted the Armed Forces Pay Review Body (AFPRB) about the implications for pay of the decision announced earlier this year that members of the Women's Royal Naval Service (WRNS) will in future be eligible to serve at sea. The AFPRB has recommended that from 1 April 1990 all WRNS non-commissioned personnel liable to serve at sea, whether as new entrants or as volunteers from among existing members of the WRNS, should receive the rates of basic pay already applicable to male ratings. The review body proposes that volunteers should be accepted as liable for sea service once they have completed a sea safety course.

The Government have accepted these recommendations in full. WRNS officers already receive the same rates of basic pay as male officers of the Royal Navy.

Members of the WRNS, in common with members of the other women's services, will continue to receive a rate of X factor 1 per cent. below that received by men. The AFPRB has stated that it intends to review this differential in its next report in the light of the initiatives being taken to widen the role of women in all three services.

Dr. Gerald Bull

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the work of Dr. Gerald Bull.

Mr. Alan Clark: No formal assessment has been made, but interested Ministry of Defence staff kept abreast of professional papers written by Dr. Bull.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Earthquakes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research into further possible earthquakes is taking place, in the light of the earthquake that occurred in England and Wales on 2 April.

Mr. Jackson: It is not possible at this time to assess the likely occurrence and location of future events with any precision because earthquakes are rare in the United Kingdom, and because the forces that cause them are not well known. However, important information can be obtained by monitoring the aftershocks which generally occur after an earthquake. In the week following the "Bishop's Castle" earthquake of 2 April 1990, the Natural Environment Research Council's British geological survey (BGS) installed 10 seismometer stations within 25km of the epicentre to study the aftershocks, in order to learn more about the earthquakes in that area and their implications for seismic risk assessment. Together with the information from the improved national seismic monitoring network, this approach will eventually lead to a better capacity in seismic risk assessment.

First Aid

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in ensuring all schools attain his Department's guidelines standards in first aid provision.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for first-aid arrangements in schools rests with local education authorities and other education powers. The results of a recent survey by St. John Ambulance are being studied by my Department in consultation with the Health and Safety Executive, and we shall consider the need for any possible additions to the existing guidance.

Teachers (Financial Incentives)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department collects about financial incentives paid to teachers, particularly in repect of their numbers, values and distribution on scales A to E between infant, junior and senior schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's database of teacher records contains information, collected on an annual basis, on the numbers of incentive allowance holders in maintained schools. The data can be disaggregated by rate of allowance, local education authority, type of school and by various other factors.

Student Grants

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage increase in the amount allocated for student grants for the current academic year over the amount allocated for 1988-89; and whether the increase includes an amount to meet students' community charge payments.

Mr. Jackson: The main rates of mandatory student grant are 5 per cent. higher (9·4 per cent. higher for those studying away from home in London) in the current academic year than in 1988-89. In setting these, students' net liability for 20 per cent. of the community charge following abolition of domestic rates was among the factors taken into account.

Seismic Monitoring

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds have been allocated, or what proposals exist for such funding, to the British geological survey for an improved seismic monitoring network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The British geological survey's (BGS's) programme of monitoring and studying earthquakes has been supported principally by grant-in-aid from my Department to the natural environment research council (NERC) for the past 20 years. The BGS's work has been supplemented by seismographic stations established by Department of the Environment (DOE), Department of Energy (DEng) and others.

In 1989-90, the NERC and the DOE consolidated the BGS work within the framework of the United Kingdom seismic monitoring and information service, co-sponsored by a customer group of Government Departments and commercial organisations, to support the improvement of the seismic monitoring network. In 1989-90, funding amounted to £400,000—70 per cent. contributed by NERC grant-in-aid. The cost of upgrading to a uniform network at 70 km spacing is estimated at £1 million spread over three years, with total running costs of about £1 million per year. Further efforts are being made to enlarge the customer group in order to achieve this.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what percentage Government support for the Welsh language has increased since 1978-79.

Mr. Roberts: In 1990-91 direct Government support for the Welsh language will total £5·87 million. This compares with £349,542 in 1978-79; a cash increase of 1,579 per cent. or 580 per cent. in real terms.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate what percentage of drinking water in Wales is contaminated by faecal organisms.

Mr. Grist: I have been informed by Dwr Cymru that between January 1989 and March 1990 the company examined some 52,000 samples of treated public water supplies in its area of which 0·66 per cent. showed possible faecal contamination. Water quality standards and sampling regimes relating to public supplies are prescribed by the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 1147). Advice on remedial action to be taken in the event of water quality standards being infringed is contained in the Department of Environment-Welsh Office publication "Guidance on Safeguarding the Quality of Public Water Supplies".

Local authorities have a duty to monitor the quality of water supplied for domestic purposes in their areas, including private supplies. Information on the results of samples taken by authorities is not held centrally.

Waste Discharges

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate what percentage of the volume of sewage discharged into the Welsh coastal waters has received (a) primary treatment only and (b) primary and secondary treatment.

Mr. Grist: I understand from information provided by Dwr Cymru that, based on population served, approximately 7 per cent. of the sewage discharged into Welsh coastal waters, including estuarial waters, receives primary treatment only and 22 per cent. receives primary and secondary treatment.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the report that his Department funded jointly with the Welsh water authority concerning viruses in sea and fresh water by Dr. J. M. Tyler.

Mr. Grist: Yes. The results of the research have been broadcast in various seminars and symposia and in a number of publications.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of actual pollution incidents in Wales during the last three years whereby industrial chemicals were discharged illegally into surface waters.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority.

School Inspectors

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report (i) the number of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools and (ii) the number of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools who (a) have had no experience of teaching in primary schools, (b) have had no experience of work outside education, (c) whose gross salary is below £30,000 per annum, (d) hold the qualification of D.Sc., (e) are graduates of universities outside Wales, (f) hold masters or doctoral degrees in mathematics, (g) hold masters or doctoral degrees in physics, (h) hold masters or doctoral degrees in chemistry and (i) hold masters or doctoral degrees in engineering.

Mr. Roberts: The numbers are as follows:

(i) 54 with two more in process of appointment;

(ii) (a) 47 I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 18 March 1986:

(b) 2 have not held permanent posts outside education although most have some experience of work outside education;

(c) 8;

(d) none;

(e) 21;

(f) 1;

(g) 2;

(h) 2;

(i) 2.

School Management

Mr. Barry Jones To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the date when final approval of the scheme for local management of schools was given by his Department for each local education authority.

Mr. Roberts: The information is as follows:

LEA	Date of Approval
Clwyd	9 March 1990
Dyfed	29 March 1990
Gwent	30 March 1990
Gwynedd	9 March 1990
Mid Glamorgan	16 March 1990
Powys	29 March 1990
South Glamorgan	28 March 1990
West Glamorgan	29 March 1990

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of assisted place pupils in each school in Wales in the scheme and the number of assisted place pupils from each Welsh local education authority.

Mr. Roberts: As at September 1989 the number of assisted place pupils in participating schools in Wales was:

	Number
Monmouth boys school	139
Monmouth girls school	67
Howells school, Llandaff	190

	Number
Christ college, Brecon	58
Llandovery college	32
Howells school, Denbigh	67
Rydal school	32
Penrhos college	46
	631

The Department does not collect information on individual pupils and their home local authority.

Health Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what target he has set for each health authority in Wales to seek through (a) donations, (b) charitable gifts and (c) direct fund-raising activities (i) in 1990-91 and (ii) over the next 10 years.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has set no such targets.

School Buildings

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, on a county-by-county basis, the funds allocated by the Government to meet the costs of (a) repair and (b) maintenance of the fabric of schools in the public sector in Wales.

Mr. Roberts [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested. Allocations of credit approval to local authorities are formula-based. Capital allocations since 1984-85 are unhypothecated between services. The public expenditure provisions for education capital at an all-Wales level are shown in the table:

Constant 1988-89 prices

Year	Number
1984-85	37
1985-86	37
1986-87	38
1987-88	44
1988-89	46
1989-90	48

For 1990-91 I have already announced credit approval for local authority education purposes of some £50·1 million with an assumed gross capital expenditure of £53·7 million. Because of changes in the capital control system effective from April 1990 these figures are not directly comparable with those in the table.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, on a county-by-county basis, the most recent assessment of the costs of (a) repairing and (b) maintaining the fabric of schools in the public sector in Wales.

Mr. Roberts [holding answer 24 April 1990]: Responsibility for the repair and maintenance of schools rests with the local education authorities, and the Department has no comprehensive information in the form requested.

In the context of my efficiency initiative, local authorities have established a property management group and this is addressing the condition of the local authority estate, including educational establishments. A report on property management has been prepared which recommends the setting up of appropriate records in regard to the age and condition of buildings including schools.

HEALTH

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the health authorities and units that are working on specimen contracts for health care in respect of his National Health Service reforms;

(2) if he will list the research programmes his Department is running on the National Health Service reform proposals;

(3) if he will list the health regions and health districts that are working on the detail of the internal market for his proposed National Health Service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All health authorities are now preparing to implement the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients", subject to the passage of the necessary legislation. The Government are, in addition, supporting development work in a number of authorities where this is more advanced. The purpose of this support is to build up practical experience and understanding of how the new arrangements will operate so that this can benefit the service as a whole. The Department is supporting a programme of development work rather than research but the results will be evaluated fully.

The following health authorities are involved in work on contracting for services, including the development of specimen contracts:

Newcastle
Sunderland
South Tees
Yorkshire (region and districts)
East Anglian (region and districts)
City and Hackney
West Dorset
South Western (region and districts)
Coventry
Kidderminster
North Western (region and districts)

North Staffordshire DHA

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will reconsider his decision not to approve the nine consultant posts and support staff to the North Staffordshire district health authority out of the funds to alleviate excessive waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The new consultant posts provided under the 100 consultants scheme, announced in the White Paper "Working for Patients", were allocated on the basis of criteria set out when bids for these posts were invited. These were that posts should:

(i) reduce long waiting lists and times;
(ii) help reduce junior doctors' hours;
(iii) help improve the career structure in "out of balance specialties.

North Staffordshire's bid for a consultant gynaecologist was successful and is to be funded from April 1990. We will not be reconsidering the distribution of other posts under this scheme.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals and other units that are seeking trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Formal applications for NHS trust status can be invited only when Parliament has approved the necessary legislation. However, the following 83 units have expressed interest in seeking NHS trust status in 1991:

Northern Regional Health Authority
- Darlington Hospital and Community Services
- Freeman Hospital
- Newcastle General Hospital
- Newcastle Mental Health Services
- North Tyneside District
- Northumbria Ambulance Services

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority
- Bradford Acute Services
- Leeds General Infirmary and Associated Hospitals
- St. James University Hospital, Leeds

Trent Regional Health Authority
- Children's Hospital, Sheffield
- Doncaster Royal Infirmary and the Montagu Hospital
- Lincolnshire Ambulance Service
- Nether Edge Hospital, Sheffield
- Northern General Hospital
- Royal Hallamshire Hospital, Sheffield
- South Lincolnshire Mental Handicap Services
- University Hospital, Nottingham

East Anglian Regional Health Authority
- East Suffolk Community Services
- Great Yarmouth and Waveney Priority Services
- Norfolk Ambulances
- West Norfolk and Wisbech Community Services
- West Norfolk and Wisbech Acute Services

North West Thames Regional Health Authority
- Central Middlesex Hospital
- Harefield Hospital
- Hillingdon Hospital
- Mount Vernon Hospital
- North West Hertfordshire Priority Services Unit
- North Hertfordshire Acute and Community Services
- Northwick Park Hospital

North East Thames Regional Health Authority
- City and Hackney (St. Bartholomew's, Homerton, St. Marks Hospital Trust)
- North Middlesex Hospital
- Southend District Services
- The London Hospital Group
- The Royal Free Hospital
- The Royal National Throat, Nose and Ear Hospital
- Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital

South East Thames Regional Health Authority
- Brighton Acute Services
- Bromley Acute Services
- Eastbourne Acute Services
- Guy's and Lewisham Hospitals and associated Mental Illness Services
- King's/Camberwell Acute Services and associated Community Services
- St. Thomas's Hospital and associated Community Services

South West Thames Regional Health Authority
- Croydon Mental Handicap Unit
- Croydon Community Unit
- Kingston Hospital
- Mid-Downs West Unit
- Mid-Surrey General Unit
- North West Surrey Mental Handicap and Mental Health Units
- South West Surrey Acute Unit
- St. Helier and Sutton Hospitals

Wessex Regional Health Authority
- Lymington Hospitals
- Royal National Hospital for Rheumatic Diseases
- West Dorset Community and General Hospital Services
- West Dorset Mental Health Services

Oxford Regional Health Authority
- Nuffield Orthopaedic Centre, Oxford

South Western Regional Health Authority
- Bristol
- Cornwall Mental Handicap Services
- Cornwall Community Services
- East Somerset
- East Gloucestershire NHS Trust
- Exeter Community Services
- North Devon
- Plymouth Acute Services
- Royal Cornwall Hospitals
- South Devon Health Care Trust
- West Somerset
- West Cornwall
- Weston
- Wonford Acute Services

West Midlands Regional Health Authority
- Alexandra Hospital
- Mid Staffordshire Mental Health Unit
- Mid Staffordshire Community Unit
- Rugby District Services
- Walsall Acute Services

Mersey Regional Health Authority
- Arrow Park and Clatterbridge Hospitals
- Broadgreen Hospital, excluding Mersey Regional Cardio-Thoracic Unit
- Crewe Acute Services
- Halton Community Services
- Regional Adult Cardio-Thoracic Unit, Liverpool
- Royal Liverpool Children's Hospitals
- Whiston St. Helens Hospital

North Western Regional Health Authority
- Central Manchester Hospital and Community Services
- Christie Hospital

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the units which have indicated that they wish to develop their application for National Health Service trust status over a longer time scale.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Formal applications for NHS trust status can be made only when Parliament has approved the necessary legislation. Individual sponsors will then decide whether or not to submit an application for trust status in April 1991 at this stage, it would be premature to identify those units which may or may not wish to develop their application over a longer time scale.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the number of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets born in England and Wales in 1989; and what was the total number of maternities in that year.

Mr. Freeman: Details of multiple births occurring in 1989 are not yet available; it is hoped that the information will be ready in early May; the information will be sent to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Broadmoor Special Hospital

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take in the light of the report on the death of Joseph Watts in Broadmoor special hospital; and whether he will publish the report of the special hospital service board.

Mr. Freeman: The report of the inquiry team has been the subject of detailed consideration within the Department and, in the light of the Department's initial comments, by the general manager of Broadmoor hospital. The report, with the hospital's interim response, has now been referred to the Special Hospitals Service Authority (since 1 October 1989, the body responsible for the management of the special hospitals). The authority has been asked to address the report's findings; review follow-up action taken to date; and consider the further handling of the report, including the arrangements for its wider distribution. We expect to receive the authority's proposals shortly, and then to make a further statement.

Hospital Travel Costs

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to increase public awareness of the hospital travel costs scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 30 January at column 129. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional resources have been given to Dorset to help in the care of AIDS victims.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Wessex regional health authority has been allocated £5,027,000 in 1990-91 towards additional costs incurred in preventing the spread of HIV infection and in providing treatment and care for those who have the virus. It is for the RHA to decide allocations to district health authorities to cover the needs of people living in Dorset. We have separately given Dorset county council a grant of £13,897 this year towards the costs of its planned expenditure on social services for people with AIDS and HIV infection.

Translators (Hospitals)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that in all Health Service contracts placed with hospitals there is a requirement that translators are provided where any patients might need them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Guidance to the NHS has made it clear that each district health authority will be required to place contracts which secure access to a comprehensive range of high-quality services for all members of its resident population. In doing so, they will need to take account of any particular linguistic or cultural needs. A number of interpreters and linkworkers are already employed in the NHS and the Department is encouraging the appointment of more. It must be for district health authorities themselves to negotiate the exact specifications of contracts in the light of local needs and circumstances. It would be too prescriptive to insist that all contracts required the provision of translators or interpreters.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the report from the Disablement Services Authority regarding the provision of powered wheelchairs for outdoor use; if he will publish the recommendations in the Official Report; and if he intends to accept them.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the Disablement Services Authority has now completed the indoor/outdoor electric wheelchair pilot study. A copy of the report on the study has been placed in the Library. The authority is in touch with the Department about the next steps to be taken and we shall make an announcement in due course.

HCHS Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of hospital and community health services expenditure on (a) staff now covered by pay review bodies, (b) other staff and (c) goods and services, in cash and constant prices in each year since 1974-75.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 March 1990]: Information derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department is shown in the table.

Source:
Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England and those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals. (Predecessor authorities for the years prior to 1982-83).
Notes to the table:

1. The figures have been expressed at 1989-90 prices by the use of the Gross Domestic Product deflator.
2. Revenue expenditure on HCHS covers the total revenue expenditure by the health authorities concerned including that on hospital, community health, patient transport (i.e. ambulance), blood transfusion and other services. All capital expenditure and expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded. However, the figures for the years prior to 1 April 1985 include small elements related to the administrative expenses of family practitioner committees (FPCs) which before that date were included in the accounts of the health authorities with which the FPCs were associated and are not separately identifiable.
3. The figures of salaries and wages expenditure are gross costs including employers superannuation and national insurance contributions. Those for the "review body staff" for the earliest years are slightly understated (with corresponding overstatement of those for "all other staff") as the annual accounts did not provide for the separate identification of salaries and wages costs currently attributed to "professions supplementary to medicine" until 1979-80. The costs of employing all non-National Health Service (agency, etc.) staff are included with "all other staff".
4. The figures of total non-pay expenditure are essentially for the purchase of goods and services but include some miscellaneous costs (e.g. staff travel and subsistence expenses, student bursaries, patients allowances, etc.).

General Practitioners

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to alter the guidelines given to family practitioner committees on the drawing of general practitioners' practice boundaries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 23 April 1990]: No. Subject to approval by the medical practices committee, a general practitioner may choose the area from which his patients are drawn provided he can fulfil his obligation to visit patients on his list. A general practitioner must, however, notify the family practitioner committee of his proposed practice area as a condition of acceptance on to the medical list. He may, at any time, change this area with the consent of the family practitioner committee or on appeal to the Secretary of State.

EMPLOYMENT

Child Care and Family Services

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what mechanisms his Department has to deal with services and policies on child care and family services.

Mr. Nicholls: I am a member of the interdepartmental ministerial group on women's issues which was established in 1986 to co-ordinate policy issues of special concern to women. The group meets regularly and has focused in particular on child care and domestic violence in the last 12 months.

I also chair the advisory committee on women's employment which meets regularly to discuss matters affecting women's employment. This committee includes the Equal Opportunities Commission's chair, my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson), representatives of the CBI, TUC and the Women's National Commission.

My ministerial colleagues and I also meet interested groups and address meetings. In addition the Department maintains regular contact with the Equal Opportunities Commission, Women's National Commission and other women's organisations.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when results will be available from the follow-up survey of employment training trainees, and if he will place a full copy of results in the Library.

Mr. Nicholls: When sufficient data are available to satisfy my right hon. and learned Friend of the reliability of more detailed analyses he will consider placing a report in the Library.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of accidents on employment training, fatal, major and minor, for each month since the start of the scheme to the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholls: ET accident figures are collected quarterly, as for YTS. The table gives the accident figures.

	Accidents[1]
	Fatal	Major[2]	Minor
5 September 1988 to 31 December 1988	nil	24	91
1 January 1989 to 31 March 1989	nil	31	161
1 April 1989 to 30 June 1989	nil	53	276
1 July 1989 to 30 September 1989	nil	52	286
1 October 1989 to 31 December 1989	1[3]	67	246

[1] Training Agency figures have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the Training Agency's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.
[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.
[3] This was a road traffic accident.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employer-based work placements and how many project-based work placements have either been rejected or closed on health and safety grounds since employment training was introduced.

Mr. Nicholls: Separate figures for closures and rejections for employer-based and project-based work placements are not kept. The table gives figures of closures and rejections on health and safety grounds from 5 September 1988 to the present date. The figures are provisional.

Closed	Rejected
15	nil

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual expenditure on ET from the start of the programme to the estimated outturn for 1990-91; how much of that budget in cash terms was used to pay (a) the trainees' training allowances, and (b) the trainees' training premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the annual expenditure on employment training (ET) from the start of the programme to 1990-91.

(£ million)

	1988-89 (from 5 September 1988)	1989-90 provisional outturn	1990-91 estimate
Total Employment Training expenditure	425	1,096	1,156
Training allowances	151	527	585
Training premium (estimated)	34	102	108

Employment training is currently helping over 200,000 unemployed people to obtain the skills and experience they need to get jobs. The Government believe that the level of financial support for ET trainees is reasonable given the need to devote adequate resources to maintaining the quality of training.

Availability for Work

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances will an unemployed claimant, following the changes in regulations under the Social Security Act 1989, have good cause for refusing to take a temporary or a short-term job offered by the employment service, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The 1989 social security provision on refusal of employment makes no distinction between long-term, short-term or temporary work. If a job is offered to an unemployed person by the employment service which he or she can reasonably be expected to do, it is for the person to show good cause for refusal. The temporary or short-term nature of the job would be only a factor to be considered by the independent adjudicating authorities, in the event of refusal, with any other reasons put forward by the claimant.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance is given to offices about the treatment of a legally separated unemployed person with access rights to children at weekends in respect of the availability for work effect on his or her entitlement to benefit.

Mr. Eggar: There is no specific guidance issued to offices about the treatment of unemployed persons who are legally separated and who have access rights to children at weekends. A person with domestic or other commitments who restricts himself or herself to working only on certain days of the week would need to show that the restriction is reasonable and that it would not limit his or her prospects of obtaining work. Benefit can be disallowed for those days that the claimant is clearly not available, and for other days claimed if, because of restrictions imposed, he or she has no reasonable prospects of obtaining work. Each case has to be considered individually.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed claimants in each month since 9 October 1989, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, have been (a) issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims (i) allowed or (ii) disallowed, and (d) have been referred to an adjudication officer for refusing suitable employment; and how many of those in (d) have had their benefit disqualified.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows the statistical information for the period 9 October 1989 to 23 February 1990 on questions of "actively seeking employment" and "refusal of employment".

Marchon Chemical Plant (Fire)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will instruct the Health and Safety Executive to carry out an urgent independent investigation into the fire on Thursday 19 April at the Marchon chemical plant in Whitehaven and publish its findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) have already begun their investigation into the circumstances of the fire at the Marchon Chemical plant in Whitehaven on 19 April 1990. The HSE does not consider that the incident warrants any special report.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many field inspectors there were within the Health and Safety Executive for each year from 1974 to 1989 inclusive; how many workplaces they were responsible for in each year and what was the ratio of inspectors to workplaces in each year.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The information available is given for those factory, agricultural, mines and quarries inspectors working from district or area offices and the number of registered workplaces for which they were responsible. Field inspectors do not include nuclear installations or specialist inspectors.

Year	Inspector numbers[1,2,3]	Workplaces registered[4]	Ratio of inspectors to workplaces[5]

1989	722·0	692,078	1:959

[1]HSE was established on 1 January 1975. Centrally maintained staffing figures became available from July of that year.

[2]Agricultural inspectors joined HSE from MAFF from March 1976, with the field force being in place by March 1977.

[3]The Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate transferred to the Department of Environment on 1 April 1987 and have been excluded from the figures.

[4]The total for 1978 is for fixed premises registered with Factory Inspectorate only. Premises registered with Mines and Quarries Inspectorate are included from 1979, with those registered with Agricultural Inspectorate being included from 1984.

[5]For consistency, mines and quarries inspectors have been excluded from the calculation of the ratio in 1978, and agricultural inspectors have been excluded from 1978 to 1983 (see Note *).

*The 1982 figure was the first produced from a computerised database based on the Department of Employment Census. The database initially included premises for which HSE was not the enforcing authority: this accounts for the high figures for 1982 and 1983.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Command Papers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will state the respective numbers of Command Papers, under selected types or subject headings of their main topics, of Command Papers Cm 1-1,000.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: All recent Command Papers are indexed on the Library's POLIS system. If the hon. Member will give more specific details of his particular requirements to the Library then, from the POLIS data base, references could be produced to Command Papers for the period in question, either under specific subject headings; or by issuing Department; or by type, such as White Papers or the treaty or European Communities series.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what impact a spouse or domestic partner of an income support claimant joining an enterprise allowance scheme has on the benefit entitlement of the claimant; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Income support is not normally payable to a couple when either member is participating in the enterprise allowance scheme because the participant is deemed to be in remunerative work. However, if their income is low they may continue to receive help from housing benefit and community charge benefit. In addition, family credit is available to those with a dependent child.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has received to "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" from the Disablement Income Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Disablement Income Group has published a report, "Short Changed by Disability" in response to "The Way Ahead" proposals. The group is a member of the Disability Benefits Consortium, which I met on 5 April to discuss "The Way Ahead". We shall give careful consideration to all their comments in carrying forward the detailed work on our proposals.

Local Government Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has issued any guidance to local authorities as to what amounts of community charge can be demanded from applicants for community charge benefit before their entitlement to benefit has been determined; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Community Charge (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations provide that local authorities should issue rebated or unrebated community charge bills as soon as practicable after setting the community charge level. The Community Charge Benefit (General) Regulations provide that entitlement to community charge benefit should be determined within 14 days—or as soon as practicable—of the claim being received, with sufficient information, by the local authority. The administration of the benefit scheme is a matter for local authorities who must decide what action to take if they are unable to meet this requirement.

SCOTLAND

Whimbrel

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those areas of land which support more than 1 per cent. of the British population of breeding whimbrel and in each case indicate those which have been notified and confirmed as sites of special scientific interest under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Nature Conservancy Council advises that the majority of breeding whimbrel in Great Britain are to be found in Shetland. I refer the hon. Member to the NCC report "Shetland Moorland Bird Surveys 1986", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Sites of special scientific interest are selected according to the guidelines published by the NCC in 1989. The assessment of individual sites is based upon the range and quality of the habitat required to sustain populations of protected species such as whimbrel. Other factors are also taken into account in the process of site notification in Shetland and elsewhere. As a result sites are not generally attributed to a single species but usually represent the best example of the habitat available in a particular area.

Hedgerows

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of hedgerows have been removed, and how many miles planted (a) since 1 January 1960 and (b) since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report in relation to each local authority in Scotland and the average for all local authorities in Scotland for the financial year 1990-91 (a) the level of net expenditure per head of population, (b) the level of net expenditure per head of population as set out in the Government's assessment of expenditure need, (c) the level of income per head of population from personal, standard and collective community charges, (d) the income from revenue support grant per head of population, (e) the income from non-domestic rates per head of population and (f) the income from the other sources per head of population all excluding reference to the water community charge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The information is in the table:

Notes:

1. Population as estimated by the Registrar General for Scotland at 30 June 1988 has been used in calculating "per head" figures.
2. Total net expenditure is based on local authority budget estimates.
3. Grant Aided Expenditure (formerly assessed needs) excludes loan charges against which Revenue Support Grant is also paid.
4. Community Charge income from personal, collective and standard charges is as estimated by local authorities.
5. Revenue Support Grant for 1990-91 is payment made by the Scottish Office.
6. Non-Domestic Rate Income as estimated by the Scottish Office.
7. Specific Grant as estimated by local authorities.
8. No allowance is made for use of balances to finance expenditure.

Mr. Bill Walker To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details for each region of Scotland showing how the non-domestic rates are affected by revaluation and the Government's scheme to reduce the actual cash required to be paid by businesses with rateable values above and below £10,000 for the years 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The table sets out the non-domestic rate for each region, islands and district council for 1989-90, and for 1990-91 following revaluation. The effect of revaluation is to reduce the levels of non-domestic rate in real terms in inverse proportion to the average increase in rateable values (column 2). The rates for 1990-91 have been further reduced by 6·25 per cent. as the first step towards the introduction of a national non-domestic rate in Scotland (column 3).

Rateable values have increased by an average of 34·4 per cent. as a result of revaluation. Only those ratepayers facing an increase in rateable value in excess of the average will see their non-domestic rate bills increase in real terms. In order to protect ratepayers from any significant increases in rate bills resulting from revaluation we are limiting annual increases in rateable value. In 1990-91 no ratepayer will be required to pay non-domestic rates on more than 1·613 times his 1989-90 rateable value and where the rateable value on 1 April 1990 is less than £10,000 the limit will be reduced to 1·546 times the 1989-90 rateable value. In order to maintain the level of rate income limits have also been placed on the amount by which rateable values may be reduced following revaluation so that these arrangements have no effect on the level of rate poundages.

1. Column 2 shows rate poundages which would have been required in 1990-91 following revaluation were it not for the Government's national non-domestic rate policy.
2. Column 3 shows the actual rate poundages for 1990-91 which the Secretary of State prescribed following the £80 million reduction in the burden on ratepayers in Scotland as the first move towards the introduction of a national non-domestic rate.

European Community Housing Ministers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held concerning the meeting of European Community Housing Ministers in Lille in December 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend has held no such discussions.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he or the Under-Secretary of State has to attend future meetings of European Community Housing Ministers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend will consider attendance at future meetings of European Community Housing Ministers in the light of the agenda for any such meetings.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of farms by region in Scotland, on which cattle were found to have bovine spongiform encephalopathy, also had sheep on them.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The percentage of farms from which cattle have been confirmed as suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy on which sheep were also present is as follows:

	per cent.
Borders	90·9
Central	91·6
Dumfries	88·2
Fife	80·0

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cattle have been confirmed as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each region of Scotland for each year since the disease was discovered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The numbers are as follows:

Region	1987	1988	1989
Borders	1	1	9
Central	—	3	8
Dumfries	4	13	32

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the incidence in percentage terms of bovine spongiform encephalopathy affected herds in each region of Scotland at 31 December 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The incidence in relation to BSE-affected dairy herds in Scotland is as follows:

	per cent.
Borders	5·19
Central	6·09
Dumfries	2·16
Fife	3·88
Grampian	7·35
Highland	3·66
Lothian	4·26

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by age the cattle confirmed as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy in 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The answers are as follows:

Age	Number
2 years	1
3 years	14
4 years	48
5 years	43
6 years	19
7 years	3
8 years	1

Dogs

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations and bodies which have responded to the consultation document "Action on Dogs."

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: One hundred and six organisations responded to the consultation paper. I am writing to the hon. Member with the details.

Radiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department contributed towards the funding of the aerial survey of radioactive contamination in Galloway and Upper Nithsdale which was carried out by the Scottish Universities Research and Reactor Centre in February 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The Scottish Office supported the survey by making available, on a shared cost basis, an inshore fisheries patrol aircraft. This contribution was equivalent to £700.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to eliminate illegal poisoning of birds of prey; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Birds of prey are protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The Nature Conservancy Council is presently reviewing the effectiveness of the legislation and expects to report this year. We shall consider its report and any recommendations for change most carefully.

Bed-and-Breakfast Businesses

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the liability of bed-and-breakfast businesses for non-domestic rates; and if he intends to give any guidance to local authorities on the collection of rates on those bed-and-breakfast businesses which have been assessed for non-domestic rates for 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: We have made clear our intention to clarify in legislation the boundary between domestic and non-domestic in the case of bed-and-breakfast establishments. We have recently consulted interested parties on our proposals in this respect and we are currently considering the responses to that consultation exercise before bringing forward appropriate regulations. These regulations cannot apply retrospectively and any bed-and-breakfast operator faced with an assessment for rates in respect of 1989-90 which he considers not to be justified should appeal through the normal channels. We see no need to provide guidance to local authorities on the collection of rates from bed-and-breakfast businesses.

THE ARTS

Arts (Devon)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assistance he is giving to the promotion of the arts in Devon.

Mr. Luce: Promotion of the arts is a matter for the Arts Council and the regional arts associations. In 1990-91 it is estimated that direct spending on the arts in Devon by South West Arts and the Arts Council will be in excess of £1·25 million.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sulphadimidine

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any information from the United States Food and Drugs Administration about the safety of sulphadimidine.

Mr. Curry: The Department has received no new information from the Food and Drugs Administration or any other source which would affect the conclusion of the Veterinary Products Committee and the committee on toxicity that sulphadimidine can be used safely.

Caseons Lymphademitis

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of outbreaks of caseons lymphademitis reported to his Department; what is the number of restriction orders placed on farms; what action he intends taking; whether compensation will be paid to affected farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Caseons lymphademitis has been confirmed on two premises and movement restrictions placed on a further 10 premises to date. Material taken from suspect goats and sheep is still being examined and tracing of animals connected with the source of infection is continuing. More information on the extent and nature of the infection is needed before decisions are taken on what further action is required.

Departmental Research

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has estimated the effect on sales of home grown potatoes in United Kingdom supermarkets if retailers' views were taken into consideration in assessing the research priorities of his Department;

(2) whether the views of (a) retailers and (b) growers are considered when assessing his Department's research priorities for apples and pears;

(3) whether the views of (a) retailers and (b) growers are taken into consideration when assessing his Department's research priorities for potatoes.

Mr. Curry: In setting research priorities, we take full account of the advice of the priorities board for research and development in agriculture and food. In preparing its advice to Agriculture Ministers and the chairman of the Agricultural and Food Research Council, the priorities board draws on the views of retailers, as well as food manufacturers, farmers, growers, academics and others.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much local authorities overspent in 1989-90 and 1988-89; what were the effects on inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Local authorities' total net current expenditure exceeded their grant-related expenditure (GRE) by 7 per cent. in both 1988-89 and 1989-90. Increases in total domestic rates added around 0·36 per cent. and 0·4 per cent. to the level of the RPI in 1988-89 and 1989-90 respectively.

Supply Side

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent measures he has introduced affecting the supply side of the economy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government have introduced many measures designed to improve the operation of the supply side of the economy, through improved incentives, more open markets, the abolition of unnecessary or obsolete regulations, and the introduction of greater competition to the public sector. The following are among the most recent measures introduced which should have important supply side effects.

The successful transfer of the 10 water supply companies to the private sector last December means that since 1979 we have reduced the size of the state-owned sector of industry by almost half. The future privatisation programme includes the sale of the 12 regional electricity distribution companies in England and Wales in the autumn. And, of course, more competition has been introduced into the electricity generating industry with the splitting of the CEGB into National Power and PowerGen, leading up to their intended privatisation early next year. The Scottish electricity industry will also be sold next year.

The Employment Act 1989 has continued the Government's process of gradual reform of industrial relations legislation to remove inflexibilities from the labour market and reduce unions' capacity to abuse their market power. Specifically the Act removed the remaining legal protection from all types of closed shop, and from secondary industrial action. The Dock Work Act 1989 repealed the national dock labour scheme, so removing the unneccessary costs imposed by its restrictive labour practices.

Last October saw two highly significant reforms: the reform of employees' national insurance contributions which cut contributions for virtually all employees, and removed a major disincentive to the low-paid who previously lost out when their income rose above the two intermediate steps, now abolished; and the abolition of the pensioners' earnings rule which also removed a severe disincentive, allowing a large number of pensioners to work and earn more income without having their pensions abated or eliminated altogether.

We have now launched the first training and enterprise councils, or TECs (local enterprise councils in Scotland), which will be charged with developing the quality effectiveness and relevance to local labour markets of the Government's existing training and business assistance programme.

The Budget last month included a number of measures of specific help to small businesses, whose general success is vital to the efficient operation of the supply side. These included an increase in the small firms corporation tax threshold, a comprehensive system of relief from VAT on bad debts, simplification of VAT registration rules, and the maximum increase in the VAT registration threshold allowed under EC law.

The Budget also gave a further boost to the Government's measures to encourage wider share ownership by increasing the annual limit on investment in a personal equity plan, and providing capital gains tax deferral for sales of shares to employee share ownership plans. In addition, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced the Government's intention to abolish stamp duty on share transactions. This will reduce the cost of share dealing, improving the competitiveness of the United Kingdom equity market and encouraging the spread of share ownership. This reform will take effect in late 1991-92, to coincide with the introduction of the stock exchange's TAURUS dematerialised (paperless) share register and settlement system.

Public Sector Investment

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about changing guidelines on public sector investment criteria.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Treasury issues guidance on investment appraisal by central Government, as do Departments for their own programmes. These documents are revised from time to time to reflect improvements in methodology, the objective in all cases being to achieve best value for money.

Farm Land (Sporting Rights)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received about the valuation of sporting rights on farm land;

(2) representations he has received about value added tax on sporting rights on farm land.

Mr. Ryder: The only recent representations on these matters of which I am aware are contained in a letter from my hon. Friend to my noble Friend the Paymaster General.

Community Support Loans

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the legal conditionality which might attach to any Community support loans referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 3 April, Official Report, column 523.

Mr. Ryder: The possibility of attaching binding economic conditions to support loans from the Community to an individual member state was discussed at the last informal ECOFIN, but no formal proposal has been put forward.

Delors Plan

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest proposals of the European Community Commission on the Delors plan and the financing by member states of budget deficits by monetary means.

Mr. Ryder: The European Commission's latest report, entitled "Economic and Monetary Union: The Economic Rationale and Design of the System", was deposited in the Vote Office with an explanatory memorandum on Tuesday 24 April. This report notes that there is a "virtual consensus" in the Community in favour of a rule proposing no monetary financing of public deficits.

ECOFIN

Mr. Norris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Major: The ECOFIN Council met in Luxembourg on 23 April. The Paymaster General and I represented the United Kingdom. The Council heard a report on the presidency's negotiations with the European Parliament on the revision of the financial perspective but without substantive discussion. The German Finance Minister reported on the latest developments regarding economic and monetary union between the two Germanies. There was further discussion of the site and presidency of the European bank for reconstruction and development. I stressed the strong case for London and the need for an early decision in order to begin the bank's work in eastern Europe as soon as possible. I also emphasised the need to maintain budgetary discipline in the context of agricultural price fixing.

A brief note from the presidency outlining the necessary procedures for conducting multilateral surveillance of member states' economies was also agreed, as was the text of a speech to be given by the presidency at the forthcoming meeting of the interim committee of the International Monetary Fund.

The presidency offered a progress report on discussions concerning the scope of zero and reduced VAT rates, pointing out that there was a need for further work on a wide range of issues before decisions could be taken. In the subsequent discussion, the Paymaster General expressed our regret that no progress was made in accepting the Commission's proposals for substantial increases in travellers' allowances between now and the completion of the single market on 1 January 1993.

A package of three tax measures which would encourage cross-border co-operation in tax affairs was also discussed but without agreement.

Arms Exports

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what routine arrangements exist for co-ordination between Customs and Excise officers and the Department of Trade and Industry to ensure that regulations prohibiting the export of arms are carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Customs and Excise is in regular contact with the DTI on these matters. In particular, whenever customs staff at ports and airports in the course of their routine monitoring arrangements have grounds for suspecting an export licensing irregularity they are required to contact the Department of Trade and Industry for a ruling on the licensability of the items in question.

Unit Labour Costs

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual percentage rise in unit labour costs in manufacturing in West Germany, France, Italy, the United States, Japan, Sweden and the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Following is the information requested.

Growth in manufacturing unit labour costs in national currencies

	(annual average percentage change)
	1979-88[1]	1979-89
United Kingdom	5·0	4·9
United States	2·3	—
Japan	−1·2	—
Germany	3·2	—
France	6·2	—
Italy	8·5	—
Sweden	6·1	—

Optical Equipment

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) shops and (b) manufacturers dealing with optical equipment were trading in Britain in 1987; and what are the current figures.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 April 1990]: What information is available is shown in the table.

Total number of legal units registered for VAT as at end of April 1989

	1987	[1]1989
(a) Shops
Opticians	[2]2,200	2,476
Chemists and photographic shops	8,717	8,528
(b) Manufacturers
Surgical instruments and appliances	409	402
Scientific and industrial instruments and systems	2,807	2,961
Photographic and document copying equipment	124	155

[1] Latest year for which figures are available.
[2] Opticians were not required to register for VAT in 1987. This figure, which is comparable to that shown for 1989, is estimated from entries in the Opticians Register for 1987.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had an opportunity to discuss the Australian peace proposals for Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 26 March, at columns 29-30.

Afghanistan

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what conditions diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and Afghanistan will be re-established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and Afghanistan have not been broken. British diplomats were temporarily withdrawn from Kabul in February 1989. It is still too early to say when they will return.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to prevent weapons from reaching elements opposed to the Government of Afghanistan in Afghanistan; and whether he will raise this matter with the United States of America or at the United Nations.

Mr. Maude: None. We understand the issue of arms supplies to all sides is under discussion by the parties to the 1988 Geneva accords.

China

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any recent representations have been made to the Government of the Republic of China regarding human rights violations since the events in June 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We and our EC partners have made our concerns very clear. On 2 and 21 February, the EC presidency in the UN Commission on Human Rights recorded the deep dismay of the international community at the repression of peaceful demonstrations in June 1989, and called upon the Chinese authorities to guarantee full respect for human rights throughout China, including Tibet. On 7 March, Britain and its EC partners co-sponsored a resolution in the Commission on Human Rights critical of human rights violations in China, which was narrowly defeated. We and our EC partners made representations in February to the Chinese Government about the arrests of Catholic priests.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of deaths in the incident in Tiananmen square, Peking.

Mr. Maude: It is not possible to provide a precise figure for the number of deaths in Peking last June. Amnesty International estimated that at least 1,000 civilians died.

Middle East

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has discussed with his Israeli counterpart, or any Israeli official, the issue of nuclear or chemical weapon proliferation in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No, but my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the question of Israeli accession to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty during his talks with Professor Arens on 15 February 1989.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the United Nations and other international bodies on the Israeli treatment of the Palestinians.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are in touch with interested UN agencies and other international organisations about Israel's treatment of Palestinians in the occupied territories, which unfortunately often falls below the expected standard. We take every opportunity to remind the Israeli authorities of their obligation to administer the occupied territories in accordance with their obligations under international law.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, through the British consulate in east Jerusalem, Her Majesty's Government are monitoring Israeli use of west bank water resources, in respect of possible contraventions of the 1949 Geneva convention on the responsibilities of occupiers.

Mr. Waldegrave: We take a close interest in all aspects of the Israeli administration of the occupied territories and take every opportunity to remind the Israeli authorities of their obligations to respect international law. My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs mentioned the question of discriminatory allocation of water resources to the Foreign Minister of Israel when they met in New York in September last.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the middle east peace process and on the relations between the Palestine Liberation Organisation and Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our aim is to encourage a dialogue between Israel and representative Palestinians as a first step towards a comprehensive settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute. We look to the next Israeli Government to pursue such a dialogue with vigour and speed. We use our frequent contacts with the PLO to urge it to maintain its welcome commitment to a peaceful, negotiated settlement.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government are monitoring Israeli use of the natural resources of the west bank and Gaza strip.

Mr. Waldegrave: We take a close interest in all aspects of the Israeli administration of the occupied territories, including the use of natural resources, and take every opportunity to remind the Israeli authorities of their obligation to respect international law.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States and the European Community on violations of the 1949 Geneva convention in the occupied territories on the west bank and the Gaza strip; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are in frequent contact with the United States and our EC partners about Israel's administration of the occupied territories. We take every opportunity to remind the Israeli authorities of their obligations under international law.

Israel

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the possession by Israel of chemical, biological, or nuclear weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: As far as we are aware, Israel has never confirmed or denied possession of chemical, biological or nuclear weapons.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations to initiate investigations at the United Nations into the Iraqi nuclear weapons programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 April, at column 1013. I have nothing further to add.

Libya

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the article in "Defence and Foreign Affairs Weekly", volume XVI, No. 10, 12 to 18 March, by Gregory R. Copley, on the current situation in Libya and the declining political position of Colonel Gadaffi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received no such representations and we have no diplomatic relations with Libya.

Chile

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago to the new Chilean Government concerning human rights and political prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Shortly before the inauguration of President Aylwin on 11 March, Her Majesty's ambassador wrote to the Minister of Justice-designate to remind him of our concern about excessive delays in the remand procedure under the former regime and its use of military courts to try civilians, and particularly the case of Sra Ledy Castro, since freed on bail.

More recently, my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord President of the Council, who attended the celebrations following President Aylwin's inauguration, expressed to the new Chilean Ministers our satisfaction at their approach to the human rights problem.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

3. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his most recent assessment of the level of homelessness in England and Wales.

43. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total housing needs of homeless people.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The most recent figures available give a total of 31,840 households accepted as homeless by local authorities in England in the last quarter of 1989. Homelessness in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

19. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for homelessness in Yorkshire and Humberside region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Accommodation was found for 3,100 households accepted as homeless by local authorities in Yorkshire and Humberside in the last quarter of 1989.

34. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the level of homelessness in Leicester.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Over the past year my officers have discussed the problem of homelessness with Leicester city council twice. The director of housing has written to my Department requesting additional resources to help deal with it.

58. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to fund programmes to accommodate permanently people sleeping rough in London.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implementation of new proposals to deal with the problem of teenage homelessness.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are concerned about the needs of rough sleepers and Departments are looking at the way their policies work together to ensure that appropriate assistance is available. An announcement will be made in due course.

62. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of households accepted as homeless in 1989 was as a result of a breakdown in family life or because of a breakdown of a relationship with a partner.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Local authorities make quarterly returns of the numbers of households for which they have accepted responsibility for securing accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985. They also provide a breakdown of these acceptances by the main immediate reasons for homelessness.

For 1989 the figures are as follows:

	per cent.
Parents, relatives or friends no longer able/willing to accommodate	43
Breakdown of relationship with partner	17
Mortgage arrears	6
Rent arrears:
Local authority dwellings	3
Private dwellings	2
Loss of private rented dwelling (other reasons)	12
Loss of service tenancy	4
Other	13
ALL REASONS	100
(Number of households accepted—100 per cent.	(126,240)

51. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any new proposals to deal with the problem of homeless families and homeless single people.

69. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on Government assistance for the homeless.

73. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans any new initiatives to deal with homelessness.

81. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a further statement on the progress of his proposals about homelessness in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood).

52. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to use Government owned empty property for homeless families.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey).

Local Government Finance

12. Mr. Loyden To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet representatives of local government to discuss the poll tax.

61. Mr. Patchett To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet representatives of local government to discuss the poll tax.

70. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet representatives of local government to discuss the poll tax.

Mr. Chris Patten: There is no meeting fixed at present.

16. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the five boroughs in inner London with the highest overspend in terms of £ sterling per head over standard spending assessment.

Mr. David Hunt: The five inner London boroughs whose 1990-91 budgets represent the highest overspends in pounds per head of relevant population compared with their standard spending assessments are:

Greenwich
Lambeth
Hammersmith
Southwark
Tower Hamlets

26. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received opposing the poll tax since 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I continue to receive representations on a wide range of issues including the level of charge which some authorities have chosen to set.

27. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities in England with the highest community charge.

Mr. David Hunt: The list is as follows:

Haringey	573
Lambeth	548
Camden	534

Hackney	499
Islington	499
Brent	498
Bristol	490
Oxford	489
Basildon	478
Derby	458

29. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from young people about the community charge.

Mr. Chris Patten: I continue to receive representations from both young and old people on a wide range of issues related to the community charge.

30. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the operation by local authorities of the standard charge in respect of empty properties.

Mr. Chope: I continue to receive representations on a wide range of issues related to the standard community charge including the use that local authorities make of their discretion to levy no charge or a lower charge in respect of certain types of empty property.

32. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the expected receipts from the uniform business rate in Cornwall for 1990-91; and what contribution is to be made from the uniform business rate to Cornwall.

Mr. Chope: The provisional amount which local authorities in Cornwall are to pay into the national non-domestic rating pool in 1990-91 is £50,105,153.

The amount of redistributed business rates which will be paid to authorities in Cornwall for 1990-91 is £102,492,371. This money is paid in support of parish, district and county council services in the area and is nearly £293 per adult.

35. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has as to the number of sports clubs and facilities that will benefit in real terms from lower rate bills as a result of the introduction of the uniform business rate and the non-domestic revaluation.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 19 March 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) and the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) at column 483.

36. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received in favour of a tax on capital values in place of the community charge.

Mr. Chope: I am not aware of any representations in favour of capital value rates.

41. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many recent representations he has received in favour of a local income tax in place of the community charge.

Mr. Chope: We continue to receive many representations on all aspects of the community charge; however, only a relatively small number suggest that the community charge should be replaced by a system of local income tax.

48. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the standard community charge on empty properties.

Mr. Chope: I have received and continue to receive many representations on all aspects of the standard community charge.

49. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about hardship caused by his decision not to make 1 April the starting date for empty property being liable for the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: While I have received a large number of representations about empty properties and the standard community charge, I have received very few about this particular aspect.

50. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from private tenants about the community charge and levels of rents.

Mr. Chope: I have received and continue to receive representations on a wide range of issues related to the community charge including from private tenants. My Department has recently produced a leaflet giving advice to people in rented accommodation on their rights following the abolition of domestic rates.

55. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his plans to review standard spending assessments for 1991-92.

83. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his plans to review standard spending assessments for 1991-92.

100. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his plans to review standard spending assessments for 1991-92.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has made it clear both in the House on 18 January, and on many subsequent occasions, that any fresh evidence in support of a new methodology for calculating standard spending assessments will be considered with a view to making changes if that should prove necessary. Officials have already begun discussions with local authority representatives with a view to establishing a programme of work for examining any such fresh evidence.

65. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for further changes to the poll tax system in 1990-91.

75. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for further changes to the poll tax system in 1990-91.

84. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for further changes to the poll tax system in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: None.

78. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received concerning the community charge.

Mr. Chope: I have received and continue to receive a large number of representations on a wide range of issues concerning the community charge.

89. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Basildon area on his charge-capping decision.

Mr. Chope: None so far.

90. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Labour-controlled local authorities in England and Wales have planned to increase their expenditure above the rate of inflation in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Information showing the increase in demands and precepts over corresponding figures of income from rates and grant in 1989-90 for each local authority in England has today been placed in the Library of the House.

92. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from hoteliers and guest house proprietors about the uniform business rate.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has received a number of recent representations from hoteliers and guest house proprietors on this matter.

93. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities with the highest levels of uncollected council house rents.

Mr. Chope: The 10 local authorities with the highest arrears as a percentage of their rent roll at the end of 1988-89 were as follows:

	Rent arrears (£000s)	Arrears as a percentage of rent roll
Brent	[1]13,713	49·0
Lambeth	17,492	35·7
Southwark	[1]26,820	35·5
Hackney	12,357	30·3
Islington	13,081	28·9
Ealing	5,651	26·2
Liverpool	15,292	26·2
Haringey	7,200	25·6
Waltham Forest	4,365	20·6
Newham	5,373	16·0

[1] DOE estimate of rent arrears.

103. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received against the proposals for community charge capping.

Mr. Chope: The Department has received a number of letters against capping since my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 3 April.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in real and percentage terms, the actual community charge for each local authority with the assumed community charge made by Her Majesty's Government on 11 January.

64. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 London boroughs with the highest overspend in terms of £ sterling per head over standard spending assessment.

72. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the top 10 local authorities in England with the highest overspending in terms of £ sterling per head over standard spending assessment.

91. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 county councils with the highest overspend in terms of £ sterling over standard spending assessment.

94. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 London boroughs with the highest community charge.

97. Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the five boroughs in inner London with the highest community charge.

98. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the top 10 local authorities in England with the highest percentage overspend over standard spending assessment.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am arranging for a summary of information relating to the demands, precepts and community charges set for each authority to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the alterations that he recently considered making to the community charge.

Mr. Chope: We continue to keep all aspects of local government finance policy under review.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend the relevant poll tax regulations to ensure that wardens of retirement people's homes living residentially during the week, but in their own homes at weekends, do not have to pay two lots of poll tax bills.

Mr. Chope: Individuals are subject to the personal community charge for the area where they have their main residence and cannot be subject to more than one personal charge. Individuals with a freehold or leasehold interest in a second residence may be subject to a standard charge only if that residence is not used as the main residence of another person. It is possible that wardens of retirement homes could be liable to a standard charge but where the nature of their employment and household circumstances causes this, the local authority has a discretion to set the multiplier at a zero or low multiplier.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidelines have been given to local councils on the charging of standard poll tax to those payers in the process of selling their second homes:

(2) if he will amend poll tax guidelines to local councils so as to ensure that those currently selling off property but living elsewhere are not subject to poll tax for the property which is in the process of being sold.

Mr. Chope: We have prescribed in the Community Charge (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 that no standard charge is payable in respect of unoccupied property which is substantially unfurnished and has been so for less than three months. This would include properties which are in the process of being sold.

There was a similar arrangement under the domestic rating system. Local authorities have discretion to extend the period of relief or to set a multiplier different from the one generally applied. My Department has written to local authorities explaining the scope and exercise of this discretion.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage in expenditure for which Stockport metropolitan borough council is budgeting this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Information comparing the demands of individual local authorities with corresponding information for 1989-90 has been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Associations

20. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Association of County Councils; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Chris Patten: I last met the leader of the Association of County Councils on 27 March. Representatives of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and of the Association of District Councils were also present. We discussed the community charge.

82. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Association of District Councils; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the Association of District Councils on 27 March. The Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities were also present. They discussed the community charge.

Rents

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to maintain rents at affordable levels in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: In respect of England, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo). Rents in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

39. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that local authority rent increases properly reflect Government guidelines.

Mr. Chope: It is for each local authority to set its own rents. The guidelines merely seek to ensure that housing revenue account subsidy is targeted to reflect the needs of authorities, and to encourage a more sensible pattern of rents.

54. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to issue any new guidance on rent levels.

87. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to issue any new guidance on rent levels.

Mr. Chope: We will not be issuing any further rent guidelines for 1990-91 but local authorities and their associations will be consulted in due course on rent guidelines and related matters for 1991-92.

Sewerage

25. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the level of investment planned by the water industry over the next 10 years in the sewerage network.

46. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the level of investment planned by the water industry over the next 10 years in sewage treatment.

Mr. Trippier: Of the total investment of £26·3 billion allowed for in determining charges limits for the water industry in England and Wales some £5·3 billion was for investment at sewage treatment works, £5·7 billion for investment in the sewerage network and £1·2 billion for investment in sea and estuarial outfalls. Discussions with the water industry are now in hand to revise these investment programmes to take account of the Secretary of State's recent announcement that in future all significant discharges of sewage to sea should be treated and that dumping of sewage sludge at sea should be ended.

Rivers

28. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of British rivers are of good or fair quality; and what is the comparable figure in the rest of Europe.

Mr. Trippier: A review of river classification schemes across the European Community published in 1988 by the water research centre showed that 95 per cent. of river length in the United Kingdom was of good or fair quality compared with 75 per cent. in the European Community as a whole. The review also indicated that no other member state bettered our position.

31. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made by the National Rivers Authority in tackling the pollution of rivers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The National Rivers Authority has already demonstrated clearly its commitment to effective regulation of water quality. A number of offenders have been successfully prosecuted, and many more have received formal warnings. The authority has embarked on a number of reviews of key policy areas, including the discharge consent system, and it will carry out a national survey of river water quality in 1990.

79. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of river pollution to the North sea comes from (a) the river Rhine, (b) the river Elbe, (c) continental rivers as a whole and (d) British rivers as a whole.

60. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of input of contaminants into the North sea from rivers comes from English rivers.

67. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of pollution in the North sea comes from British rivers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Rivers are the most important source of North sea pollution, but their exact contribution varies according to the contaminant and year chosen for study.

The most recent comprehensive information available comes from a study published this year by the Netherlands-based International Centre for Water Studies, and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library. This shows in broad terms that the combined effect of all United Kingdom rivers flowing into the North sea is to contribute about 20 per cent. of river-borne contaminants. The remaining 80 per cent. of river-borne contaminants come from continental rivers with the Rhine-Meuse contributing about 30 per cent. and the Elbe around 35 per cent.

Housing

33. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the director of the Institute of Housing; and what was discussed.

86. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the director of the Institute of Housing; and what was discussed.

Mr. Chope: I last met the director when I addressed the institute's presidential dinner on Thursday 1 March. My speech concentrated on housing management issues and the many new initiatives introduced by my Department to improve and enhance management practice. I encouraged the institute to play its part in promoting good management and in the productive working relationship it has with my Department.

37. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the supply of rented accommodation.

74. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to increase the supply of rented accommodation.

Mr. Chope: The Government's aim is to ensure that decent housing is within reach of every family, and that enough subsidised rented accommodation is available for those who cannot afford to rent privately or to buy. The increases in public expenditure provision for housing association investment announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement, together with the increased scope for housing associations to use private finance, are a major step towards achieving that aim.

38. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what allocation of the housing investment programme for 1990-91 is being allowed for building new dwellings, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: It is for local authorities to decide their own priorities in using the resources available to them from housing investment programme (HIP) allocations and usable capital receipts, although the Government have encouraged them to concentrate on the improvement of their own stock and assisting private owners with grants. The task of providing new subsidised homes for rent and sale is increasingly passing to housing associations, with local authorities fulfilling an enabling role.

45. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures for the housing investment programme allocation in 1979 and 1990, updated to 1990 prices; and if he will make a statement.

76. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures for the housing investment programme allocation in 1979 and 1990, updated to 1990 prices, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The relevant figures for England are £5·43 billion and £2·16 billion respectively. However, since 1979 local authority spending has been enhanced significantly by resources released through the sale of council houses to their tenants.

66. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average annual rate of decline of council house building between 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Chope: The figures for new house building in England in 1989 are contained in table 1.2(a) "Housing and Construction Statistics, Part 1" No. 40; those for 1979 are in table 6.1(a) of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies are in the Library.

71. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing stock is estimated to be empty in (a) the local authority sector, (b) the housing association sector, (c) the private sector and (d) the Government sector.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 27 February 1990 to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) at columns 180-81.

96. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any new proposals to assist first-time home buyers.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 21 February to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) at column 741.

57. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to make private housing properties which are unfit for human habitation or lacking basic amenities adequate for letting to help reduce waiting lists of local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding).

Action for Cities

40. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total sum being spent on the Government's action for cities programme.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 7 March at columns 734-35.

Hazardous Waste

42. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of hazardous waste disposed of in Britain is imported from abroad.

Mr. Trippier: The latest figures available for England and Wales indicate that imports are about 2 per cent. of total disposals.

44. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on implementing the agreement reached at the last North sea conference on the disposal of polychlorinated biphenyls.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Ministers of North sea states meeting in March at the third North sea conference held in The Hague agreed to take measures to phase out and destroy all remaining identifiable uses of polychlorinated biphenyls by 1999 at the latest, making use of storage only as an interim option and with each country pledging to develop destruction facilities to allow each to deal with its own waste.

Provisional estimates indicate that the United Kingdom already possesses sufficient destruction capacity to deal with its PCB waste. This and other aspects of the North sea conference declaration will be the subject of a guidance note on implementation, which I propose to publish within the next two months.

56. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the import of hazardous waste from abroad.

Mr. Trippier: The Government are not opposed to imports of hazardous waste to specialised facilities which are available here but not in the country of origin provided that the imports are properly notified and in accordance with all the relevant regulations. The Government are advocating, internationally, that developed countries should aim to be self-sufficient in waste disposal facilities so that transfrontier movements are reduced to a minimum.

104. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his action plan for implementing the agreements reached at the last North sea conference.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I hope to publish a full report, detailing how we intend to implement all of the measures agreed at the third North sea conference, within the next two months.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

47. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action the Government are taking to reduce carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Trippier: Within the Department of the Environment we have announced changes to the building regulations which will result in significant improvements in energy efficiency. The principal sources of emissions of carbon dioxide are from the energy and transport sectors, and measures to reduce these are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Energy and for Transport.

Recycling

53. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he is taking to increase the amount of waste that is recycled.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Environmental Protection Bill contains a range of measures which will help to bring recycling to the forefront of waste disposal strategies in the United Kingdom. These include stricter controls on waste disposal by landfill and other means which will increase their costs and make recycling more attractive, and a requirement for all waste regulation authorities to give priority to recycling in their waste disposal plans wherever it is practicable to do so. Authorities will be permitted to specify recycling as a disposal option when letting contracts for the disposal of their waste even if it may be more expensive than traditional disposal methods. All waste collection authorities will have to draw up recycling plans and they will be permitted to arrange for the recycling of all the waste that they collect unless the disposal authority has an existing recycling contract for it.

A joint DTI and DOE recycling advisory group has been examining, in conjunction with the Government's Warren Spring laboratory, the market barriers that prevent recycling from accounting for a higher proportion of the domestic waste stream. The reports of this group will be used in drawing up proposals for the forthcoming White Paper on the environment.

Following Royal Assent to the Environmental Protection Bill, comprehensive guidance will be given to local authorities and others on the new obligations and powers.

Advice will also be given to the public to explain how they can fulfil the vital role that they will have in co-operation with local authorities to keep the recyclable part of their waste clean and fit for re-use.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will be continuing to hold discussions with manufacturing industry to encourage it to use more recycled waste in its processes and to develop the markets for the increasing quantity of recyclables that will be collected.

World Student Games

59. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has approved any funding towards the cost of the World Student Games in Sheffield.

Mr. Moynihan: The organisers of the World Student Games have made it clear from the outset that theirs was a private sector bid. The Government clearly stated that they would not be providing direct financial support to the games, since all central Government funding for sport is directed to the Sports Council. However, £9·45 million has been provided for games-related projects through urban programme funding, derelict land grant and city grant where normal programme criteria were fully met. In addition, the Sports Council has indicated that, subject to certain conditions, it would be prepared to earmark some £3 million in support of the games. Together these provide a substantial contribution to the games.

Environmental Labelling

63. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce a scheme of official labelling for environmentally friendly products.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 9 January at columns 589-91 the basis on which the Government intend to establish a scheme of eco-labelling, and indicated that an advisory group would be set up to help develop a suitable scheme. We expect to announce the membership of the group very shortly.

Conservation

68. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds to discuss conservation measures.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has not yet had the opportunity for a formal meeting with the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds. There are, however, frequent contacts at official level between my Department and the voluntary conservation bodies, including the RSPB.

Water Pollution

77. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of water pollution incidents in 1988.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The total number of reported water pollution incidents in England and Wales in 1988 was 26,926. This information is published in the annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

80. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to minimise the input of dangerous substances into the North sea.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Important new agreements on the reduction of inputs of dangerous substances into the North sea were reached in early March at the third North sea conference held in The Hague. These include the reduction by 70 per cent., or more if possible, of inputs of several of the most hazardous substances (such as cadmium, mercury, dioxins and lead) by 1995 and the reduction by 50 per cent. or more of air inputs for 17 substances, as well as agreement on a new common list of 36 substances dangerous in the aquatic environment on which reductions are required for all inputs to rivers, estuaries and coastal waters.

These new agreements build on existing reduction timetables set at the second conference hosted by the United Kingdom. Significant progress, as set out in the United Kingdom North sea action plan, has already been made towards reaching the 50 per cent. target for reduction in river inputs by 1995.

I intend to publish a guidance note on implementation of these and other aspects of the third conference declaration within the next two months.

Unleaded Petrol

85. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's campaign to increase the use of unleaded petrol.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The unleaded petrol campaign has been a great success. In the 12 months from January last year the market share of this fuel increased from 2 per cent. to 29 per cent. and is now over 30 per cent. We expect that the increased differential in duty between unleaded and leaded petrol, introduced in the recent Budget announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, will increase the rate of take-up of unleaded petrol.

Fly-tipping

88. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking against fly-tipping.

Mr. Trippier: The new duty of care in the Environmental Protection Bill will place a legal duty on producers and other holders of waste to take measures to prevent illegal disposal and to secure the transfer of waste only to authorised persons. They will also be required to keep records of waste consignments. These measures, in combination with the compulsory register of waste carriers introduced by the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989, will greatly assist the deterrence, detection and prosecution of fly-tippers. In addition, local authorities will be empowered to impound vehicles suspected of fly-tipping until someone comes forward entitled to reclaim them, and the person in a position to control the use of a vehicle will become responsible for fly-tipping offences committed using that vehicle.

Chlorofluorocarbons

95. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the use of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Trippier: The Montreal protocol restricts the supply of chlorofluorocarbons. In the negotiations to revise the protocol the Government are pressing for much tighter restrictions on supply, leading to a phase-out within 10 years.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

99. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about damage done to sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Trippier: I have received a number of representations from a wide range of individuals and interested bodies.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives on the criteria adopted by local authorities in determining whether or not to review planning permission given for operations on, or which would otherwise affect, a site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department's circular 27/87 gives general guidance about development control in relation to nature conservation. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her on 8 March 1990 by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning at column 802.

Right to Buy

101. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has available on the level of delays by local authorities processing right-to-buy applications.

Mr. Chope: Serious delays continue to cause concern in some London boroughs, although the position is generally improving. Tenants are making good use of the procedure introduced last year by which they can require the landlord either to take the next step in the sale or put the rent toward the purchase price. The necessary forms are available from the Department's regional offices.

Common Land

102. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about proposals relating to access to common land.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 27 March at column 116.

European Community Environment Directives

105. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is seeking any changes in the method adopted by the European Commission for investigating complaints about infractions of European Community environment directives.

Mr. Trippier: We have for some time been pressing the Commission to take a more focused and rigorous approach towards ensuring the effective implementation of Community environment legislation in all member states. I am pleased that the Commission is increasing its efforts in this area, and I welcome recent initiatives to improve public awareness of member states' performance in meeting their legal obligations.

Cetaceans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new initiatives he is preparing to investigate the incidence of disease of cetaceans in British coastal waters.

Mr. Trippier: Relatively little is known about the epidemiology of diseases of wild animals. The experience of the 1988 seal virus has reinforced the need for greater study of this area. I am currently considering proposals for projects to study marine mammal strandings, including small cetacean species, in the coastal waters of England and Wales including tissue sampling, post mortem examinations, analysis of contaminants and other tests as required. I have also placed a contract with the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology of the Natural Environment Research Council to review existing knowledge and assess future needs on wildlife disease generally, including marine mammals.

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was borrowed by local authorities, which was (a) sanctioned by Government and (b) not sanctioned by Government (i) overall and (ii) from abroad, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: Total net external borrowing, that is net of repayments, and total net direct borrowing from abroad by local authorities in England was as follows:

	Total net borrowing (£ million)	of which direct from abroad (£ million)
1979-80	2,228	n/a
1980-81	1,741	6
1981-82	−326	7
1982-83	42	15
1983-84	1,018	32
1984-85	2,246	8
1985-86	2,042	71
1986-87	1,703	14
1987-88	2,152	45
1988-89	2,588	19

Local authorities may borrow without the approval of my right hon. Friend in anticipation of revenue and for the purpose of repaying existing loans. They may also borrow for any other purpose or class of purpose approved by my right hon. Friend. In practice, in the years mentioned in the question local authorities operated loans pools which were partly funded by external borrowing and partly from internal sources such as balances and unapplied capital receipts. Expenditure financed from loans pools under borrowing approvals given by my right hon. Friend was as follows:

	Expenditure financed from loans pools (£ million)
1979-80	2,992
1980-81	2,900
1981-82	2,527
1982-83	3,358
1983-84	3,538
1984-85	3,381
1985-86	3,008
1986-87	2,814
1987-88	2,953
1988-89	not yet available

Private Rented Accommodation

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any evidence of a change in the level of private rented accommodation arising from the implementation of the Housing Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: It is too early to assess the overall impact of deregulation on the supply of rented accommodation, but there are clear signs of increased activity in the residential lettings market. In particular, we estimate that about £480 million has so far been invested in business expansion scheme companies letting on assured tenancies, which will provide some 8,000 additional homes for letting.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to promote the provisions of the Housing Act 1988 to potential landlords to encourage private rented accommodation.

Mr. Chope: My Department has published 11 booklets for both landlords and tenants since part I of the Housing Act 1988 came into force on 15 January 1989. Nearly 2 million of these free booklets have been sent out. Our latest booklet, "Want to Rent a Room", was launched this week.

EC Member States (Environment Offences)

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of European Court of Justice cases taken against each member country for environment-related offences since 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The table below gives the number of court cases on environmental directives for each member state since 1985, based on the best information my Department has been able to collect. Figures for 1989 and 1990 are not complete as no annual report on Commission monitoring of the application of Community law has yet been published for these years.

It can be seen from the table that the United Kingdom has an excellent record compared with other member states. Excluding Portugal, where most Community environmental legislation has been applicable only since 1989, only Denmark has been taken to the ECJ fewer times for breaches of environmental directives.

Environmental ECJ cases by country: 1985-90

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	Total

Child Care and Family Services

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanisms his Department has to deal with services and policies on child care and family services.

Mr. Chris Patten: A ministerial group on women's issues was established in 1986 under Home Office chairmanship to co-ordinate policy issues of special concern to women. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), is a member of the group. Issues on which the group has focused in the past 12 months include child care and domestic violence.

As an employer my Department operates a range of policies to support working parents. These include career breaks of up to five years, with an associated keeping in touch scheme and extensive opportunities for part-time working. Paternity leave arrangements will be introduced shortly. The Department has also supported play schemes in central London and the regions and further proposals are under consideration.

Planning Permission

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any power to provide financial assistance to local authorities for purposes connected with revocation or discontinuance of planning permissions.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has no statutory powers specifically to give such assistance.

Development Projects

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether district valuers have any function in evaluating the financial viability of development projects being considered by local planning authorities for planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: District valuers are not formally required to evaluate the financial viability of development projects being considered by local planning authorities for planning permission. There is nothing, however, to prevent local authorities from seeking such advice from district valuers, but it is not a criterion for consideration for planning purposes.

Portable Discounts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends the recently announced portable discount scheme for council tenants to apply to tenants seeking to move to (a) Ireland and (b) other countries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for each local authority proposing a cash incentive scheme to consider what criteria it wishes to apply, and to put its proposals to the Secretary of State for approval. Scheme proposals are considered on their merits.

Marchon Chemical Plant (Fire)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will set up an investigation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution into the fire at the Marchon chemical plant in Whitehaven on Thursday 19 April and publish its findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This matter is primarily one for the Health and Safety Executive. I will not be asking Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to undertake an investigation.

Car Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consultations he has undertaken on the impact on health of increased benzene emissions in car exhausts arising from the duty concessions on lead-free petrol;

(2) whether he will commission a study into the safe concentrations of benzene in the atmosphere consequent upon the policy of increasing the tax advantages of lead-free petrol;

(3) whether he has established what effects the increasing use of lead-free petrol will have on benzene concentrations in the atmosphere.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The Department of the Environment is funding a substantial programme of research into emissions from vehicles using leaded and unleaded petrol, including emissions of benzene. The Government's health advisers will be asked to consider the evidence on exposure to benzene in the atmosphere resulting from this research and advise on its implications for public health. It is not expected that the increased use of lead-free petrol will result in a significant increase in benzene concentrations in the atmosphere.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to assist coastal local authorities with the removal of debris on beaches dumped by ships at sea.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 April 1990]: Material dumped by ships at sea is one source of beach debris, and to prevent or minimise such pollution the United Kingdom Government have implemented all the relevant provisions of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships (MARPOL). This includes strict controls on the discharge of oil and chemicals, garbage and the carriage of packaged dangerous goods. The provision and monitoring of port reception facilities for these wastes is an important requirement of the convention. With regard to garbage, the disposal of any plastic into the sea is prohibited and other forms of garbage may be dumped only under strict conditions. Regulations to this effect were made by the Secretary of State for Transport, which came into force on 31 December 1988.

The responsibility for clean up of the coastline lies principally with local authorities, and while it is for authorities to determine their own priorities, their spending on environment protection generally is taken into account in the Government's support for local authority expenditure.

Dereliction

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of his decisions on local authority expenditure on the speed with which the problem of dereliction faced by the Rotherham, Barnsley and Doncaster authorities will be resolved.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 April 1990]: My right hon. Friend is of the view that, on the basis of all the information available to him, the caps which he proposed for authorities are reasonable and appropriate in all the circumstances of the authorities concerned, and are achieveable without disruption to services.

Excess Nutrients

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to reduce the risk of excess nutrients building up round the coasts.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith).

Peat Alternatives

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice and assistance has been made available to local authorities for the purposes of encouraging the use of peat alternatives in horticulture.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply to this question.

My Ministry has undertaken a considerable amount of work on alternatives to the use of peat in horticulture. The Agricultural Development Advisory Service is currently advising a number of local authorities on the management of amenity plant production, including the development and use of peat substitutes.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 26 April 1990

TRANSPORT

Crash Barriers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy in respect of crash barriers on the central reservations of trunk roads.

Mr. Atkins: It is the Department's policy to provide central reserve safety fencing in England on all motorways and, where justified by the traffic level, on non-motorway dual carriageway trunk roads. The fencing provided is essentially designed to contain an errant vehicle weighing up to 1·5 tonnes travelling at 70 mph and impacting the fence at an angle of up to 20 deg.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state his reasons for not including the text of the letter he sent to the chairman of London Regional Transport in his press notice 132 of 19 April, announcing the fact that he had sent the letter and commenting on its contents.

Mr. Portillo: A desire to save paper. The press notice made it clear that copies of the letter were available on request, and it was reproduced in the Official Report on 19 April 1990 at columns 993-95.

Roads

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he envisages to the planning system to speed up the road projects for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Atkins: We are speeding up road schemes by a range of measures. These include more effective procedures and organisation in the Department, more staff and greater use of the private sector. We do not propose to change statutory procedures at present or to reduce the opportunities of those affected by proposals for a full and fair hearing.

Sub-standard Shipping

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Harborough of 18 April, Official Report, columns 913-14, about sub-standard shipping, whether foreign ships in his reply includes all ships belonging to member nations of the EEC.

Mr. McLoughlin: Yes. Merchant ships belonging to other members of the European Community are regarded as foreign ships and therefore subject to port state control inspection when they enter a United Kingdom port.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Harborough of 18 April about sub-standard shipping, how often in the past 12 months his Department's marine surveyors have used their powers relating to deficiencies on visiting ships (a) to prevent their entry to British ports and (b) to retain vessels; and in how many cases the vessel's owner or master was prosecuted.

Mr. McLoughlin: There has been no case in the last 12 months of Department of Transport marine surveyors using their powers to prevent the entry of visiting ships into United Kingdom ports. During that period, 60 ships were detained and seven prosecutions were initiated.

Travis Brow

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he first requested that Stockport metropolitan borough council convey to his Department the land at Travis Brow, Stockport, near to the M63, referred to in a letter from the Minister for Roads and Traffic to the hon. Member for Stockport dated 22 June 1989; and when he expects the transaction to be completed.

Mr. Atkins: August 1988. Conveyance of the council's title to the land has proved to be a complex matter. While we are pressing to complete as soon as possible, there are a number of outstanding items still to be resolved.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria his Department has laid down in the interest of safety about the number of passengers not segregated from their vehicles who are allowed to travel in a single carriage through the channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 23 April 1990, Official Report, column 43. The number of passengers allowed in a single carriage is a matter for decision when Eurotunnel submits its proposed operating rules for approval.

Light Dues

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a response to the report by the British Ports Federation recommending the charging of light dues on seagoing pleasure craft.

Mr. McLoughlin: Not before I have given careful consideration to the responses from the interested bodies which have been consulted on the federation's report. These bodies have been asked to send their comments to the Department by the end of July.

Radioactive Material (Transport)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) crashes and (b) reported near misses have occurred for each year since 1960 in which aircraft carrying radioactive material have been involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Available information commences in 1964. There have been three crashes involving consignments of radioactive materials from the United Kingdom, none of which was caused by the nature of the radioactive cargo:

(i) In 1965 a Boeing 707 crashed and burned at Heathrow. The package remained intact and there was no release of radioactivity.

(ii) In 1979 an aircraft crashed and burned at Athens airport. There was a partial release of package contents. Radiological implications were minimal and confined to the area around the aircraft.

(iii) In 1987 a Piper Navajo crashed in a field near Teesside after engine failure. There was no reported fire and the packages remained intact.

My Department does not collect data on near misses. I understand from the Civil Aviation Authority that data on near misses do not include detailed information on the type of cargo carried.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how may aeroplane flights occurred in 1989 in United Kingdom airspace in which radioactive material was carried; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not collect data of the kind requested; however, I understand from recent research that there are around 8,000 such flights per year.

Transport Ministers (Meeting)

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of European Transport Ministers in Paris.

Mr. Parkinson: I attended the second meeting of the European civil aviation conference of Transport Ministers which was held in Paris on 24 April.

In response to a United Kingdom initiative, the meeting took a major step towards reducing air traffic congestion and flight delays. Ministers unanimously agreed an action programme to increase capacity in Europe, by integrating air traffic control systems and optimising the air traffic route network.

The programme commits the ECAC states to intensify work on measures to handle safely the forecast growth in traffic to the end of the century. The Civil Aviation Authority already has an investment programme of about £100 million a year. Our European partners are also investing substantial amounts on updating their air traffic control equipment. The ECAC programme will build on and give emphasis to this work.

Ministers agreed to harmonise air traffic control systems in high-density traffic areas by 1995, and elsewhere not later than 1998; optimise air traffic services route network and airspace structure by 1995; achieve comprehensive radar coverage throughout the continental ECAC area by 1995; reduce safe minimum separation distances between aircraft to 5 nautical miles in high-density areas, and to 10 nautical miles elsewhere; complete automatic data links between air traffic control centres and aircraft from 1998 onwards.

The programme will be managed by Eurocontrol, the European air traffic control body centred in Brussels. It will be overseen by a group of senior officials from participating states, reporting to their respective Governments.

At the meeting, Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden indicated that they would apply to join the existing 11 members of Eurocontrol soon. Four more states have also recently been accepted for membership. Ministers reaffirmed that they hoped the remaining ECAC states would join Eurocontrol.

Ministers agreed that they would meet again in the second half of 1991 to review progress.

This is an important and historic agreement which should greatly contribute to the welfare of European civil aviation in the years ahead.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Child Care and Family Services

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what mechanisms his Department has on services and policies on child care and family services.

Mrs. Rumbold: National responsibility for policies in these areas rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Obtaining suitable premises is a major difficulty for those organising child care schemes and this is where the education service can offer substantial help, through making available school premises for this purpose out of normal school hours. As part of an initiative to enhance child care provision launched last year by the ministerial group on women's issues, of which I am deputy chairman, the Department issued a letter last October to all local education authorities and the chairmen of governors of all maintained schools, asking them to respond sympathetically to requests for such use of their school premises. It is, of course, for individual schools to decide on whether to help, but there are encouraging first signs of a positive response to our approach.

Within the Department, consideration is being given to the provision of creche facilities and a holiday play scheme at the Darlington office. In London the Department is participating in an interdepartmental study of the scope for providing creches centrally and in commuting areas.

Calderdale

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding expenditure on education in Calderdale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations specifically about education expenditure in Calderdale.

Corby CTC

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science who appoints the trustees of the Corby city technology college trust; if he will list the names and designations of trustees, the total amount of private sector funds received by the trust to date, the names of persons or companies who, to date, have contributed and the amount each has contributed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The members of the Corby City Technology Trust are appointed by the principal sponsor or the Secretary of State for Education and Science. The initial members are the lead sponsor Mr. Hugh de Capell Brooke who is the chairman. Other members are Mr. John Nelson-Jones, Sir Cyril Taylor and Sir Monty Finniston. A total of £1·6 million of private sector sponsorship has been received to date; £1·1 million of this is in the form of a donation of land from the lead sponsor. The balance comes from other private sector sponsors who will decide when to make their involvement public.

Environmental Protection Education

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment has been made of the environmental protection education needs at colleges and universities in the 1990s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This is a matter for individual institutions.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his proposals for new permanent teachers' pay negotiating machinery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I am writing today to the local authority employers and the teacher unions setting out my proposals for new permanent machinery, as follows:

Text of letter of 26 April from Secretary of State for Education and Science to the local authority employers and the teacher unions

New teachers' pay determination arrangements

1. Following the useful series of meetings I had with the teacher unions and employers before Christmas I have been reflecting on the best way forward. My immediate priority has been to complete consideration of the IAC's recommendations for the 1990-91 settlement, but now that that is nearly out of the way I can bring forward my proposals for permanent new pay determination arrangements.

2. In formulating the proposals set out in this letter and its attachment I have sought to reflect as far as possible those areas where there was broad consensus. If parties to these consultations share the objective that the new machinery should be introduced on the basis of the maximum possible amount of agreement, we shall need over the next month or so to move forward together constructively.

3. The best way ahead appears to lie with the restoration of negotiations between teachers and their employers in a way which gives sufficient scope to negotiate realistically from one year to the next, while at the same time providing essential safeguards in the public interest against the kind of stalemate and long term disruption which characterised the Burnham arrangements, and on overall cost. Enclosed with this letter is a note setting out my proposals in detail. Their main features are:

(a) direct national negotiations between local authority employers and teacher unions, with no Government presence at the negotiating table;
(b) separate sub-committee for heads and deputies;
(c) a firm deadline for the completion of negotiations;
(d) reserve powers for the Government to refer back to the negotiating body with its reasons aspects of agreed settlements with which it is unhappy and in the last resort, if reference back does not produce an acceptable outcome, to impose its own views; but
(e) an undertaking that the Government will not normally override on cost grounds a settlement falling within the inter-quartile range of non-manual private sector settlements;
(f) if the deadline is passed without a negotiated settlement being achieved, consideration of that year's settlement to be taken out of the hands of negotiators and referred to an IAC type body for advice;
(g) provision for individual LEAs or the governing bodies of GM schools to apply to me to withdraw from the national arrangements and determine the pay and conditions of their teachers locally.

4. While my preference would be for a restitution of national negotiations between teachers and their employers, and I would expect discussions to concentrate on how best to achieve this, I would not want to rule out at this stage further consideration of the alternative possibility of an independent advisory body broadly similar to the present IAC but on a permanent basis, should any of the parties want to propose that.

5. My main concern at this stage is to develop in consultation with the local authority employers and the teacher unions a permanent mechanism for determining pay nationally. At some point in our discussions, however, we will have to consider how best to handle the 1991-92 pay settlement. The three broad options appear to be to deal with it in the new machinery, retrospectively if necessary, once that has been put in place; to run the new machinery on a voluntary, shadow basis in anticipation of the passage of any necessary legislation; or to ask the IAC to make recommendations. The first of these would bring on the new machinery at the earliest possible date, but probably at the price of significant delay to the 1991-92 settlement. The second would only be possible if all the parties involved were willing to participate. The third would ensure a timely settlement, but delay for another year the operation of the new permanent machinery.

6. Accordingly I should like to arrange an early meeting with your association. My Private Office will be in touch about a date. In the meantime my officials stand ready to explore any of these issues with you in further detail if that would be helpful. If we are to be ready to legislate at the start of the next session of Parliament, we need to finalise our proposals well before the summer break. I must therefore ask that your association complete its representations by Friday 15 June.

7. I am writing in similar terms to the General Secretaries of the other teacher associations and to the Chairman of NEOST.

Proposals for new teachers' pay negotiating machinery

Scope

1. All pay and conditions matters to be within scope. But only proposals for changes to the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document (ie to pay, duties and working time) to require the Secretary of State's endorsement and acquire statutory force.

Structure

2. Main negotiating body to comprise representatives of the local authority employers and of the teacher unions, together with observers from the voluntary sector and grant maintained schools.

3. Separate sub-committee for heads and deputies, with rights as set out in paragraph 9 below.

Teachers' Side Composition

4. In the light of views expressed in earlier discussions this might be determined as follows:

(a) rules about how representation is to be determined to be laid down in regulations;
(b) the rules to cover
  (i) voting strength: to be determined for each union in proportion to the number of its members paid according to scales determined as a result of negotiations in the particular committee or sub-committee, and to be reviewed at least every 3 years and more frequently at the Secretary of State's discretion;
  (ii) numbers of representatives per union, with a limit on total numbers attending. In view of (i), the number of representatives need not vary with the size of the union. Should the rule be no more than two, or perhaps three, representatives per union, in order to keep meetings to a manageable size?
  (iii) returns of union membership: a requirement for unions to make returns annually to the Certification Officer identifying separately the number of members within their total membership figures whose pay and conditions are determined by each separate element of the new machinery, with a provision for the returns to be subject to audit;

(iv) threshold for representation: what union membership threshold should be set before an association justified membership of the teachers' side, and should provision be made to accommodate small associations representing distinctive groups of teachers?

Management side composition

5. To be determined by the employers, within a limit that total numbers attending should not exceed the limit for the teachers' side. Observer status to be given in addition to two representatives of the voluntary sector, one each appointed by the Catholic Education Council and the General Synod of the Church of England Board of Education, and to a representative of the grant maintained schools appointed by the Secretary of State.

Proceedings

6. The Burnham "one voice" convention (whereby only single union and management positions were put forward and differences of view within each side were not aired publicly) should not operate.

7. Each side to appoint its own chairman in each committee. Chairmanship of committees for discussion: is there advantage in an independent chairman?

8. Decisions in the negotiating body will be reached when the two sides are in agreement with each other. It is for consideration whether a simple majority of the votes within each side should suffice for the establishment of that side's position or whether some other majority should be required eg two thirds.

9. Agreements reached in the heads and deputies sub-committee to take the form of recommendations to the main committee. The main committee not to be able to reject such recommendations without first referring them back to the sub-committee.

10. Agreements reached in main negotiating body for changes to the Document to take the form of recommendations to the Secretary of State for statutory implementation.

11. Secretary of State to establish a firm deadline—probably the end of January for an April settlement—for completion of negotiations on changes to the Document, with automatic reference to second stage body if negotiations not completed in time. But the Secretary of State has an open mind on a switch to a September settlement date if that seemed advantageous.

Government Reserve Powers

12. Secretary of State to have the power to refer back to the negotiating body with reasons recommendations made by them for changes to the Document, for further consideration within a defined timescale.

13. If the Secretary of State remains dissatisfied with the recommendations following a reference back he should have the power to override the negotiating body's recommendations, subject to the agreement of Parliament under the negative resolution procedure.

14. The Secretary of State will not set a constraint on the cost of the negotiating body's recommendations at the outset of its work, but the employers will negotiate against the background of the assumptions about standard spending in the Government's proposals for the local authority grant settlement. The Secretary of State would not normally refer back or override on cost grounds pay recommendations falling within the inter-quartile range of non-manual private sector settlements.

Second Stage Body

15. If the deadline for negotations passes without agreement being reached consideration of a settlement shall be referred by the Secretary of State for advice to a body similar to the present IAC, appointed by him and with terms of reference set by him which would not go outside the inter-quartile range. Thus the advisory body would make recommendations to the Secretary of State and he would determine pay in the light of their recommendations. (Statutory provision for this could be based on sections 2 and 3 of, and Schedule 1 to the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987).

Local Pay Determination

16. The Act establishing new national pay determination arrangements should contain provision for individual local authorities or the governing bodies of GM schools which wish to do so to determine teachers' pay and conditions locally. This is in order to provide maximum flexibility to respond to local needs and circumstances.

17. The Act would provide for local education authorities and GM school governing bodies to apply to the Secretary of State for the provisions of the Act obliging them to pay teachers only in accordance with the scales and other provisions resulting from the national pay determination process, and giving statutory force to national conditions of employment, to be disapplied from them. Applicants would be required to state what provisions they proposed to put in place of the national arrangements.

18. The relevant provisions of the Act would apply to teachers in all LEA maintained schools and GM schools unless specifically disapplied by the Secretary of State.

19. Before making an application local education authorities would be obliged to consult on their proposals for local pay and conditions provisions with the governing bodies of their maintained schools, and with the local representatives of teacher unions recognised nationally for pay determination purposes. The governing body of a GM school would be obliged to consult with the staff of the school. In each case applicants would be required to report the views expressed, together with their comments on those views, to the Secretary of State when making the application.

20. If the Secretary of State approved an employer's application, the national arrangements would cease to apply from the date the employer put the arrangements described in the application, subject to any variation agreed by the Secretary of State, into place. The local pay and conditions provisions put into place by a LEA would apply to all the schools it maintained.

21. Once the relevant provisions of the Act had been disapplied from a local authority or a governing body their future approach to pay and conditions matters would be unconstrained except that

(a) any change in their initial local provisions within 12 months of the date of their implementation would require the Secretary of State's consent; and

(b) local education authorities would be placed under a general obligation to consult with the governing bodies of their maintained schools and with the teachers concerned before implementing proposals for changes in local pay and conditions provisions.

City Technology College, Brighton

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on progress towards the establishment of a city technology college at Woodingdean, Brighton.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 24 April 1990, c. 146]: I have been reviewing the progress of the proposal by the Michael Faraday Trust to establish a city technology college in Brighton. My period of review ended on 23 April and I have decided that I must withdraw my financial support because of the trust's failure to raise adequate private sector sponsorship. I have so informed the chairman of the Michael Faraday Trust.

Education Costs

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the average cost, per student across all subjects, of education (a) in United Kingdom universities as a whole, (b) in United Kingdom polytechnics as a whole, (c) in Scottish universities, (d) in English universities, (e) in Welsh universities, (f) in English polytechnics and (g) in the Polytechnic of Wales.

Mr. Jackson [pursuant to his reply, 24 April 1990, c. 145]: It is not possible to determine the teaching cost per student in universities. The available information, published in the universities' statistical record—for example, "University Statistics, Volume 3" for the academic year 1987-88—relates to aggregate income and expenditure without differentiation between teaching and research. Recurrent expenditure, excluding specific expenditure, by universities on teaching and research per full-time equivalent United Kingdom university student was £6,385 in the academic year 1987-88.

The lower research load of polytechnics means that their unit cost is a closer reflection of the unit cost of teaching. For the financial year 1987-88, this was £3,356 for English polytechnics, calculated by reference to net recurrent institutional expenditure per full-time equivalent student.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Planning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether his Department's current industrial sector studies into the capacities of and demands on British industry in crisis and war have been or will be discussed by NATO's industrial planning committee or its sub-committees or working groups; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the industries which have supplied or will supply members to the sectoral groups currently involved in studying the capabilities of and demands on British industry in crisis and war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department is consulting as necessary representatives of sectors of UK industry relevant to its study of the possible role of UK industry in crisis and war. NATO's industrial planning committee has been kept informed about this work.

South Africa (Steel Imports)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by year and for the last 10 years, and by port, the amount in tonnes of steel imported from South Africa.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not available.

European Regional Policy

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how big the regional fund would need to be if the European Community had a regional policy for the whole of the European Community on the same cost per head as the payments to Northern Ireland within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1990 European regional development fund commitments to Northern Ireland are expected to be around 70 mecu (approximately £50 million), or about 45 ecu (£32) per head. If all regions of the European Community eligible for the fund had commitments per head at this level, total commitments in 1990 would be about 6,300 mecu. If the whole of the Community had commitments per head at this level, total commitments would be about 14,500 mecu. The 1990 budget commitments appropriation for the fund is 5,408 mecu.

Libya

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the British companies currently working within Libya;

(2) what are the main activities of the British contractors and companies working in Libya;

(3) how many British companies are currently working on projects within the People's Republic of Libya.

Mr. Redwood: We have no record of the number of British firms working in Libya, but we understand that their main areas of activity include oil and gas, consultancy and services, and construction.

Krytrons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which companies import krytrons into the United Kingdom from the United States of America.

Mr. Redwood: There is no requirement for a licence to import krytrons, and my Department has no record of which companies do so.

Oil Recovery

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he takes to promote the recovery of used oil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A workshop on used oil recovery was held by my Department in September 1988 at which representatives from the motor and oil industries and central and local government agreed to work more closely in publicising schemes for recovering and correctly disposing of oil. Since then the number of local authorities and garage chains providing facilities for recovering used oil have increased. We will keep progress under careful review as part of our overall drive to raise the levels of recycling generally.

English Estates

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future role of English Estates.

Mr. Ridley: In autumn 1989, the Department and the board of English Estates jointly commissioned consultants to advise on certain aspects of the corporation's activities. I have considered the consultants' report with the board and have now determined the future strategy for the corporation.

The Government policy is to ensure that suitable premises and sites are available to meet the needs of new and growing businesses in the assisted areas. Wherever possible this should be done through private sector provision. English Estates will continue to make an important contribution to regional policy, but I now want it to move away from direct provision wherever possible, and in many areas to operate primarily as a facilitator, using a range of mechanisms to draw in private sector developers.

I am introducing two changes which will further our policy of encouraging the private sector to play a greater part in the provision and management of industrial and commercial property in the assisted areas.

First, I propose to introduce a new grant scheme which will be operated by English Estates mainly through a negative tendering procedure. I shall be discussing details with the European Commission. This will be a new, powerful weapon in English Estates' armoury of incentives to draw in the private sector. The corporation will also continue to use the weapons already available: provision of serviced sites in areas where there are difficulties of land assembly and servicing; provision of market information to demonstrate the opportunities available in the assisted areas; and short-term rental guarantees and joint ventures with the private sector.

There will be some areas where these incentives will still not be sufficient to attract private sector interest. In these cases English Estates will have a residual direct development role. But I hope that with the availability of grant and other incentives the areas of English Estates' direct development will continue to narrow over time, as market conditions allow, in line with the policy set out in 1988.

I have asked English Estates to use the incentives energetically to promote the recent signs of growing private sector interest, in line with Government's aim that in time the normal working of the property market should of itself ensure an adequate supply of industrial and commercial floorspace in all parts of the assisted areas.

I have asked English Estates to aim for an assisted areas programme of up to £52·8 million in the financial year 1990-91, including provision for the Sunderland special programme. In addition, it will have a programme of up to £10·1 million for the provision of managed work space in inner-city areas of England.

Second, English Estates' role as a landlord is peripheral to its main regional policy role. I want to release the capital tied up in the DTI-funded portfolio. The private sector is ready to buy and manage property in these areas. I have, therefore, asked the corporation to plan to sell its DTI-funded assets in the assisted areas. I consider that the broad objectives of maximising the return to the taxpayer from sales and encouraging the involvement of a wider spread of private sector interests, can best be met through a phased sale, with the intention that this should be spread over a period of around three years and with the rate of disposal adjusted to market conditions. Wherever in English Estates' commercial judgment it is practical to do so, in line with these objectives, existing tenants will be given the opportunity to acquire their premises in advance of sales to investors.

I do not propose any change in the role of English Estates in the redevelopment of the former naval dockyard at Chatham.

English Estates' activities on behalf of the Rural Development Commission are being considered separately.

RENAVAL

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he expects the allocation of grants available to Tyne and Wear under the European Economic Community RENAVAL programme to be fully utilised;

(2) if he will list the local authorities and other public bodies involved in submitting applications for assistance under the European Economic Community's RENAVAL programme in Tyne and Wear;

(3) if he will list the numbers of applications that have been made for assistance under the European Economic Community's RENAVAL programme in Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 April 1990]: In consultation with Sunderland metropolitan borough council, North Tyneside metropolitan borough council, South Tyneside metropolitan borough council, Gateshead metropolitan borough council and Newcastle metropolitan borough council, and the Wearside opportunity (TWO), my Department is preparing a programme of measures for which the European Commission's approval will be sought. Specific applications for grant can be made only when the programme is approved and in operation. I hope this will be before the end of 1990. Since the programme will last four years, I expect the grants to be fully utilised in 1994.

ENERGY

Offshore Oil Spills

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report for each year since 1975 a list of all those offshore oil spill incidents that have occurred around the British coast, identifying the operator responsible, the date of the incident, and the sum of money paid for remedial measures under the offshore pollution liability agreement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since 1976 a total of 1,442 oil spills from offshore installations have been reported to my Department. The details are:

	Total number of spills	Number of spills in excess of 25 tonnes
1976	9	—
1977	14	2
1978	27	—
1979	27	—
1980	86	1
1981	71	—
1982	42	2
1985	87	4
1986	166	7
1987	254	3
1989	291	2

This information is compiled from details of oil spill incidents reported by operators as a requirement of their production licences which is summarised in the Department's reports on the development of oil and gas resources of the United Kingdom 1977-89. The information given for 1989 will be included in the report for 1990. Information for 1975 is not readily available.

More specific information can be provided only under the terms of the various licences with the consent of the licensees and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Operators who are party to the offshore pollution liability agreement accept claims on a strict liability basis.

Claims for payment for remedial measures following oil spills from offshore installations have been settled directly by the operators concerned. I have no information on the amounts involved.

The rise in the number of reported spills between 1985 and 1986 can be attributed to increased pressure on operators to report even the smallest spills. Also, in 1986, random aerial surveillance flights over offshore installations commenced.

Although the number of reported incidents increased, the number of spills greater than 25 tonnes have remained low.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will seek powers to require electricity companies to publish cash flow statements as part of their annual corporate reports.

Mr. Baldry: Electricity companies will be required to publish statements of source and application funds under statement of standard accounting practice 10.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information the electricity privatisation prospectus will contain about whether investors will be entitled to receive a set of accounts automatically.

Mr. Baldry: Under section 238 of the Companies Act 1985 all public limited companies must provide members with a set of accounts. The prospectuses of the electricity industry companies therefore will not need to refer to this matter.

Appliance Labelling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to require clear labelling of appliances to show energy consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Nearly all manufacturers in western Europe already provide energy consumption information in their brochures and in the users' instructions for new appliances. We are considering the report of the study of the energy efficiency of appliances which we have recently received and will be considering the way ahead in the light of its findings.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was his Department's expenditure on nuclear energy programmes in 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, broken down into fast reactor, fusion, thermal reactor and other; if he will list the categories included in other; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the increase in this expenditure.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department's expenditure on nuclear energy programmes was as follows:

	1987-88[1]	1988-89[1]	1989-90[2]
Fast Reactor[3]	82·33	104·21	98·58
Fusion[3]	21·89	26·21	26·60
Thermal Reactor	20·05	19·53	17·27
Other	49·02	117·95	73·27
Total	173·29	267·89	215·72

Note: £ million in money of the year.

[1] These figures are a breakdown of the Appropriation Accounts.

[2] These figures appear in the Supply Estimates.

[3] These include restructuring costs where appropriate.

All figures include contribution to the UKAEA's Underlying Research Programme where appropriate.

The nuclear programmes included under "Other" in the table are general nuclear safety research (GNSR), radiological protection research (RPR), decommissioning and radioactive waste management studies (DRAWMS), nuclear materials management (NMM), safeguards, decommissioning and radioactive waste management operations (DRAWMOPS), the UKAEA's contribution to NIREX, Winfrith steam generating heavy water reactor (SGHWR), public information and advisory services.

The increase in total expenditure in 1988-89 was a result of the following: payment to clear outstanding liabilities of the UKAEA to BNFL for waste management and decommissioning costs, in respect of work and waste arising before 1971; restructuring costs due to the rundown of the fast reactor programme; and a one-off payment of £17 million because of a change in the timing of payment to the UKAEA.

Compared with 1987-88, the fast reactor figures for 1989-90 are higher due to restructuring costs (£25·2 million) and the "Other" figures mainly due to DRAWMOPS.

Electricity Tariff Policy

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether a uniform tariff policy will be maintained after electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: Tariffs are a matter for the industry subject to its statutory and other obligations. However, I refer the hon. Member to the statement given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office on 26 January 1989 during the Committe stage of the Electricity Bill that the area board chairmen in England and Wales, and the chairman of the South of Scotland electricity board have given an assurance that they expect to maintain common tariffs for domestic consumers for five years from privatisation.

Electricity Distribution Companies

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the prospectus for the sale of electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Wakeham: The prospectus for the sale of the electricity distribution companies will be published on impact day. It is too early to say when this will be.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to float the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Wakeham: Subject to the market conditions at the time, it is planned to float the electricity distribution companies in November 1990.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his current estimate of the value of the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Wakeham: The market value of the electricity distribution companies will depend on a wide range of factors including the profitability of the companies, their capital structures, their future prospects and the state of the market. It is, therefore, too early to estimate the likely proceeds for the sale of the companies.

Sizewell B

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of the cost of Sizewell B and the likely dates of completion and fuel loading.

Mr. Wakeham: The latest estimate of the capital cost of Sizewell B is £1·87 billion at 1987 prices, derived from evidence given by the CEGB to the Hinkley Point C inquiry in September 1989. This represented an increase of about 10 per cent. over the previous estimate of £1·69 billion as sanctioned by the CEGB in April 1987, which was consistent in 1982 prices in real terms with the estimate of £1·17 billion given to the Sizewell inquiry.

The timetable for the completion of the station is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc. The CEGB indicated in its last report and accounts that it aimed to achieve full commercial load in May 1994, six months after the start of fuel loading.

Offshore Licensing Round

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals for a further round of offshore licensing for the established petroleum areas of the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I am today making available a list of the blocks which will be available for licensing in the 12th offshore round.

I am making the list available at this stage to give applicant companies an opportunity to carry out preliminary seismic work, which will assist them in choosing the blocks to apply for, during the limited fair weather season in our offshore waters.

There will be 120 blocks and groups of blocks on offer distributed across the most prospective areas of the United Kingdom continental shelf. The number of blocks (including grouped and part blocks) in each area is as follows:

	Number of Blocks
Northern North Sea	17
Central North Sea	34
Southern North Sea	41
Moray Firth	21
East Shetland Platform	1
Irish Sea/Manx Basin	3
English Channel	2
Caernarvon Basin	1

I shall place in the Libraries of both Houses a full list of the blocks which are available for licensing in the round.

The exploration which will follow from a round containing this number and range of blocks will help to ensure that the UKCS remains a major oil province well into the next century, and that the nation will continue to benefit from the efficient and safe exploitation of a valuable national resource.

As in previous rounds, it will be necessary in the case of many blocks to specify additional conditions which the operator will be required to observe when undertaking activity under the licence. These will be designed to take into account the concerns of defence, fishing, environmental, navigational and other interests.

As soon as possible after the necessary statutory instrument is in place, I will publish in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes a formal announcement giving the detailed financial terms for 12th round licences and the basis on which awards will be made. The model clauses incorporated in the 12th round licences will generally be the same as those incorporated into existing licences issued as a result of the 11th offshore round. Additional licence conditions, the format of licence applications, and the information required, will be available from my Department as soon as the Gazette notice has been published.

Applications will be returnable by a date in December 1990 which has yet to be determined.

NORTHERN IRELAND

International Fund for Ireland

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the expenditure and receipts of the International Fund for Ireland are subject to examination by (a) the local government auditor and (b) the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

Mr. Cope: The responsibility for auditing the accounts of the international fund lies with the independent auditors appointed by the board as provided for under article 11 of the agreement establishing the fund. A number of the fund's main programmes of work are administered on behalf of the fund by Government Departments and agencies. In such cases where a Government Department or agency makes payments on behalf of the fund such payments are subject to scrutiny by the Comptroller and Auditor-General in the normal way.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he proposes to take to ensure that the religious composition of the work force in firms and other organisations grant-aided by the International Fund for Ireland in the border counties is a fair reflection of the composition in the local travel-to-work area.

Mr. Cope: The Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989 places the primary responsibility for ensuring fair participation by members of both communities in a work force on the employer concerned. This duty is, however, backed up by strong enforcement measures which can be taken by the Fair Employment Commission as necessary. Additionally, I understand that each recipient of assistance from the International Fund for Ireland is required to confirm acceptance of the principle of equality of opportunity and non-discrimination in employment.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make representations to the board of the International Fund for Ireland to call for it to require recipients of its funds to carry out the Government's recommendations on fair employment.

Mr. Cope: The conditions attaching to the receipt of assistance from the International Fund for Ireland are a matter for the independent board appointed to administer the fund. I understand, however, that each offer of assistance from the fund requires the recipient to confirm acceptance of the principle of equality of opportunity and non-discrimination in employment. In addition, of course, each recipient is subject to the statutory obligations placed upon employers by the Fair Employment (NI) Acts.

PRIME MINISTER

Ivory

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will publish the reply she gave to the letter from George Medley, director of the United Kingdom World Wide Fund for Nature, of 18 January regarding Hong Kong's exemption from the ivory trade ban.

The Prime Minister: It is not my normal practice to do so.

India

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what was discussed during her meeting with President Venkataraman of India in April in London.

The Prime Minister: President Venkataraman and I had wide-ranging discussions about events in India and around the world, and about the close relationship between India and Britain.

United Nations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what matters she or her officials raised with Secretary-General de Cuellar of the United Nations, or his accompanying officials, during Senor de Cuellar's visit to London on 10 April.

The Prime Minister: I thanked Senor Perez de Cuellar for the United Nations' part in holding the highly satisfactory world ministerial conference on drugs. We reviewed a wide range of regional issues in which Britain plays a constructive role as a permanent member of the Security Council.

Iraq

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply to the hon. Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby), Official Report, 29 March, column 667, if she will state how many (a) signatory states to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and (b) member states of the missile technology control regime, Her Majesty's Government have contacted over Iraq; and what responses have been received from each state, respectively.

The Prime Minister: The Government have contacted the group of western states that are parties to the NPT and the other depositary powers of the treaty. The Government have had separate discussions with our European Community partners, and we have contacted all partners of the missile technology control regime. Without exception, our partners share our concern to ensure that barriers against proliferation are strengthened, and that export controls are adequate.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Q133. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister what co-ordination there is between officials at 10 Downing street, Her Majesty's Treasury and the Bank of England for the starting date of United Kingdom entry into the European exchange rate mechanism.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 3 April at column 1029.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will reconsider the conditions for entry to the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system set out at the Madrid summit in July 1989 with a view to adding the successful union of the deutschmark and the ostmark as a necessary precondition for British entry.

The Prime Minister: The Government stand by the Madrid conditions. When those conditions are fulfilled, we shall join the exchange rate mechanism.

Engagements

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 April.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 April.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 April.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall have further meetings later today.

WALES

NHS (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many senior staff in each of the district health authorities in Wales have received performance-related pay bonuses during the past 12 months, on top of their salaries; and what was the total payment made in Wales last year by way of such bonuses.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 5 April 1990.

Planning Permission

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the past three years those sites where he has provided financial assistance to local authorities for purposes connected with the revocation or discontinuance of planning permission.

Mr. Grist: No financial assistance has been made available to Welsh local authorities during the past three years in connection with the revocation or modification of planning permission or with orders requiring the discontinuance of use or alteration or removal of buildings or works.

Single-sex Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in respect of each of those local education authority maintained single-sex secondary schools in Wales which have been closed since 1985, he will list (i) the maintaining local authority, (ii) the gender of pupils, (iii) the physical capacity and (iv) the number of pupils on roll at the most recent convenient date before closure.

Mr. Roberts: There have been no closures since 1985 of local education authority maintained single-sex secondary schools in Wales.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provisions exist to enable the periodic review of planning permission for mineral extraction or otherwise granted on an area prior to such an area being notified as a site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Grist: Mineral planning authorities have a general duty to undertake at such intervals as they consider fit reviews of mineral working sites in their area and to consider whether it is necessary to revoke or modify planning permissions, or to make discontinuance, prohibition or supervision orders.

Disability

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many households in Wales were beneficiaries in reduced rates under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally.

Voluntary Fund-raising

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what steps he has taken to seek the views of community health councils in Wales on the place of voluntary fund-raising in the financial structure of the National Health Service in their areas; and what views have been expressed to him;

(2) what research he has commissioned on the views of (a) patients and (b) carers and families of patients on the degree to which the National Health Service in each health authority district in Wales should be financed by voluntary and charitable donations.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 23 April 1990.

Office Furniture (Expenditure)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the total expenditure on (a) office chairs and (b) other office furniture in his Department in each of the four quarters of the financial year 1989-90;

(2) what was the total expenditure on office furniture in his Department in the fiscal years (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87, (c) 1987-88, (d) 1988-89 and (e) 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: The expenditure figures are given in the following tables. Much of the furniture in the Department's 56 offices has aged and merits replacement in the interests of staff well-being and health and safety considerations. A decision was therefore taken in 1987 to increase the annual furniture budget in 1988-89 and subsequent years in order to undertake a furniture modernisation and replacement programme. The 1989-90 figure was further increased by the need to furnish a new office at Llanishen for the Welsh Office education department and HMI, for which the cost of the necessary office furniture was £132,000.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has appointed the members of the advisory committee for Wales on National Rivers Authority matters.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made the following appointments:

Professor Ron Edwards (Chairman)
Professor Michael Bruton
The Lord Moran KCMG
Dr. Hugh Tebbutt
Councillor John Thompson JP
Dr. Stephanie Tyler
Mr. Murray McLaggan JP
Mr. Bryan Riddleston

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Poland

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has so far been given to Poland; what form it took; and what plans exist for it to be increased.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1989-90, bilateral aid for Poland was £64 million. This consisted of the United Kingdom contribution of $100 million (£61·7 million) to the international stabilisation fund for Poland; and disbursements of £2·3 million from the know-how fund. Expenditure under the balance of the £50 million know-how fund, and the separate £15 million agricultural project will be spread over a number of years.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken to encourage British industry to invest in Poland.

Mrs. Chalker: Under the know-how fund for Poland, support is available for up to 50 per cent. of the costs of feasibility studies which British companies may need to undertake before investing in eastern Europe. Specific training can also be provided for potential local joint venture partners. Additionally, an investment protection and promotion agreement exists for Poland, and the full range of ECGD's investment insurance cover is available to equity investors. The Department of Trade and Industry provides British companies with information and advice on the latest legislation and other matters relating to joint ventures.

Mozambique

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government will respond to Mozambique's 1990 emergency appeal.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government will pledge 10,000 tonnes of food aid and £3·5 million in emergency relief for Mozambique at the international donors conference on emergency assistance to Mozambique which is being held in New York today.

Romania

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the £500,000 of aid for Romania, announced on 5 April, is to be paid from the overseas aid programme; whether it is to be administered by the Overseas Development Administration or the joint Overseas Development Administration-Foreign and Commonwealth Office east European unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Our contribution to the World Health Organisation's programme of assistance for the Romanian health service is an exceptional one-off payment from the know-how fund for eastern Europe, in response to Romania's particularly acute humanitarian needs. Expenditure from the fund is met from a separate section of the aid vote, but is additional to and separate from the agreed PES provision for overseas aid to developing countries. The contribution is being administered by the eastern European department of the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply of 26 March, if he will set out the policy considerations involved in his decision not to make retrospective ex-gratia payments to those pensioners with savings up to £16,000.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The changes in the capital rules for the income-related benefits formed part of a package of measures, designed to help savers, which were announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement. The changes took effect from the benefit uprating dates in April. It is well-established policy that such changes are not applied retrospectively, with the recalculation of benefit entitlement this would require, and to do so in this case would be neither appropriate nor practical.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether employment training trainees who were formerly in receipt of income support can apply for a loan or a grant from the social fund; what account is taken of the £10 training premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: A claimant receiving income support when starting employment training would normally continue to do so, and would be eligible for help from the social fund in the normal way. When a crisis loan is being considered, all resources available to the claimant are taken into account.

Pension Age

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to integrate the pension age for men and women.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the right hon. Member to paragraph 18 of the Government's response to the 10th report from the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities, Session 1988-89, on equal treatment for men and women in pensions and other benefits—Cmnd. 1038.

Disabled People (Benefits)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has received to "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" from Age Concern England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Age Concern England has sent me a written response and was represented at a meeting I held on 5 April with the Disability Benefits Consortium to discuss "The Way Ahead". We shall give careful consideration to all their comments in carrying forward the detailed work on our proposals.

Pensions

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the state retirement pension for a single pensioner and a pensioner couple in each year from 1987 to 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is set out in the table.

Standard Rate basic Retirement Pension—1987-89

	Man or Woman[1]	Man plus Wife[2]
1987	38·70	61·95
1987 (wef 6 April 1987)	39·50	63·25

Councillors (Benefit Claims)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has given to local offices of his Department concerning the payment of invalidity benefit to claimants who are local authority councillors and who may be in receipt of councillors' allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since 11 May 1987, local authority councillors have been able to receive invalidity benefit in full where their entitlement to local government attendance allowance does not exceed the therapeutic earnings limit (currently £35 a week) for invalidity benefit; and, where the limit is exceeded, invalidity benefit is abated only by the amount of the excess. These arrangements, which were introduced in 1987 on an ex-gratia basis, were formalised in schedule 8 to the Social Security Act 1989. Instructions were issued to offices putting these arrangements into effect.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what income it is assumed that a person will draw from savings of (a) £6,000, (b) £10,000, (c) £13,000 and (d) £16,000 when determining eligibility for reduced levels of community charge; and what marginal rate of return is assumed for each £1,000 savings over £3,000.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is shown in the table.

Tariff income assumed at various levels of capital

Capital	Tariff income (£ per week)
6,000	12
10,000	28
13,000	40
16,000	52

No tariff income from the first £3,000 of savings is assumed when assessing income-related benefits: the actual income received from the savings is disregarded.

When account is taken of the first £3,000 of savings, and of the application of the 15 per cent. benefit taper, the annual average interest rate implied by the tariff income rules varies from 0·2 per cent. (on capital of £3,250) to 2·6 per cent. (on capital of £15,750·01).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to prevent material in police archives relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case from being destroyed or tampered with.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the West Midlands police and the Devon and Cornwall constabulary have made arrangements to ensure that all material in their possession relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case is stored in secure conditions pending the outcome of further inquiries into the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six.

Probation Service

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has held on changes in the probation service.

Mr. John Patten: In February we published the White Paper, "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" (Cm. 965), which set out our proposals for change in the way the courts in England and Wales deal with offenders. Since then, we have published two consultative documents about changes to the probation service, both related to the White Paper.

The Green Paper "Supervision and Punishment in the Community" (Cm. 966) sets out options for reorganising the probation service, to enable it to meet the demands of the White Paper. We have invited comments on the Green Paper by the end of June. We published a further consultative paper on 17 April, "Partnership in Dealing with Offenders in the Community". This sets out various ways in which voluntary organisations and profit-making bodies could collaborate more closely with the probation service in work with offenders in the community. Comments have been invited by the end of September.

Draft national standards for the supervision of offenders before and after release from custody were published today. Again, comments have been invited by the end of September.

Drugs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers, the National Drugs Investigation Unit and the Metropolitan police to discuss police investigation methods into the drug crack.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet representatives from these organisations specifically to discuss police investigations into crack. The Home Office is in regular contact with the organisations mentioned on a wide variety of policing matters.

Immigration

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet completed his review of the workings of the Immigration (Carriers' Liabilities) Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A review of the workings of the carriers' liabilities Act has not been undertaken, nor is one planned.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost to his Department of telephone tapping services provided by British Telecom in 1989.

Mr. Waddington: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to give information about the costs relating to interception authorised under the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

Contempt of Court Act

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will be proposing legislation to amend section 10 of the Contempt of Court Act, in respect of the interests of justice category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Section 10 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 provides that no court may require a person to disclose, nor will he be guilty of contempt for refusing to disclose, the source of his information in a publication for which he is responsible, unless it is established to the court's satisfaction that disclosure is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime. We believe that these are and remain proper grounds on which to allow a court to insist on disclosure.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed by the Commission for Racial Equality; and how many of these are of (a) Afro-Caribbean, (b) Indian, (c) Pakistani and (d) Bangladeshi origin.

Mr. John Patten: At 30 March 1990, the Commission for Racial Equality employed 193·35 staff of which 87 were of black Caribbean, black African or other black origin; 17 were of Indian origin; six of Pakistani origin and three of Bangladeshi origin.

Prison Visits

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown of the prison service grant of £1,564,000 for assisted visits to prison inmates giving the number of visits this figure represents and the total number of individuals who have received visits under this scheme.

Mr. Mellor: Under the assisted prison visits scheme the cost of visits to inmates by close relatives who are on low incomes may be met from public funds. The scheme is not cash limited and the costs of all valid claims by eligible people are met in full. The Budget estimate for the scheme in England and Wales for the year ending 31 March 1990 was £1,564,000. The actual cost of the scheme in the year was £1,489,941, of which just over 70 per cent. was taken up by travelling costs, and the remainder by subsistence and other expenses. This represents the payment of 60,807 claims divided between 15,680 claimants.

Figures for the number of individual inmates who have received assisted visits are not readily available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Prisons

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional places have been provided by extending existing prisons since 1984 and how many more will be provided when current plans are completed.

Mr. Mellor: During the period 1 January 1984 to 11 February this year, the latest date for which figures are available, 2,446 additional places were provided at existing prison establishments in England and Wales.

The following net increases in places at existing establishments are currently planned for the period up to 1993-94:

	Increases
1990-91	1,171
1991-92	573
1992-93	1,059
1993-94	315

These figures do not take account of the effect which the recent disturbances may have on the number of places available in future years.

Further increases in places at existing establishments after 1993-94 are also planned, but the timing and number of these depend on the availability of resources.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost per place of the prisons currently under construction.

Mr. Mellor: The average cost per place of the 14 prisons currently under construction, or where construction is due to start shortly, is about £117,000.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated total capital cost at current prices of the 24 new prisons in the prison building programme.

Mr. Mellor: The total capital cost of the design and construction of the 24 prisons in the prison building programme is estimated at £1,355 million. This total represents the sum of the various costs incurred, or likely to be incurred, at each prison at outturn prices. It is not possible in the time available to provide a total at current prices.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places in the new purpose-built prisons have been provided since 1984 and how many more will be provided at the end of the current prison building programme.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1984, a total of 3,512 places have been provided in new prison establishments in England and Wales. A further 8,397 places are due to be provided by 1994 in new prison establishments which are either under construction or are due to be started shortly. The current programme also envisages the construction of a further 3,600 places, but the locations and time scales of these places have yet to be determined and they will have to be assessed in the light of the prison service's needs.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which new prisons have opened in premises converted from other uses since 1984; and how many places they contain.

Mr. Mellor: The following prison establishments currently in use have been converted from other uses since 1984:

Name	Type	Places (certified normal accommodation)
Lindholme, near Doncaster (former RAF station)	Adult male category C training	1,001
Downview, Banstead (former mental hospital and nurses home)	Adult male category C training	332

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which new prisons have been opened since 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The following prison establishments have been opened since 1984 in England and Wales:

Name of establishment	Date of opening
Wayland, Norfolk (Adult Male, Category C)	1985
Stocken, Leicestershire (Adult Male, Category C)	1985
Thorn Cross, Cheshire (Young Offender Institution)	1985
Full Sutton, Yorkshire (Adult Male, Category B Dispersal)	1987
Littlehey, Cambridgeshire (Adult Male, Category C)	1988
The Mount, Hertfordshire (Young Offender Institution)	1988
Swaleside, Sheppey (Adult Male, Category B)	1988
Garth, Lancashire (Adult Male, Category B)	1988

Police Pay

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the increases or otherwise in real terms of the pay of police constables, at various levels of seniority, for the periods (a) 1973 to 1978, (b) 1978 to 1983 and (c) 1983 to 1988; and if he will list other significant changes in the terms and conditions of service of police officers and the dates at which they became effective.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Increases in real terms in the basic pay of police constables for the periods in question are set out in the table. Since 1973 other significant changes in the terms and conditions of service of police officers have included changes in pension arrangements in 1975 (counting of war service) and 1982 (increase in contributions) and increases in annual leave (1979, 1983 and 1987). Allowances payable in addition to basic pay have been uprated on a regular basis.

SCOTLAND

Ferries (Fire Safety)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide additional funding to local authorities in south-west Scotland to ensure that fire-fighting teams in that area are adequately trained and equipped to be able to deal with an outbreak of fire on cross-channel ferries at sea between Northern Ireland and Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The fire services, like other local services, are supported by central Government through the revenue support grant. Within Scotland, it is for the eight fire authorities, including Dumfries and Galloway regional council, to determine the level of fire expenditure and the priorities for their area.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the accountancy firms which he is using for the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is as follows:

Name of firm	Function
1. Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte (formerly Coopers and Lybrand)	Advisers on regulation, contracts, accounting and tax
2. Ernst and Young	Advisers on nuclear matters
3. KPMG Peat Marwick McLintock[1]	Reporting accountants to Scottish Hydro-Electric plc (formerly North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board)
4. Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte[2] (formerly Deloitte, Haskins and Sells)	Reporting accountants to Scottish Power plc (formerly South of Scotland Electricity Board)

[1] Appointed jointly with Scottish Hydro-Electric plc.
[2] Appointed jointly with Scottish Power plc.

Foreign Language Teachers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the scheme to give £1,500 on top of their normal grants to graduates prepared to train as foreign language teachers, announced on 13 March, applies also in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The scheme applies only in England and Wales. The teacher supply position does not at present justify such a scheme in Scotland.

Bankruptcy

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of staff of the accountant in bankruptcy for each year since 1984-85; whether the number of staff is to be increased; and what were for each year since 1984-85 the total costs of the accountant in bankruptcy's office.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 April 1990]: Following the coming into effect on 1 April 1986 of the provisions of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 the resources made available to the office of the accountant in bankruptcy have been and are being kept under review to match staffing levels to the additional workload resulting from the new provisions. The number of staff in post, at 1 April in each year, was as follows:

Year	Number
1984	2·5
1985	2·5
1986	5·5
1987	5·5
1988	14·5
1989	25·5
1990	37·5

The annual running costs for the office of the accountant in bankruptcy were as follows:

£000

Year	£000
1984-85	31
1985-86	38
1986-87	73
1987-88	94
1988-89	221
1989-90	400

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total sums paid out in each of the last five years from (a) the legal advice and assistance scheme and (b) the civil legal aid scheme to solicitors representing bankrupt persons, persons contesting bankruptcy petitions and otherwise in connection with matters pertaining to bankruptcy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 April 1990]: The information requested is not available.

HEALTH

Environmental Health Departments

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to respond to the Audit Commission report on the work of local authority environmental health departments.

Mr. Freeman: The Audit Commission has not yet produced a report. We will be responding when we have considered the commission's recommendations.

Norwich Health Authority (Land Sales)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much land has been sold by Norwich health authority in each year since 1979; and if he will give details of the price realised in each case.

Mr. Freeman: Information, which has for brevity been restricted to sales of over £50,000, is as follows:

Year and property	Acreage	Price £
1979-80 to 1984-85
Nil
1985-86
Blofield Hall Hospital, Norwich	16·0	250,000

Consultants

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of hospital consultants are members of the British Medical Association.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not collect such information.

Head Lice

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information exists on the incidence of head lice in schools.

Mr. Freeman: The only relevant information held centrally is on the number of children found to be infected on examination by the school health service, with one or more of the following conditions: head lice, vermin, scabies, ringworm, inpetigo and veruccae. The figures in the table show a decline in the incidence of infestation from 1983 to 1987-88 (latest figures available) but there has also been a reduction in the number of pupils examined as the school health service staff have adopted a more targeted approach to health prevention and promotion.

Number of pupils examined (000s): Number of pupils found to be infected (000s): Number infected as percentage of maintained school population

England

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987-88[1]
Individual Examinations	11,682·00	9,401·90	7,288·20	6,089·60	4,546·30
Individual pupils found to be infected	172·60	132·10	105·50	94·60	91·40
Infected pupils as percentage of maintained school population	2·23	1·74	1·42	1·29	1·27

[1]In 1987-88, figures were collected for the financial year, rather than as previously for the calendar year.

Care Homes

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has had on the regulation of care homes with fewer than four residents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Informal consultation has taken place with representatives of local authority associations, directors of social services and the independent sector.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he now proposes to make any extension in the categories for eligibility for free prescriptions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. A full charge is paid on less than one in five prescription items dispensed. The present exemption arrangements protect those who are likely to have difficulty in paying charges. Those who are not exempt, but who need a lot of prescriptions, can limit their outlay by buying a prepayment certificate.

Homelessness

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children under 16 years were received into the care of their local authority in 1989 because of homelessness.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest statistics available about children in care are the provisional statistics for the year ending 31 March 1988. These provisional figures show that there were 163 children under the age of 16 received into care in England in the year ended 31 March 1988 where the specific cause was that their family was homeless.

Food Safety

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by his Department to health authorities regarding monitoring the safety of food bought from outside premises for consumption within hospitals by patients.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities are responsible for monitoring the safety of foods purchased for consumption by patients. The Department has issued guidelines contained in the publications "Hygiene, Clean Food" and "Guidelines on Cook-chill and Cook-freeze Catering Systems". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Residential Accommodation (Finance)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made by his Department for the resolution of disputes between local authorities over the financial responsibility for the care of elderly or handicapped persons requiring residential accommodation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: If a dispute concerns the provision of services under part III of the National Assistance Act 1948 the authorities concerned can ask my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to determine the question in accordance with section 32(3) of that Act.

Hospital Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are taken by his Department to monitor the levels of food wastage within hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to determine such monitoring.

Phosphine Gas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the possible implications for human health resulting from exposure to phosphine gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The chronic and acute effects of phosphine gas are well documented; in high concentrations it is extremely toxic and can cause death. It has no current commercial use.

However, I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the suggestion that this gas is generated by fungal contaminants of cot mattresses and is a cause of sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS). The chief medical officer has asked a group of independent experts to investigate this theory. He has asked the group to report as soon as possible and will make public its findings.

Hospital Travel Costs Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost in each of the last 10 years of the NHS hospital travel costs scheme.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 March 1990]: The total annual cost figures available for the National Health Service hospital travel costs scheme in England are as follows.

The scheme has varied in scope over the years (the present arrangements date from April 1988) and prior to 1985-86 was accounted for centrally. The figures for more recent years are derived from the annual accounts and associated returns of health authorities.

We are currently considering measures to increase public awareness of the hospital travel costs scheme.

	£000 (cash)
1980-81	247
1981-82	364
1982-83	677
1983-84	703
1984-85	1,219
1985-86	2,822
1986-87	3,037
1987-88	3,263
1988-89	3,265

Note:
The figures do not encompass administration costs. Those for the years prior to 1985-86 include elements which are not separately identifiable for patients attending artificial limb and appliance centres (ALACs).

ENVIRONMENT

Conservation of Wild Birds

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of sites which meet the criteria for designation and protection under the European Community directive on the conservation of wild birds; what is the number of sites so designated; and what is the site next to be designated and the date on which he expects to designate it.

Mr. Trippier: The NCC has identified 91 potential special protection areas in England and Wales, of which 22 have been designated. A total of 128 potential sites have been identified in Scotland of which 18 have now been designated, including another seven announced by my noble Friend the Minister of State yesterday.

I cannot forecast when the next designation will be announced. A number of proposals are currently being considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. The next designation will take place as soon as the necessary consultations have been satisfactorily completed.

Municipal Refuse Sites

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many local authority municipal refuse sites have equipment to enable steel cans to be magnetically separated from the waste stream; and what plans he has to encourage an increase in the number of such facilities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: About 37 local authorities have equipment for the magnetic extraction of steel cans and about 20 authorities currently operate such facilities. An expert recycling advisory group, which includes Government and local authority representation, has been considering various measures to encourage recycling, including the provision of additional sorting and separation facilities. The findings of the group will be taken into account in the forthcoming White Paper on the environment.

Habitats (Protection)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will provide new money for the implementation of the EC habitats directive, and specifically for site protection and management, for extending environmentally sensitive areas, and for enforcement of the directive.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that the European Commission hopes to publish soon a draft regulation designed to provide funding to assist the implementation of the draft directive.

Chemical Congress, Belfast

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representation his Department had at the annual chemical congress in Belfast in April.

Mr. Trippier: One member of the Department attended. Several of the Department's research contractors were also represented.

Environmental Economics

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has been invited to present a paper at, or attend, the two-day seminar on environmental auditing and environmental economics, to be held at the International hotel in London on 17 and 18 May.

Mr. Trippier: Professor David Pearce, who is the special adviser to the Secretary of State, will be giving a paper at this seminar on 18 May. Members of the Department of the Environment will be participating on both days of the seminar, though an invitation to present a paper on 18 May was declined.

Rivers

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that environmentally acceptable flows are maintained in rivers in England and Wales during the remainder of this year.

Mr. Trippier: It is for the National Rivers Authority to decide what action to take to maintain flows in rivers. I understand that the authority is giving priority to investigating 20 rivers in England and Wales with low flows during the summer months, in order to formulate long-term solutions.

Homeless Teenagers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for estimating the number of homeless teenagers in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The 1991 census will include a count of people of all ages who are sleeping rough or in temporary accommodation.

Shorthold Tenancies

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many assured and assured shorthold tenancies have been created under the Housing Act 1988 in England and Wales, by region, and excluding council leases.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is not yet available. We shall, as soon as practicable, be undertaking a detailed evaluation of the impact of deregulation which will include an assessment of the number of tenancies created. However, initial impressions are very encouraging. It is estimated that about £480 million has so far been invested in business expansion scheme companies letting on assured tenancies, which will provide some 8,000 additional homes to let in Great Britain.

Children (Temporary Accommodation)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many children are living in forms of temporary accommodation, excluding bed-and-breakfast hotels, in England and Wales, having been accepted by their local authority as homeless;

(2) how many children are living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales, having been accepted by their local authority as homeless.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of children among the homeless households in bed-and-breakfast and other forms of temporary accommodation in England are not reported by local authorities and my Department has no estimates.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Children (Housing)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many children under 16 years are in households refused by local authorities under homeless legislation in 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is not held centrally.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources will be made available to local authorities when the duty of dealing with stray dogs is transferred from the police to the local authority; and if he will make a statement on the basis of the calculation by his Department as to the additional funds required for local authorities to carry out their duties.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No legislation for transferring the duty of dealing with stray dogs from the police to local authorities is currently before Parliament. We remain committed to this proposal however and intend to introduce such legislation at a convenient opportunity. Local authority comments would be sought on the details of any proposed legislation and we would consider at that time any representations they might make on the question of additional resources.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources he will make available to local authorities in order to implement the draft code of practice on litter and refuse as required under the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Trippier: It is not yet possible to determine precisely the cost implications for local authorities of meeting the standards of cleanliness described in the draft code of practice on litter and refuse. The draft code is currently the subject of consultation with local authorities and other interested parties. The results of this consultation, together with the report of the management consultants commissioned to undertake a survey of a representative sample of authorities, will be taken into account when we decide what level of revenue support grant will be appropriate for 1991-92 and subsequent years.

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any authorities designated for community charge capping have so far accepted the cap he proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Camden notified me on 24 April that it accepted the cap. I have today confirmed the figure of £177 million that I originally proposed. Camden must now set its new lower budget which will reduce the bills of Camden charge payers by over £30, which I am sure they will welcome.

Council Rents

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing such information as he has concerning the average council rent level in (a) Hammersmith and Fulham and (b) the Greater London area in each year from 1987 to 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information is as follows:

Average weekly unrebated rent (£ per week)

	April 1987	April 1988	April 1989
Hammersmith and Fulham	24·67	27·06	29·34
Greater London	18·86	21·69	24·19

Trees

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants are available for tree planting; and to what extent the level of any grant is governed by the proposed density of tree cover.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A wide range of grants is available to encourage amenity and commercial planting. Through its local government partners the Countryside Commission offers aid for the planting of amenity trees on land up to 0·25 hectares. Grant is not governed by the planned density of cover, but the commission offers general guidance on spacing.

Local authorities may also offer planting grants at their own discretion.

On larger sites the Forestry Commission aids planting through the woodland grant scheme. The maximum tree spacings normally acceptable for this grant are 2·1 m for conifers and 3 m for broadleaves. Where the commission considers it silviculturally acceptable, proposals to plant at wider spacings may be permitted and grant paid on a pro rata basis.

Grants are also available from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for planting shelter belts of trees. The rate of grant is not dependent on the density of planting.

Bats

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has in respect of population levels of each of the 15 species of bat native to the United Kingdom (a) in 1989, (b) in 1980 and (c) in 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not readily available in the form requested.

Earth Day

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department took to promote, encourage and participate in Earth Day.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) on 8 March 1990, Official Report, column 801.

Metaldehyde

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out to establish the incidence of death among wild birds attributable to metaldehyde; what have been the results of the research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Deaths of wild birds from pesticides are investigated by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's wildlife incident scheme. I understand that of the 900 such incidents investigated between 1984-1989, only six were found to involve metaldehyde.

Aflatoxin

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to prevent the sale of peanuts contaminated with aflatoxin as food for wild birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Existing controls on foodstuffs for domestic animals and birds, for which my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible, do not extend to materials supplied for feeding to wild birds. However, there are voluntary initiatives by the pet food trade aimed at preventing the supply of aflatoxin contaminated peanuts as wild bird food. My Department is shortly to discuss with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further action, if any, may be required.

Vacant Land

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the total amount of vacant land held by each local authority in England, (b) the percentage this represents of each local authority's land holding and as a percentage of the total land within each authority's area; and (c) the estimated value of the vacant land held by each local authority together with the measures being taken by his Department to encourage local authorities to release such land.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 April 1990]: I am arranging for copies of a list showing the amount of each local authority's unused and underused land entered on the Department's land register as at 30 September 1989 to be placed in the Library of the House.

Information on the relationship between these amounts and the total land within each authority's area could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on authorities' total land holdings and the value of their registered land is not available.

Measures to encourage the disposal or bringing into use of authorities' vacant land include the incentives for disposal within the capital and revenue finance systems; the public accessibility of the land register and of individual owners' registers, including the publicity given to the "public right to order disposal"; and the use of directions to require authorities to take steps to dispose of particular sites. We are currently considering whether further measures might be appropriate to reduce the amount of public sector vacant land.

District Health Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what allowance is made in the formula for funding district health authorities for large increases in population in the summer months as a result of tourism; and how this will be taken into account under the new system based on weighted resident capitation to be introduced in 1991-92.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The allocation of funds to district health authorities is a matter for regional health authorities, or, in Wales, for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. From 1991-92, all treatments will be paid for by a patient's home district health authority, except for out-patient attendances at accident and emergency departments. Regional health authorities will have discretion to take account of local circumstances in making allocations to district health authorities, including where relevant exceptional demands imposed on A and E departments by tourism.

Waste Site Licences

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will name those waste site licences revoked, and the date, by the local authority which are currently subject to appeal to the Secretary of State;

(2) if he will give the name and date of revocation of those waste licences revoked by local authority licensing authority which are currently subject to appeal to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Trippier: Following is a list of the appeals made under section 10 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 currently under consideration in respect of waste disposal licences which have been revoked:

Site	Appellant	Waste Disposal Authority	Effective date of revocation
Halfhead Farm, Shallowford	S. and R. Hopley Ltd.	Staffordshire County Council	20 October 1989

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what institutional arrangements exist to bring to account any nation that violates its commitments under article II of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: While there is no provision under the non-proliferation treaty for action against any state that might violate its commitments under the treaty, the fourth review conference, on 20 August to 14 September, will provide an opportunity for parties to the treaty to discuss any such violations.

Mr. Ienan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any recent communication from the French Government concerning accession to the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Antarctic

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement of the Government's position on making Antarctica a nature reserve free of mineral exploration.

Mr. Maude: We remain totally committed to the protection of the Antarctica environment and support current proposals to introduce comprehensive measures to enhance environmental protection. We do not, however, see any particular merit in labelling the Antarctica a "world park" or "international wilderness area", as suggested by the French and Australians.

The Franco-Australian initiative aims to replace the convention on the regulation of Antarctica minerals resource activity (CRAMRA). The United Kingdom however, remains committed to CRAMRA which provides stringent means of regulating or preventing mineral exploitation and development in Antarctica.

Arab League

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will instruct his Department to convey to the official representatives of the Arab League in London the views of Her Majesty's Government on the statement issued by the Arab League in London on 14 April criticising Her Majesty's Customs and Excise regarding the seizure of metal tubes apparently intended for gun components; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our position on the seizures which took place at Teesport on 10 April was set out clearly by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in his statement to the House on 18 April, column 1427.

Middle East

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department will seek the co-operation of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to investigate whether any credence should be placed upon threats reported to have been made on 15 April by Sheikh Assad Al-Tamimi, of the Islamic jihad movement in Palestine.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The Palestine Liberation Organisation does not include a group of this name.

Parking Fines

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in London during 1989.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payment.

The total for 1989 (7,831) indicates a 22 per cent. reduction over the 1988 figure (10,079) and is only 7 per cent. of the 1984 figure (108,932), the last to be published before the introduction in May 1985 of the Government's policy on parking by members of diplomatic missions.

We welcome the further reduction in unpaid parking fines that has been achieved during 1989 and appreciate the co-operation of diplomatic missions since the introduction of the parking policy. We shall continue to monitor carefully the level of unpaid fines and bring pressure to bear on diplomatic missions to reduce this still further.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were allegedly committed in 1989 by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity; and how many foreign diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in that year as a result of alleged offences.

Mr. Sainsbury: Forty alleged serious offences by persons entitled to immunity were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1989 (four fewer than in 1988). "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the report to the Foreign Affairs Committee "The abuse of diplomatic immunities and privileges (1985)" as offences falling into a category which could in certain circumstances attract a penalty of six months or more; we are advised that very few of the alleged offences would have been likely to attract a custodial sentence. The majority involved drinking and driving and shoplifting.

Fourteen diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in 1989 following alleged offences (the same number as in 1988).

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the handling of diplomatic immunities and privileges since the publication of the Government's White Paper "Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges" Cmnd. 9497, in 1985.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have fully implemented the guidelines set out in the 1985 White Paper, with the objective of reducing the abuse of diplomatic immunity and privileges, while fulfilling our obligations under the Vienna conventions on diplomatic relations and on consular relations.

We have applied stricter standards to the size of diplomatic missions and the notification of staff. New legislation was introduced in 1988 to prevent the abuse of United Kingdom immigration laws by persons employed as locally engaged members of mission staff. The legislation ensures that locally engaged members of the staff of a mission who have no pre-existing legal or immigration entitlement to work in the United Kingdom are no longer exempt from the United Kingdom immigration laws. Such staff fall to be refused leave to remain for employment with a mission unless there has been prior notification to, and acceptance by, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The FCO continues to monitor closely all new appointments to diplomatic missions in London and elsewhere in the United Kingdom. Arrangements are being made to clarify the status of staff whose term of service in the United Kingdom exceeds 10 years. There has been little growth in the size of individual diplomatic missions.

We withdrew recognition of diplomatic status from 17 national tourist offices in 1985. In 1987 the Diplomatic and Consular Premises Act was introduced to enable the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary to control the acquisition and disposal of diplomatic premises in London. This Act also provides for the acquisition by the Secretary of State of premises formerly used for the purposes of a diplomatic mission. The Secretary of State has so far used these powers once in relation to the premises of the former Cambodian embassy in London which were occupied by squatters.

We continue to play a full part in United Nations discussions on the regulation of the use of the diplomatic bag. Procedures for the scanning of diplomatic bags in certain circumstances have been notified to the diplomatic corps in London.

The guidelines set out in paragraphs 57 to 73 of the 1985 White Paper on the handling of alleged serious offences by diplomats have been followed fully. Statistics on such alleged offences are made available to Parliament annually. We have repeatedly made clear to members of the diplomatic corps the standards of behaviour we expect and the way in which any alleged offences committed by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity will be handled. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office takes action with the appropriate diplomatic mission in the case of every alleged offence by an entitled person notified to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office by the police. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office also continues to intervene on behalf of individuals who are precluded by diplomatic immunity from pursuing through normal legal channels valid claims against members of diplomatic missions in London.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has dealt firmly with the problem of unpaid parking fines by diplomatic missions in London. With the assistance of a computerised system, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office monitors all such fines left unpaid by members of diplomatic missions in London and by official cars owned by diplomatic missions. In 1984, there were 108,845 unpaid fines outstanding; in 1989 this figure had fallen to 7,831, representing a drop of 93 per cent. between 1984 and 1989. Detailed statistics on unpaid parking fines are published in Parliament every six months.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how much elephant ivory is currently held in Hong Kong by the Rand company; and how much of it has CITES documentation;

(2) how much ivory has been exported from Hong Kong by the Rand company since July 1989; and to which countries it was exported;

(3) how much of the ivory currently held in Hong Kong belongs to the Tat Hing company; and what proportion of it does not have CITES documentation;

(4) what are the countries of origin of ivory held by the Tat Hing company in Hong Kong; how much has been exported by the company since July 1989; and to which countries it was exported.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 29 March 1990]: The information on individual firms was collected to enable the Hong Kong Government to implement their statutory controls. The Hong Kong Government treat this as commercial information in confidence and it would be wrong for us to disclose it.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

9. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet representatives from the Building Societies Association to discuss the present level of interest rates.

Mr. Major: Next month.

19. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current short-term interest rates in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) West Germany.

Mr. Ryder: On 25 April three-month interbank rates were 15·3 per cent. in the United Kingdom and 8·4 per cent. in Germany.

35. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average level of commercial interest rates in the European Community and in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: On 25 April, three-month nominal interest rates were 15·3 per cent. in the United Kingdom and 11·2 per cent. in the European Community as a whole.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to review the Government's interest rate policy.

Mr. Major: Interest rates will continue to be kept as high as needed to reduce inflation.

Friends of the Earth

13. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of Friends of the Earth to discuss fiscal policy and the environment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of Friends of the Earth to discuss fiscal policy and the environment.

Mortgages

18. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average mortgage repayment for someone on an average new mortgage in May 1988; and what it is now.

Mr. Lilley: The figures are £221·81 and £350·35 per month.

Third World Debt

20. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of debt forgiveness to assist the Third world he anticipates will be generated by the provision on sovereign debt in his Budget.

Mr. Lilley: The proposals now in the Finance Bill are aimed at spreading the cost of tax relief to the Exchequer, and giving more certainty to the calculation of that relief. Any decision to forgive debt will be for the banks to make based on their commercial judgment.

Inflation

24. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current inflation rates in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other Group of Seven countries.

Mr. Ryder: Excluding mortgage interest payments United Kingdom inflation was 6·3 per cent. in March 1990. The latest more comparable inflation rate for other G7 countries was 4·5 per cent. in January.

31. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average inflation rate of countries in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ryder: Excluding estimates of home owners' costs to put figures on a more comparable basis, the average inflation rate of members of the exchange rate mechanism of the EMS was 4·3 per cent. in January 1990.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

25. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the Madrid conditions concerning United Kingdom entry into the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system have yet to be fulfilled.

33. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress towards fulfilling the Madrid conditions concerning United Kingdom entry into the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ryder: Progress has been made on capital liberalisation, on competition policy and on liberalisation of financial services. But further important decisions still need to be taken. For example, as yet only 60 per cent. of the measures contained in the original White Paper on the single market have been agreed at Community level. In the financial services field, the draft investment services directive is still under discussion and the associated capital adequacy directive has not yet been adopted by the Commission. Above all, we need to make more progress in reducing inflation here at home.

27. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage (a) the French franc, (b) the Italian lira and (c) the pound sterling have been devalued against the deutschmark since the franc and lira joined the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Ryder: Since 13 March 1979, the French franc has depreciated by about 31½ per cent., the Italian lira by about 38 per cent. and the pound sterling by about 28 per cent. against the deutschmark.

29. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has reviewed his policy on United Kingdom membership of the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has reviewed the Madrid conditions for full United Kingdom membership of the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Friends to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field).

36. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his assessment of any disadvantages arising from United Kingdom participation in the European exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Budget debate, 26 March, Official Report, column 117.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will explain the details and conditions of the Central bank swap arrangements in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to section 3.8 of the resolution of the European Council of 5 December 1978 on the establishment of the European monetary system and related matters.

Scotch Whisky

28. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications of his Budget for the Scotch whisky industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Excise duties on Scotch whisky have not been raised since 1985. Since then the RPI has risen by over 28 per cent. Scotch whisky exports continue to grow strongly and account for some 85 per cent. of turnover. The industry remains successful and profitable and recently six distilleries reopened. The Budget increase in excise duty should have only a marginal effect on sales in the United Kingdom. Even after the Budget increase, the total tax on a bottle of scotch will have fallen by nearly 20 per cent. in real terms since May 1979.

Economic and Monetary Union

32. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on developments towards economic and monetary union within the Community.

Mr. Lilley: The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers discussed economic and monetary union at its informal meeting on 31 March, about which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made a statement to the House on 3 April, Official Report, column 523.

Gross Domestic Product

34. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of non-North sea money gross domestic product, non-North sea taxes, national insurance contributions and the poll tax represented in 1978-79; and what is the planned proportion in 1990-91.

Mr. Lilley: In 1978-79 non-North sea taxes and national insurance contributions amounted to 34·1 per cent. of non-North sea GDP. The Budget forecast for the comparable figure in 1990-91 is 37 per cent. of non-North sea GDP, adjusted to remove the distortion due to the abolition of domestic rates.

Mortgage Interest

37. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for the northern region (a) the increase in mortgage interest payable between 1988 and 1989 and (b) the share of this increase accounted for by (i) rising interest rates and (ii) rising size of mortgages.

Mr. Lilley: Projections of the information in the 1986 and 1987 family expenditure surveys indicate that between 1988 and 1989 mortage interest payable in the northern region increased by £0·4 billion. The amounts due to the rise in interest rates and to the growth in the stock of mortgages cannot be estimated reliably.

Bank of England

38. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend meets the Governor of the Bank of England from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Composite Rate Tax

39. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people he anticipates to benefit as a result of his abolition of composite rate tax.

Mr. Lilley: About 14 million people will benefit as a result of abolition of composite rate tax.

Tobacco Taxation

40. Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra revenue he expects to raise from the recent increase in taxation on tobacco; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The revenue yield resulting from the changes to tobacco duty rates in this year's Budget is estimated to be £330 million in 1990-91.

Small Businesses (VAT)

42. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the value added tax threshold for small business.

Mr. Ryder: The level of the VAT registration threshold is subject to regular review and has been increased in line with inflation since 1979. The increase to £25,400 announced by my right hon. Friend in his Budget statement represents the maximum possible within our obligations under the EC sixth VAT directive, which restricts increases in the threshold to those which maintain its value in real terms.

Prices

43. Mr. Gow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the securing of stable prices; and when he expects that purpose to be achieved.

Mr. Ryder: The Government's objective is to defeat inflation.

Chelsea FC

44. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from Chelsea football club about his Budget.

Mr. Ryder: None.

Environmental Issues

45. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his oversight of his Department's interest in environmental issues during the past financial year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Treasury has played a full part in the development of the Government's policy towards domestic and international environmental issues. In his Budget statement, my right hon. Friend announced an increase in the duty differential in favour of unleaded petrol which now stands at 3·4p per litre.

Child Benefit

46. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the take from making child benefit liable to income tax.

Mr. Lilley: The estimated direct revenue yield in 1990-91 from making child benefit liable to tax would be about £450 million. This assumes that child benefit received by married couples would be taxed as the mother's income.

Pools Promoters

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the pools promoters about his Budget.

Mr. Ryder: Following my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget statement, officials have met the Pools Promoters Association and the Football Trust to discuss implementation of his proposal to reduce the rate of pools betting duty.

Negotiations are proceeding with the aim of ensuring that the entire benefit of the proposed duty reduction is devoted to the improvement of safety and comfort at football league grounds as recommended by the Taylor report.

Group of Seven

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters were discussed at the Group of Seven industrialised nations' meeting in April.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo).

Eastern Europe

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his Department will initiate a programme to provide assistance to eastern European states on banking, taxation and pricing policies in the context of an international free market economy in Europe.

Mr Ryder: The United Kingdom's know-how fund, which has been extended to cover Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and East Germany covers these areas of assistance. Training and consultancy programmes on banking, pricing policies and taxation are already in place in Poland and will be starting in Czechoslovakia.

Public Sector Debt Repayment

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his projection for the PSDR in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The PSDR is forecast to be £6·9 billion in 1990-91. It is projected to fall to £3 billion in 1991-92 in line with the objective of a balanced budget in the medium term.

Taxation

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the overall tax burden, including all direct and indirect taxes and treating child benefit as negative income tax, for a one-earner family on average earnings in 1989-90 with two children; and what he estimates it will be in 1990-91.

Mr. Lilley: About one third of gross earnings in direct and indirect taxes and employee national insurance contributions in 1989-90, and about the same in 1990-91.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Vaccines

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has concerning the damage to sheeps' livers by pasteurellosis vaccines; if he is conducting any relevant research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Many millions of sheep are vaccinated annually against pasteurella and clostridia infections. During 1989, veterinary medicines department staff investigated over 80 reports of sheep reacting adversely following vaccination. A number of affected sheep showed liver damage, but in the majority of cases this was commensurate with concurrent disease such as fluke infestation or pregnancy toxaemia. The Veterinary Products Committee examined the results of these investigations and did not consider that the evidence available supported a link between vaccine use and liver damage. However, the committee advised that highly stressed animals should not be vaccinated, and vaccine labels have been altered to clarify this.

Aphids

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the infestation of aphids.

Mr. Curry: The Department has received several representations from individual farmers and farmer groups concerning the recent aphid infestation. These have been made to the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) and have mainly expressed concern at the number of aphids that have survived the mild winter to multiply on cereall crops. ADAS has also received many inquiries regarding the risk of aphid-transmitted virus diseases in cereals, sugar beet, potatoes and vegetable brassicas.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his Department's response has been to recent representations about infestation by aphids; and what indications there are of regional variations in the infestation of aphids.

Mr. Curry: The Department has continued to provide farmers and growers with up-to-date information on the incidence and control of aphids and the risk of aphid-borne virus diseases. This information has been available from the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) in the form of articles in the farming press in MAFF divisional bulletins, distributed to all farmers with 20 hectares of crops, and in regional crop intelligence reports available to subscribers.

The most recent reports from ADAS entomologists indicate that the incidence of aphids is very variable within each region. Nevertheless, in cereals, levels of bird-cherry aphid are generally higher in south-east and south-west England and in parts of East Anglia than in the midlands, northern England and Wales. The same pattern is apparent for cabbage aphid on oilseed rape. At the present time, no clear regional variation is apparent in the incidence of other aphid species.

GATT

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of how the general agreement on tariff and trade will affect aspects of United Kingdom farming by the end of the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Uruguay round negotiations are due to be concluded in December this year. It is not yet possible to forecast the outcome of these negotiations, but any reforms agreed are likely to be phased in over a number of years.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the acreage of set-aside agricultural land in England and Wales.

Mr. Curry: I estimate that the area set-aside in England and Wales in the 1989-90 crop year was 88,868 hectares, equivalent to about 219,000 acres.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has received from the United States's Environmental Protection Agency concerning maneb, mancozeb and zineb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: All the data on these pesticides which the EPA had studied, together with its evaluations, were made available for assessment by this Department.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends introducing new spraying regulations to reduce residue levels in food of maneb, mancozeb and zineb.

Mr. Maclean: Officials are taking action to make statutory the advice already given to growers. Details will be published.

Enzootic Bovine Leukosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the extent to which European Economic Community member states or regions are free of enzootic bovine leukosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We do not have comprehensive information on the incidence of enzootic bovine leukosis in the Community because the disease is not one of those which, when it occurs, is required to be reported to the European Commission by member states.

Cattle Exports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to restore the export of live cattle and cattle products to the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The majority of this trade is proceeding normally. I and my officials take every opportunity to ensure that other member states are fully aware of the kind of control measures that we believe to be appropriate.

Brucellosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department included bulls in slaughter orders applied in the outbreak of brucellosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The legislation provides for the slaughter of bulls where appropriate.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure has been incurred during each of the last five years by his Department in blood testing for brucellosis.

Mr. Maclean: The cost of blood sampling and testing for brucellosis during the last five years is as follows:

1985-86	4,534,275
1986-87	4,587,463
1987-88	4,590,025
1988-89	4,819,079
1989-90	4,648,359

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has conducted any research by means of histopathological examination of porcine brains, or by any other method, into the possibility of pigs developing a spongiform encephalopathy from the consumption of scrapie-infected sheep remains.

Mr. Maclean: Histopathology of porcine brains is conducted on submissions from veterinary practitioners by pathologists in the veterinary investigation service and at the central veterinary laboratory. No evidence of a spongiform encephalopathy in pigs has ever been found.

Rabies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 18 April, if he will outline how he proposes to minimise casualties among other species in the event of action being taken in the United Kingdom to prevent the spread of rabies.

Mr. Maclean: The baits that would be used in any fox control operation have been selected so as to be more attractive to foxes than to other species and would be buried in such a manner that they would more likely to be taken by foxes, in locations frequented by foxes. A control exercise would be undertaken only under strict supervision and would last only one or two days. Owners, occupiers, and users of land on which fox control operations were to take place would be warned.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that his salmonella testing programme is not evaded by producers resulting from testing swabs which have already been tested and found to be negative.

Mr. Maclean: Enforcement of the salmonella legislation is carried out by local authorities. My officials are also carrying out spot checks to ensure compliance with the requirements, including the testing of a random sample of birds.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department's study has yet established the vertical transmissibility of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle.

Mr. Maclean: No. BSE's protracted incubation period means that preliminary results from the study to determine whether vertical transmission takes place might not be expected for at least two years.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out to establish whether the infective agent responsible for bovine spongiform encephalopathy is transmissible from carcase to environmental media after landfilling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Carcases are buried under Ministry supervision and in accordance with sound veterinary practice to ensure that none can pose a risk of spreading BSE.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what disposal techniques are employed in respect of carcases from cattle infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Carcases are disposed of by incineration or burial.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of carcases from cattle positively identified as being infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy in 1989 were (a) incinerated, (b) landfilled and (c) otherwise disposed of in (i) Cornwall, (ii) Devon, (iii) east sussex and (iv) West Sussex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally in the form requested. However, in the south-west region, which includes Cornwall and Devon, 83 per cent. of carcases were incinerated and 17 per cent. buried in 1989. In the south-east region, which includes east and west Sussex, 99 per cent. were incinerated and 1 per cent. buried in 1989.

Agro-Industry

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has placed any contract since January 1989 with the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute for research on agro-industry.

Mr. Maclean: No. The work of the Natural Resources Institute is directed towards the developing countries which are the responsibility of the Overseas Development Administration.

Global Warming

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to raise the issue of climate change and the global warming greenhouse effect at the meeting of the European Council of Agriculture Ministers on 25 to 26 April in Brussels.

Mr. Maclean: The Agriculture Council on 25-26 April will concentrate on the Commission's farm price proposals. I shall ensure that the issue of global warming is taken into account in the United Kingdom's position in so far as it relates to matters on the Council agenda.

Irradiated Food

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions have been held with the European Commission concerning the introduction of irradiated foodstuffs into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Recent discussions with the Commission have been concerned with the draft EC directive on this subject. In the course of these, the Government's proposals for the United Kingdom have been made clear to the Commission.

Aflatoxin

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will amend the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1982 to extend to wild birds the protection offered to captive birds in respect of aflatoxin levels in peanuts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Responsibility for the general protection of wild birds rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The enabling powers under which the feedingstuffs regulations are made do not cover the regulation of feed for wild birds.

However, during its regular contacts with the feed industry, my Department has drawn attention to the potential risks to wild birds of peanuts containing aflatoxin and the main manufacturers have undertaken to buy their supplies from sources which are unlikely to exceed the safety limits established for pets and farm animals.

Animal Exports

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made an assessment of the animal welfare implications of the increase in export of live animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Statutory controls ensure that all animals exported for fattening or slaughter are rested, fed and watered and inspected for fitness to travel at approved export lairages. These and other welfare safeguards apply to each animal irrespective of the level of exports.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of live animals exported for slaughter could be handled with existing abattoir capacity within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom slaughtering industry is able to cope with the demands currently placed on it, while the numbers of animals exported is a very small proportion of the number slaughtered. We would not expect the industry to have any difficulty coping with the number of animals exported live if necessary. Subject to the requirements of relevant legislation, the decision on whether to export animals or carcases is a matter for commercial judgment.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what factors he ascribes the increase in exports of live animals for slaughter in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Exports of sheep, which comprise almost all the animals exported from the United Kingdom for immediate slaughter, rose in 1989 as a result of the determination of our exporters to meet demand elsewhere in the European Community. The number of calves exported for veal production was also higher than in 1988, although not particularly high by historical standards. The level of these exports depends on the demand for veal, the availability of calves in the countries where that demand is high and the price of calves on the United Kingdom market.

Net Limitation Orders

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what net limitation orders in England and Wales are expected to come up for review within the next 12 months.

Mr. Curry: One net limitation order expires within the next 12 months, the South West Water Authority (Limitation of Salmon and Trout Netting Licences) Order 1980 applicable to the Rivers Taw and Torridge.

Drift Net Fishing

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he now expects to publish the report of the inquiry into the north-east drift net fishery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Scientists from my Department and DAFS are now completing their analysis of the data which have been collected for this review. We shall present a report to Parliament as soon as we can.

Water Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to ensure that dairy farmers comply with water pollution regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Water Act 1989 empowers the National Rivers Authority to prosecute any dairy farmer or other person who causes or knowingly permits the pollution of controlled waters. Similarly, it would be the NRA's responsibility to enforce proposed new regulations setting standards for the construction of silage, slurry and agricultural fuel oil containment facilities.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which English regions overspent on youth training and employment training in 1989-90; and by how much.

Mr. Nicholls: Regional expenditure plans and variances from them are for internal management purposes only.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking in 1990-91 to counteract any overspending by English regions on youth training and employment training in 1989-90.

Mr. Nicholls: Operational directors of the Training Agency are required to agree plans for youth training and employment training which are consistent with the resources available and the volumes of training planned for 1990-91.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the expenditure for each standard region, and for Great Britain as a whole, in both cash and real terms, by his Department, the employment service and the Training Agency, formerly the Manpower Services Commission, in each year since 1979-80 on (a) the youth training scheme, formerly the youth opportunities programme; (b) employment training, formerly community enterprise programme, community programme, training opportunities programmes and job training scheme; (c) the enterprise allowance scheme; (d) job clubs and (e) restart courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows expenditure on (a) youth training scheme, (b) employment training, (c) enterprise allowance scheme, (d) job clubs and (e) restart courses for Great Britain. A breakdown of expenditure by standard regions is not available.

Figures are shown at cash and constant, estimated, 1989-90 prices, calculated by use of the gross domestic product deflator index from the Chancellor's financial statement and Budget report published March 1990.

Figures include estimated administration costs for all years, except for job clubs and restart courses where administration costs are not separately available.

The Government remain committed to training and helping the unemployed find work.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances training and enterprise councils can allow their providers to charge YT or ET trainees for the provision of protective clothing and equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The TEC operating agreement provides mandatory requirements for the health, safety and welfare of trainees. In particular, it requires TECs to ensure provision of necessary protective clothing and equipment, so far as possible without charge to the trainee.

Earnings (Greater London)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the figures for average earnings for Greater London for each year from 1987 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information for full-time employees on adult rates of pay is published in table X5, part A of the 1989 new earnings survey report and in table X5, part B of the 1987 and 1988 reports. Figures on the same basis for males and females separately are published in tables 110 and 113 respectively of part E of the report for each year. Copies of the reports are in the Library.

Farm Accidents

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents there were on farms in each of the last 15 years to (a) employees, (b) self-employed, (c) children and (d) others according to each of the appropriate accident classification groups.

Mr. Nicholls: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Training Contracts

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the Training Agency and training managers being invited to terminate all contractual agreements by 30 April.

Mr. Nicholls: The Training Agency offered new contracts to employment training (ET) training agents and training managers from 30 April to assist training and enterprise councils to take over responsibility for the delivery of ET more easily, to establish improved ET eligibility rules and associated requirements for the management of separate budgets, to make available to ET providers new freedoms and flexibilities in the design and funding of training programmes, and to secure the proper management of resources available in 1990-91.

Factory Inspections

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fixed premises were registered with the Health and Safety Executive in each of the past 15 years; and how many of these were visited by a factory inspector in each year.

Mr. Nicholls: The following tables show the number of fixed premises registered with the Health and Safety Executive's factory, agricultural, mines and quarries inspectorates for the years for which information is available. Information about how many fixed premises were visited by a factory inspector is not available.

Year	Fixed premises registered[1]
[3]1978	280,716
1979	309,757
1980	318,936
1981	318,050

[4]1985	724,227
1986	720,243
1987	719,738
1988	707,474
1989	692,078

[1]The total for 1978 is for fixed premises registered with the factory inspectorate only. Premises registered with the mines and quarries inspectorate are included from 1979, with those registered with the agricultural inspectorate being included from 1984.
[2]The 1982 figure was first produced from a computerised database on the Department of Employment census. The database initially included premises for which the HSE was not the enforcing authority: this accounts for the high figures for 1982 and 1983.

Factory and Agriculture Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) factory and (b) agriculture inspectors by grade there were (i) in the field and (ii) in total on 31 March for each of the last 15 years; and what were the targets for each of those dates.

Mr. Nicholls: Information available about inspectors in post in past years is shown in the tables. On targets, I refer to my reply to the hon. Member on 8 November 1989; comparable figures for years before 1988 cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

[2] Agricultural Inspectors joined HSE from MAFF from March 1976, with the field force being in place by March 1977.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list each of the additional responsibilities taken on by (a) the agriculture and (b) the factory inspectorate in each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Nicholls: Over the past 15 years, the sphere of the Health and Safety Executive's agriculture and factory inspectors' responsibilities has extended in response to the developing nature of hazards arising out of work activity and the widening role of the Health and Safety Commission. Comprehensive information on these additional responsibilities as they occur year by year is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Agricultural Premises (Inspections)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many agricultural premises there were in each of the past 15 years; and how many of these were visited by Her Majesty's agriculture inspectorate in each year.

Mr. Nicholls: The following table shows the number of workplaces registered with the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate (AI) from 1984 to 1989 and the total number of visits made by AI inspectors between 1 April and 31 March for the years stated. Figures for earlier years are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Year	Number of workplaces registered	Number of visits
1983-84	266,000 (1 January 1984)	30,105
1984-85	319,567 (31 March 1985)	32,174
1985-86	311,558 (31 March 1986)	33,234
1986-87	309,223 (31 March 1987)	35,011
1987-88	297,051 (31 March 1988)	36,246
1988-89	282,374 (July 1989)	36,707

Radar Transmitters

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the standards set by the National Radiological Protection Board for safe levels of radioactive emissions by radar transmitters were established; at what level they are set; and whether he is satisfied that these standards are still safe in the light of experience gained since they were first established.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1989, the National Radiological Protection Board published guidance on restricting exposures to non-ionising radiation. The reference level for exposure to radar frequencies advised by NRPB is 50W per sq m averaged over a period of six minutes. Since radar emissions are usually pulsed there is an additional advised restriction that exposures to pulses of duration less than 50 microseconds in which the total energy exceeds 0·4 joules per sq m should be neither prolonged nor frequent. There has been no evidence since the publication of the guidance which would suggest that it is inadequate for the stated purpose.

Correspondence

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to reply to the letter of 20 March from the hon. Member for Western Isles regarding redundancy payments to former Clansman Tweed Ltd. employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have today replied to the hon. Gentleman's letter.

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the training agents and training managers by standard region, who received the letter from the Training Agency "Employment Training: Termination of Agreement and New Contract Arrangements 1990-91".

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The information requested is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of employment training places in 1990-91 and 1991-92 (a) for each of the standard regions and (b) the planned number of employment trainees in 1990-91 and 1991-92 and for each of the standard regions.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Plans for the number of ET places in each region are for management information purposes only.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the representations received after the Training Agency sent out the letter, "Employment Training: Termination of Agreement and New Contract Arrangements 1990-91."

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: No. My right hon. and learned Friend has received a small number of representations. Such representations are made in respect of particular ET contracts, and are therefore commercially confidential.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the training agents and training managers who have been contacted by the Training Agency as part of the recontracting process outlined in the letter from the Training Agency, "Employment Training: Termination of Agreement and New Contract Arrangements 1990-91."

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The information requested is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the organisations consulted prior to the Training Agency issuing the letter "Employment Training: Termination of Agreement and New Contract Arrangements 1990-91."

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: None.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the type of entrants to the employment training programme under mainstream and non-mainstream categories, (b) the total amount of expenditure for each of these categories for Great Britain and each of the standard regions in 1990-91 and 1991-92 and (c) the planned number of entrants for mainstream and non-mainstream categories in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The main groups of people who will be in the mainstream of those eligible for Employment Training are:

—people aged 18-60 who have been unemployed for 6 months or more including periods spent in custody;

—people with disabilities or who need training in literacy or numeracy skills or in English for speakers of other languages, regardless of length of unemployment.

—lone parents in receipt of Income Support for 6 months or more and whose youngest child is at school.

People in non-mainstream eligibility groups all of whom do not need to have been unemployed for 6 months, include:

—returners to the labour market;

—people wishing to train in skill shortages or in enterprise;

—victims of large scale redundancies (by agreement in specific cases).

(b) The ET budget for Great Britain will be allocated on the basis of 85 per cent. for new entrants to the mainstream category and a maximum of 15 per cent. for non-mainstream. There will be a maximum of 20 per cent. of expenditure for non-mainstream eligible people for individual Regions. ET expenditure plans for Great Britain have not yet been finalised. ET Regional expenditure plans for 1990-91 and for 1991-92 are for internal management purposes only.

(c) No limits are being placed on the number of entrants into the mainstream and non-mainstream categories.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all of the changes to employment training contained in the letter from the Training Agency entitled "Employment Training: Termination of Agreement and New Contract Arrangements 1990-91."

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The changes in the letter were those announced in the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) on 5 March 1990 at column 507.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there are any proposals to remove the £10 a week training allowance to employment training trainees.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Trainees will continue to receive an allowance £10 greater than their previous benefit entitlement.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the single unit price per trainee as contained in the letter sent by the Training Agency, "Employment Training: Termination of Agreement and New Contract Arrangements 1990-91."

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The letter "Employment Training: Termination of Agreement and New Contract Arrangements" gave no figures for, or details of, unit price per trainee.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for Great Britain and the standard regions (a) the total numbers joining youth training/YTS in each of the years from 1987-88 to 1989-90 inclusive and the planned numbers for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 and (b) the numbers progressing to a second year in each of the years 1987-88 to 1989-90 inclusive and those expected to progress to a second year in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The following tables show the number of young people starting youth training scheme training nationally and by region, the planned number of entrants nationally, and the number of trainees progressing to a second year nationally and by region to YTS/youth training in the years requested. Planning figures are not available at a regional level, and there are no national figures for trainees expected to progress to a second year.

Government Expenditure

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage distribution of total Government expenditure on employment and training in each of the years 1978-79 to 1989-90.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The information requested is contained in table 21.2.12 of chapter 21—"Supplementary Analyses and Index" of "The Government's Expenditure Plans, 1990-91 to 1992-93", Her Majesty's Treasury, January 1990, Cm. 1021, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the expenditure by planning total for each of the years 1984-85 to 1989-90 inclusive, and the estimated planning total for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 in both cash and real terms.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of disabled people upon leaving the sheltered placement scheme subsequently (i) take up open employment, (ii) have no paid employment and rely on state benefits, (iii) move to some other form of sheltered employment and (iv) join a training scheme or take up further education.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 April 1990]: In the year ending 31 March 1989, 14 per cent. of the 720 people leaving the sheltered placement scheme took up open employment. A further 0·4 per cent. moved to some other form of sheltered employment.

We do not have information in the form requested on others who left for a variety of reasons.

DEFENCE

WINTEX 89

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the three logistic lead-in exercises which preceded Exercise WINTEX 89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The logistic exercises preceding WINTEX 89 were Proud Amazon 89, Puff Adder 89 and Prompt Actor 89. These command post exercises provided a lead-in to WINTEX 89 and practised those national transition-to-war logistic plans and procedures which the setting of WINTEX 89 precluded.

Baron Herman von Richthofen

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be financing Baron Herman von Richthofen's visits to Royal Air Force bases in April; and if he will list by location the bases to be visited.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Baron von Richthofen, the West German ambassador to the United Kingdom, paid a two-day visit to RAF Cottesmore and RAF Wittering earlier this month. The costs of the visit have been met by the Ministry of Defence and the West German embassy.

Stealth Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at which Royal Air Force bases the F-117A stealth military jet aircraft has landed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

HILEX 88

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of United Kingdom (a) military and (b) civil participants in HILEX 88.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HILEX 13 was cancelled due to the pressure of other activities at NATO headquarters in the lead-up to an alliance summit which was scheduled to take place during the period of the exercise—28 February to 4 March 1988.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to replace the NATO crisis management exercise HILEX.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to replace HILEX 14.

Exercise Cold Steel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the proposed Exercise Cold Steel is part of a series of military based regional home defence exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Bomb (Accidental Release)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 5 April, Official Report, column 832, what was the approximate location of the accidentally released bomb; and what destructive power the spotting charge it contained had.

Mr. Neubert: The practice bomb was accidentally released north of RAF Bruggen in northern Germany. The spotting charge, which was designed to detonate on impact, had sufficient power only to initiate the release of a small smoke signal.

Radar Transmitters, Pembroke

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research he has undertaken to ensure that the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitters on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire will not interfere with the operation of RAF Brawdy and other adjacent military installations.

Mr. Alan Clark: Based on the known characteristics of the over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be sited at St. David's airfield, and its planned mode of operation during its two-year trial, the Ministry of Defence is satisfied that there will be no interference with the operation of RAF Brawdy and other establishments, or with existing navigation aids in the area.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has of the extra vehicular traffic which will be generated during the construction and operation of the proposed over-the-horizon radar on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: Such estimates will be included in the independent environmental impact assessment to be undertaken later this year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 23 April, if he will give fuller details of the dangers at close quarters from high-frequency electromagnetic radiation which would be experienced within the boundaries of the proposed over-the-horizon radar on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, the nature of the danger, the distance at which it is effective and the measures taken to protect employees within the site.

Mr. Alan Clark: High-frequency electromagnetic radiation can cause warming within the body and can therefore cause damage to body tissues. An area within which high-frequency radiation levels would be too high for safe access will exist in front of the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be sited at St. David's airfield. This area, which will be contained well within the boundary of the airfield will be fenced to prevent access.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, as part of the consultation process about his proposals for an over-the-horizon radar transmitter on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, he will arrange for scientific advice, independent of his Department, to be provided to local residents on the safety of the proposed installation.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes; such advice will form part of the independent environmental impact assessment to be undertaken later this year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the research undertaken by the United States armed forces into electromagnetic interference, otherwise referred to as hazards of electromagnetic radiation to ordnance or hazards of electromagnetic radiation to fuel; and whether this research will be taken into account in the operation of the proposed over-the-horizon radar on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: Considerable research has been undertaken both in the United Kingdom and in the United States into electromagnetic interference (EMI) with weapons systems or with flammable atmospheres. The United Kingdom's own stringent standards relating to EMI were taken into account in considering the siting of the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter at St. David's airfield. The terms "hazards of electromagnetic radiation to ordnance" and "hazards of electromagnetic radiation to fuel" are not used in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give technical details of the high frequencies proposed for the operation of the over-the-horizon radar installation which he proposes for location on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be sited at St. David's airfield radiates energy in the high-frequency band between 5 and 28 MHz at a power of 200 kW.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 23 April, if he will detail the appropriate Welsh Office regulations he intends to follow in undertaking an environmental impact assessment of the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: An environmental impact assessment relating to the proposed siting of an over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, will be carried out in accordance with the procedures laid down in Welsh Office circular 23/88.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange for a static exhibition explaining the proposals for an over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be displayed in the city of St. David's, Pembrokeshire, as part of the consultation procedure he has announced to enable local residents to consider the proposals.

Mr. Alan Clark: An appropriate exhibition will form part of the public presentation of our detailed proposals planned for later this year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the proposed installation of over-the-horizon radar transmitters on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, will be monitored by the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Alan Clark: No; but the independent environmental impact assessment, to be undertaken later this year, will have regard to the National Radiological Protection Board's guidelines covering the safety of installations of this type.

Radar Base, Brawdy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 30 March, Official Report, columns 328-29, if he will make a further statement on that part of his answer concerning the obtaining of the necessary approvals.

Mr. Alan Clark: We shall be submitting a formal notice of proposed development to the appropriate planning authority, in this case the Pembrokeshire Coast national park, later this year in accordance with the procedure set out in Welsh Office circular 37/84. This will be supported by a full environmental impact assessment.

Radar Bases

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from Mr. Roger Coghill concerning the alleged incidence of cancer near to Polish radar bases, the alleged higher incidence of Down's syndrome children in the vicinity of radar installations and allegations that clear proximity to radar bases in China led to a higher than average frequency of immune system deficiences.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have not received any representations from Mr. Coghill specifically on these subjects.

Military Installations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what powers his Department has to override the decision of a national park authority set to grant permission for military installations proposed for siting in a national park.

Mr. Alan Clark: Where objections to an application for development lead to it being rejected, including where those objections are by a national park authority, the developer has the right of appeal to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment or my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, as appropriate.

Where such objections relate to a development by my Department, it would be for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to decide whether or not simply to refer that proposal to the Secretary of State for the Environment or the Secretary of State for Wales.

Over-the-horizon Radar

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to any experiments in over-the-horizon radar that have been conducted by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China are known to possess over-the-horizon radar technology, and a small number of equipments are believed to be in existence. We are, however, unaware of any detailed experiments that may have been conducted by such installations.

St. David's Airfield, Pembrokeshire

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Church in Wales and others concerning the historic or religious significance of the site of the former St. David's airfield.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have received no such representations.

Radiation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cash is set aside within his Department for (a) research into radiation and (b) health and safety work related to radiation; and what is the proportion of this expenditure to the total budget.

Mr. Neubert: Separate information is not maintained on the cost of health and safety work related to radiation or on the cost of research into radiation.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum total radiation dose recorded for any Rosyth dockyard workers registered in the defence radiological protection services record-keeping system; and over what period it was accrued; and what are the 20 highest doses recorded.

Mr. Neubert: The maximum lifetime total radiation dose for a worker currently registered in the DRPS's record-keeping system is 595·89 mSv. This total dose accrued over the period 14 December 1964 to 31 December 1989.

The 20 highest radiation doses recorded for workers so registered are as follows:

Highest Radiation Doses—Rosyth Dockyard

Cumulative Dose (mSv)
595·89
479·20
478·22
452·68
439·11
403·83
401·59
393·76
374·00
369·33
368·40

342·72
328·71
314·39
311·17
300·47
300·24
299·36

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedure exists for individual workers after exceeding recommended radiation dosages in any one year.

Mr. Neubert: In the event of an overexposure of a dockyard worker to ionising radiation, action would be taken in accordance with regulations 29 and 30 of the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distribution of total radiation exposure for Rosyth dockyard workers in the ranges (a) 0 to 5 mSv, (b) 5 to 10, (c) 10 to 15, (d) 15 to 20, (e) 20 to 25, (f) 25 to 30, (g) 30 to 35, (h) 35 to 40, (i) 40 to 45, (j) 45 to 50, (k) greater than 50, (l) greater than 100, (m) greater than 200, (n) greater than 300, (o) greater than 400, (p) greater than 500, (q) greater than 600, (r) greater than 700 and (s) greater than 750, in numbers and in terms of percentage of the overall work force.

Mr. Neubert: A breakdown of cumulative radiation exposure for workers currently registered in DRPS's record-keeping system as employed at Rosyth dockyards is as follows:

Cumulative radiation exposures
Rosyth dockyard

Dose range (mSv)	Number of persons	Percentage of workforce
0 to 5	63	1·25
5 to 10	46	0·91
10 to 15	48	0·95
15 to 20	31	0·61
20 to 25	27	0·53
25 to 30	20	0·40

Greater than 100 (100 to 200)	93	1·84
Greater than 200 (200 to 300)	42	0·83
Greater than 300 (300 to 400)	12	0·23
Greater than 400 (400 to 500)	6	0·12
Greater than 500 (500 to 600)	1	0·02
Greater than 600 (600 to 700)	0	0·00
Greater than 700 (700 to 750)	0	0·00
Greater than 750	0	0·00

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Ministry of Defence records for Rosyth dockyard are complete in itemising exposure levels for every worker for as long as he or she has worked in the dockyard.

Mr. Neubert: The records in question comply with the requirements of the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985.

Iraq Contract

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when International Military Services was made aware of the Iraqi export order placed with Sheffield Forgemasters and Walter Somers;

(2) what was the day on which his Department was first aware of the military implications of the Iraqi contract;

(3) what was the day on which it became known that Dr. Gerald Bull had conceived plans involving piping for a gun or launcher;

(4) when the Defence Export Services Organisation secretariat was made aware of the Iraqi order with Sheffield Forgemasters and Walter Somers;

(5) what was the day on which his Department was first made aware that Iraq was acquiring export material for a major gun or launcher.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the light of the charges laid against an individual yesterday and in the light of the continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Iraq (Military Trade)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what special unit exists within his Department to examine aspects of military trade with Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: A group of military and civilian experts meets as required to assess the military significance of export licence applications for Iran and Iraq.

Defence Select Committee (Leak Allegations)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much it cost to send MOD police to investigate the alleged leak of documents supplied to the Select Committee on Defence in 1989; and if he will break this figure down into (a) overnight accommodation, (b) wages or salaries and (c) travel costs;

(2) whether he authorised two police inspectors to travel to London to investigate a report in the Greenock Telegraph about a report by the MOD Police Federation submitted to a House of Commons Select Committee.

Mr. Neubert: The responsibility for initiating police investigations is a constabulary matter, and not one in which Ministers have any role. In this instance, investigations were begun on the authority of a senior Ministry of Defence police officer, who, in good faith, believing that material contained in a press article could only have originated from a breach of security, sent two CID officers to London to make inquiries. Further checks, however, confirmed that no breach of security had been committed. The investigation was therefore immediately cancelled. The extra costs involved were confined to fares and normal allowances.

Bishopton Royal Ordnance Factory

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Strathclyde Police Federation was consulted over the withdrawal of MOD police from Bishopton royal ordnance factory and the armed coverage to be provided by Strathclyde police.

Mr. Neubert: Any consultation with the Strathclyde branch of the Scottish Police Federation over future arrangements at Bishopton concerning their force would be for the chief constable of Strathclyde.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times the MOD police has been called to investigate intruders at the Bishopton royal ordnance factory since 1985.

Mr. Neubert: Since 1 January 1986 there have been three such occasions.

"British Defence Policy 1990-91"

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of "British Defence Policy 1990-91" were issued before a printing error on page 5 was discovered; how many second copies he expects to issue; and what is the total cost of printing and distributing both copies of this publication.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect to distribute approximately 100,000 copies of "British Defence Policy 1990-91". Design and printing costs will be of the order of £90,000 ex VAT. The publication is distributed in a variety of ways, internally and externally, and it is not possible to put a figure on distribution costs. The printing error was contained in an initial batch of 2,000 about half of which were distributed. A total of 2,000 corrected replacement copies were produced at no extra cost to the Ministry of Defence.

Adjutant-General

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in his review of functions and services in the Department of the Adjutant-General; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This review has now advanced to the point where my right hon. Friend has decided in principle that an Adjutant-General's Corps should be formed. Further work will now proceed to give effect to this decision and, in particular, to establish which existing corps and functions should be included in this new corps.

The corps to be considered are the Royal Army Chaplains Department, the Corps of Royal Military Police, the Royal Army Pay Corps, the Military Provost Staff Corps, the Royal Army Educational Corps and the Army Legal Corps.

In addition, the staff clerk functions currently carried out by members of the Royal Army Ordnance Corps and the Women's Royal Army Corps will be considered for inclusion in the new corps.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Stormont research laboratory on the spread of bovine tuberculosis.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Copies of relevant papers have been placed in the Library. The papers include articles published in veterinary journals, a departmental press release and the Department of Agriculture's annual report on research and development 1988-89 which contains relevant material.

Replacement Dwellings

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many replacement dwellings have been approved by the planning authorities in each of the last 10 years; and in how many cases the new dwellings were more than 100 ft away from the site of the original house which was to have been replaced.

Mr. Needham: In the 10 years from 1980 to 1989 planning permission has been given for the following numbers of replacement dwellings:

	Number
1980	613
1981	548
1982	330
1983	419
1984	435
1985	441
1986	412
1987	529
1988	443
1989	[1]530

[1] Provisional.

The other information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, and (e) sextuplets, born in Northern Ireland in 1989; and what was the total number of maternities in that year.

Mr. Needham: The information will not be available until the end of May 1990, when a copy will be sent to the hon. Member.

Police Authority

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which member of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland was appointed following inter-governmental consultation between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Republic of Eire under article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and what was the period of the appointment.

Mr. Cope: It is not our policy to reveal the identity of members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland. Nor is it our practice to disclose whether any views have been put forward under article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement on the composition of individual public bodies such as the police authority.

Killyleagh Yacht Marinas Inquiry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the results will be published of the public inquiry held in June 1989 into three proposals for yacht marinas with associated development in Killyleagh.

Mr. Needham: I expect consideration by the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland of the Planning Appeals Commission's report on the public inquiry will be completed and decisions issued on the three planning applications within the next month.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres currently subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 24 April 1990] The information requested is as follows:

Number of farms: 123.
Number of sheep and lambs: approximately 33,000.
Area of land: 21,612 acres.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in Northern Ireland for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990 including the number of sheep with levels of radioactivity (i) over 4,000 bq/kg, (ii) 3,000 to 3,999, (iii) 2,000 to 2,999, (iv) 1,000 to 1,999, (v) 500 to 999, and (iv) below 499; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Over 4,000	3,000—3,999	2,000—2,999	1,000—1,999	500—999	Below 499	Total

1990	—	—	—	1	37	1,249	1,287

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of sheep sampled for radioactivity in each county in Northern Ireland for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) to date in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	County
	Antrim	Down	Londonderry	Armagh	Tyrone	Fermanagh
1986	65	33	36	13	35	13
1987	3,268	136	6,149	78	275	80

1989	9,327	—	15,123	—	—	—
1990	503	—	784	—	—	—

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in slaughterhouses in each county in Northern Ireland in each year since 1986; how many were found to be above the 1,000 bq/kg limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 24 April 1990]: No sheep monitored at slaughterhouses were found to be above the 1,000 bq/kg limit.

The other information requested is as follows:

UDR Soldiers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Ulster Defence Regiment soldiers were killed by terrorists on 9 April; if he will now embark upon a new security policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 20 April 1990]: Four members of the Ulster Defence Regiment were murdered at the Ballydugan road near Downpatrick on 9 April 1990 by the Provisional IRA. The Government fully support the efforts of the Chief Constable of the RUC, assisted by the General Officer Commanding to bring to justice those responsible for this appalling crime. Security policy in Northern Ireland is under continuous review and the Government and their security advisers will take into account any facts emerging from the investigation of these murders.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Polish Students

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what provision is made for Polish students to study in the United Kingdom;

(2) what funding exists to help Polish students study in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: In addition to the overseas research students awards scheme, which is competitive and administered on behalf of the Department of Education and Science by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, Polish students are eligible for support under various schemes run by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. I understand that for 1990-91 the FCO expect to make available some £150,000 under their scholarship and awards scheme, to enable some 37 Polish students to study in Britain—some in conjunction with the Soros Foundation. If approved by the Council of Ministers of the European Communities the TEMPUS programme will also be available to support Polish students wishing to study in this country.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Polish students are currently studying in advanced education in the United Kindom; and how many are likely to be studying over the next three years.

Mr. Jackson: In academic year 1988-89—the latest for whih data are available—53 full-time students domiciled in Poland were taking higher education courses in British universities, polytechnics and other publicly-funded colleges. No forecasts are available for the next three years but numbers are likely to grow, as a result of the Government's own programmes and of the introduction of the proposed TEMPUS programme currently before the Council of Ministers of the European Communities.

Teacher Training

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent intiatives have been taken by his Department to encourage more students to study shortage subjects during initial teacher training.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has supported expenditure of over £56 million since July 1986 on a range of measures to combat teacher shortages. These measures include a bursary scheme to improve recruitment to initial teacher training in the shortage subjects; national advertising and publicity, spearheaded by the Teaching as a career unit; taster courses, to enable those seeking a career change to obtain some experience of teaching; new initial and in-service training courses; and support for local initiatives to attract mature new entrants and former serving teachers. The majority of these initiatives are focussed on the shortage subjects.

My right hon. Friend announced on 12 March his intention to increase funding for the bursary scheme. He proposes to extend it to include modern foreign languages alongside the existing subjects of craft, design and technology, chemistry, mathematics, technology and physics, and to raise the level of the bursary from £1,300 to £1,500 for all subjects except physics where the bursary will be increased to £2,000.

United Nations Youth Forum on the Environment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has made available any grant in aid to assist students in schools and institutions of higher and further education to attend the special United Nations youth forum on the environment to be held in New York on 11 May.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has received no applications for assistance to attend the forum.

Teacher Appraisal

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress is being made on the introduction of the appraisal of teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The consultation period on the recommendations of the national steering group on appraisal ended very recently. My right hon. Friend is now considering the comments submitted, including those on the appropriate timetable for bringing in regulations requiring the introduction of appraisal for all teachers in England and Wales. In the meantime, we plan to issue guidance, taking into account the response to the consultation, on which LEAs and schools can draw.

Assisted Places

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of assisted place pupils at each school in the scheme and the number of assisted place pupils from each local education authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 15 February, Official Report, columns 319-22. No statistics are available for the number of assisted place pupils from each local education authority area.

Head Teachers

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision he is making when determining the pay and conditions of head teachers for 1990-91 for those head teachers of small rural schools who teach a full timetable, but who also need time to assimilate new Government initiatives, particularly those associated with the implementation of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The pay of head teachers will increase by between 9·9 per cent. and 10·9 per cent. as a result of the implementation of the recommendations contained in the third report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Natural Resources Institute

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made since 1988 by the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute of the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: Progress has been made in three main areas:

(a) Relocation of the institute on to a single site at Chatham began in 1988 and will be completed shortly. The institute was formerly housed on eight widely scattered sites across southern England. Relocation has enabled the institute to move from ill-adapted buildings into facilities which will serve its needs well into the next century.

(b) Within the Overseas Development Administration, the institute became an executive agency on 1 April 1990. Its principal objectives are to maintain its international record and comparative advantage as a source of multi-disciplinary, problem-solving expertise; to reflect in its programme the particular needs of the British aid programme; to undertake work for other donors; and to strengthen links with scientific institutions and universities in the United Kingdom and overseas.

(c) The institute's first corporate plan has been published, covering the three years 1989-90 to 1991-92. Copies are available in the Library of the House. The plan has been prepared as a response to the wider mandate of the unified institute, to the opportunities which arise from the move to Chatham and to the priorities of the ODA's renewable natural resources research strategy. The institute has reorganised its entire operational programme into three strategy areas which broadly correspond to stages of the agricultural production cycle—resource assessment and farming systems, integrated pest management and food science and crop utilisation.

The purpose of this restructuring is to improve coherence and effectiveness by planning and managing related activities together.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report all papers published and conferences attended in 1990 by staff of the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute.

Mrs. Chalker: The Natural Resources Institute publishes about 200 hundred papers a year of which about 150 are in international journals. They cover work which promotes and sustains natural resource productivity through land use planning for agriculture, forestry and conservation, applied research into pest and disease control and developing the storage, processing and marketing of agricultural and forest products.

All publications are listed in the institute's annual report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Institute staff have attended 93 conferences overseas and 127 in the United Kingdom during the past year.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training courses are undertaken by the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute.

Mrs. Chalker: The institute runs formal specialist courses in the United Kingdom for overseas professionals on mycotoxins, the storage of durable agricultural products in the tropics, post-harvest technology of fruits, vegetables and root crops, food microbiology, analysis of soil and plant materials and analysis of pesticide residues. Also during 1989-90, 19 courses were held in developing countries. In addition, about 50 scientists from developing countries come to the institute each year for individual training attachments. Most of the institute's projects contain informal, on-the-job training components.

Burma

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid and trade provisions relate to British companies doing business with Burma; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None, Sir. Disbursements were completed on the last case involving the aid and trade provision in Burma in 1989, and no further ATP support is presently contemplated.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Taxes, Germany

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to ensure that the Federal Republic of Germany conforms with articles 76 and 95 of the European Community treaty by not imposing additional taxes on heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: The EC Commission announced on 10 April that it would serve on the German Government a letter under the procedure laid down in article 169 of the EC treaty. It is understood it will state that the Commission considers the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under articles 5, 76 and 95, and is the first step in a process leading to the European Court of Justice. The United Kingdom strongly supports this action.

Kent-Hampshire Motorway

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has made an assessment of the impact on traffic levels on the A27 Folkestone to Honiton trunk road as a result of the construction of a new Kent-Hampshire motorway; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to construct a new motorway from Kent to Hampshire; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether a provisional route for a new Kent-Hampshire motorway has been decided upon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans for a new motorway from Kent to Hampshire. The possible need for a new east-west route has not been established.

Crash Barriers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what criteria the decision was taken to fit crash barriers along the central reservation of the A27 between Kingston and Falmer; what is the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: For reasons of road user safety, it is our policy to provide central reserve safety fences on all dual carriageway trunk roads where justified by the volume of traffic using the road. They are being provided on all new trunk roads and those existing roads which are subject to major maintenance and renewal works. For other existing roads, priority is given to those with traffic flows in the range of 18,000 to 36,000 vehicles per day. The A27 between Kingston and Falmer meets the criterion, with traffic flows of about 32,000 vehicles per day. The cost of the work is £158,277.

Drink-Drive Offenders

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he proposes to pursue the major experiment in the use of retraining for drink-drive offenders proposed in the White Paper "The Road User and The Law"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We have today issued a consultation paper inviting comments on the details of how such a scheme might work. As indicated in our White Paper "The Road User and The Law"—Cm. 576—we want the courts to have forms of disposal available that will improve offenders' driving behaviour. This will cut the risks not only to themselves but to all other road users. Experience here and overseas suggests that retraining courses can help offenders change their attitudes to drinking and driving. The three-year experiment we propose will provide a basis for assessing this.

We are inviting organisations who might be interested in running such courses to contact us now.

Wave-piercing Catamaran

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety of the wave-piercing catamaran to be introduced on the Portsmouth/Cherbourg service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that the vessel in question will be registered in the Bahamas and it is primarily for that Administration to consider whether the standards of safety for passengers and crew are adequate. However, because the design of these craft is novel and they require exemption from internationally agreed standards, the Department has called for technical and operational details to make its own assessment. The craft will not be permitted to carry passengers from a United Kingdom port until I am satisfied that it is safe to do so.

Exeter-Plymouth Link

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends announcing details of the proposed study of the future Exeter-Plymouth road link and second road crossing of the Tamar estuary as outlined in his May 1989 roads for prosperity strategy; and what will be the terms of reference for these studies and their projected timetable.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 24 April 1990]: I hope to be able to announce details of the proposed study by the middle of the year. The terms of reference are still under consideration and the projected timetable will be a matter to be agreed with the consultant when appointed.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Spending

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those authorities which are neither contributors to nor receivers from the safety net, with their community charges and percentages over or under their standard spending assessments.

Mr. Chope: The information can be derived from the information placed in the Library of the House on 25 April.

Pollution Control

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his plans for introducing integrated pollution control under part I of the Environmental Bill.

Mr. Trippier: On the assumption that the Environmental Protection Bill is given Royal Assent later this year, my right hon. Friend intends to introduce the new system of integrated pollution control (IPC) in England and Wales on 2 January 1991. All new processes prescribed for IPC, and all existing processes which are to be substantially altered, will be required to apply for an authorisation under part I of the Bill from that date. Existing processes other than those which are substantially altered will be brought sector by sector into the IPC system by means of a phased programme. The first sector, combustion processes, which will include the most significant plant covered by the large combustion plants directive, will be required to seek an authorisation from 2 January 1991.

I am today placing in the Library copies of the proposed programme for introducing IPC, which also gives details of our proposed timetable for the various preparatory stages of introducing the system, including the issue of the necessary regulations for public consultation and the drafting of the guidance for industry and others.

The guidance will include a general description of the new system. I am also today placing in the Library the draft of the section of that guidance setting out the Government's general interpretation of the concept of 'best available techniques not entailing excessive cost' (BATNEEC) that is applied under part I of the Bill so that the release of certain substances into the environment is prevented or minimised and that substances released from prescribed processes are rendered harmless.

International Waste Disposal Fair

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he, or a member of his Department, will be attending the international waste disposal fair in Munich on 22 to 26 May.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Yes, I hope to do so, since the fair will be an important showcase for British manufacturers of waste disposal and recycling equipment.

Land (Dereliction)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is currently taking to prevent land becoming derelict.

Mr. Moynihan: The derelict land policy review published by my Department in September 1989 indicated that the Government are considering a number of new measures which would reduce the amount of land becoming derelict. The Department will publish in due course a further consultation paper setting out these proposals in more detail. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 4 April 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) about an agreement with British Coal under which it would accept responsibility for restoration of collieries and tips closing in the next four years.

Rivers (Pollution)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the grant to the National Rivers Authority to assist in pollution monitoring.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 24 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett), at column 121.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made for advice to be obtained on proposals to release genetically modified organisms to the environment.

Mr. Trippier: At present, advice is obtained from a sub-committee of the Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on genetic manipulation and from my Department's interim advisory committee on introductions.

I have agreed, in conjunction with the Health and Safety Commission, that these two committees will be replaced by a single committee to give advice on all aspects of the safety of proposed releases to the environment of genetically modified, and other novel, organisms. I announced during Second Reading of the Environmental Protection Bill on 15 January, Official Report, column 42 that Professor John Beringer of Bristol university has agreed to be chairman of a new committee to advise on release in relation to the new legislation. I anticipate that the new committee, whose establishment I am announcing today, will evolve in due course into the committee to advise on the new legislation.

The full terms of reference of the committee will be to advise the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, Secretaries of State, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and other bodies as appropriate, on all aspects of the human and environmental health and safety of the introduction into the United Kingdom environment of genetically modified and other novel organisms; and in particular to advise on proposals for specific introductions, on research needs, and on proposed regulations and written guidance.

I am pleased to announce that members of the committee will include people from a wide range of backgrounds, including different scientific disciplines, both sides of industry, local authorities, farmers and environmental experts.

The members will be:

Name	Expertise	Organisation
Prof. J. E. Beringer (Chairman)	Microbial ecologist and geneticist	University of Bristol
Sir Kenneth Blaxter, FRS	Applied biologist and agronomist	Former Director, Rowett Research Institute
Prof. M. P. Hassel, FRS	Population biologist	Imperial College
Prof. D. Onions	Veterinary biologist	University of Glasgow
Prof. M. Williamson	Biologist and ecologist	University of York
Prof. A. Atkinson	Microbiologist	Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton Down
Prof. D. Jeffries	Human virologist/medic	St. Bartholomew's Hospital
Dr. D. R. Langslow	Biologist and ecologist	Chief Scientist, Nature Conservancy Council
Dr. D. Robinson	Plant virologist	Scottish Crops Research Institute
Dr. C. Gliddon	Plant population geneticist	University of Bangor, North Wales
Dr. A. Watkinson	Plant ecologist	University of East Anglia
Dr. M. Elliott	Freshwater biologist	Institute of Freshwater Ecology
Mr. J. E. Moffitt	Cattle breeding and arable farmer	Stockswell, Northumberland
Prof. N. J. Poole	Microbiologist	ICI Seeds
Dr. P. G. Boseley	Molecular biologist	Director of Research and Development, Agriculture Genetics Co. Ltd., Cambridge
Dr. G. M. Schofield	Microbiologist	Project Leader, Expert Systems, Unilever
Dr. J. Kinderlerer	Biochemist	University of Sheffield
Ms. J. Hill	Environmentalist	Green Alliance
Ms. D. Haber	Health and safety	Manufacturing Science and Finance Union
Mr. P. Hurst	Health and safety	Transport and General Workers Union
Mr. C. F. Franks	Borough Environmental Health Officer	Brighton

One other member, an agricultural scientist, is still to be appointed.

Structure Plans

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied that the availability of adequate water resources is fully taken into account in the preparation of structure plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The memorandum accompanying Department of the Environment circular 22/84 explains that local authorities are required to have regard to the likely availability of resources when preparing structure plan proposals. This includes water resources, and local authorities will wish to consult the National Rivers Authority and water and sewerage undertakers during plan preparation. The explanatory memorandum accompanying structure plan proposals should include an indication of the assumptions made about the resources likely to be available for carrying out the plan's policies and proposals.

Fish Farms

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the General Development Order for England and Wales along the lines of that now applying to Scotland in so far as fish farms are concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The Government are awaiting the report of the Select Committee on Agriculture before deciding whether there is any need to change the extent of planning control over fish farming in England and Wales.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report in relation to each local authority in England and the average for all local authorities in England for the financial year 1990-91 (a) the level of net expenditure per head of population, (b) the level of net expenditure per head of population as set out in the Government's assessment of expenditure need, (c) the level of income per head of population from personal standard and collective community charges, (d) the income from revenue support grant per head of population, (e) the income from non-domestic rates per head of population and (f) the income from other sources per head of population.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The available figures for all local authorities in England are as follows:

Average community charge	363
Demands and precepts	[1]918
Standard spending assessment	[1]836
Revenue support grant	[1]266
Non domestic rate income	[1]293

[1] £ per head of relevant population.

The amount of non-domestic rate income per head of relevant population is the same for every authority. Corresponding information for individual authorities is given or can be derived from the information placed in the Library of the House on 25 April 1990.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether residents of sheltered housing schemes are eligible for either transitional relief or special transitional relief under the poll tax provisions; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 April 1990]: In general, transitional relief is automatically paid at 100 per cent. of the difference between the assumed rates bill for 1989-90 on the property in which the chargepayer lives and either one or two units, according to household size, of the assumed community charge in 1990-91 plus a threshold of £156. Certain chargepayers who at 1 April 1990 were of pensionable age or were disabled and who, among other special conditions, paid neither rates nor rent during 1989-90 may apply for a special form of transitional relief which reduces their liability to £156 plus any difference between the actual and assumed charge. Whether the occupiers of any sheltered housing scheme are entitled to one of these forms of relief would depend on how these rules apply in their particular circumstances. Any individual or couple living in sheltered accommodation may, of course, be entitled to community charge benefit if they have a low income.

ENERGY

British Coal

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the British Coal Corporation to complete its review of its business prospects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that work is in progress on the corporation's consideration of its future business strategy, and that it will be completed as soon as practicable.

Offshore Wave Power

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian of 23 April, Official Report, column 97, what specific changes to the assessment of offshore wave power costs have been notified to the public by the energy technology support unit recently; and what is the revised official assessment of the cost of large scale duck wave power devices in pounds per kilowatt hour.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No such assessment has yet been concluded. A preliminary report from a contractor on methodology for costings of renewable energy has recently been made available to interested parties in a revised version taking into account comments received on an earlier version. Until the full study on prospects for wave energy referred to in my earlier answer has been completed, revised official assessments of the costs of wave power will not be available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider paying income support directly into claimants' bank accounts or building society.

Mr. Scott: The facility to have benefit paid directly into a bank account is restricted to beneficiaries paid by computer because a transfer of magnetic tapes is required to effect the payment to a bank. As income support is paid clerically in most local social security offices, an automated payment facility cannot be made available at present.

However, we anticipate that when the computerisation of income support is completed next year, we will be able to offer this facility as part of our scheduled programme of improvements.

Retired and Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received over the error in British Coal information in assessing current earnings for claims by retired and redundant mineworkers for the reduced earnings allowance; and if he will make a statement.

(2) how many redundant and retired mineworkers have been refused benefit under the reduced earnings allowance scheme because of the error in the current earnings assessment provided by British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are aware of one representation involving one case which was revised on appeal.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has given to local offices where claims have been made by retired and redundant mineworkers and have been refused on inaccurate evidence given by British Coal on current earnings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: It would be inappropriate to issue advice because decisions on claims for reduced earnings allowance are a matter for the independent statutory authorities and not the Secretary of State.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is intending to take to alert redundant and retired mineworkers who have lost benefit under the reduced earnings allowance scheme because of incorrect figures provided by British Coal when assessing current earnings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: None. We are aware of neither national nor local problems arising out of the arrangements with British Coal.

DEFENCE

HILEX

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether previous NATO exercises in the HILEX series have included the exercising of national home and civil defence crisis procedures.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The series of HILEX exercises have been designed to test the alliance's consultation and collective decision-making machinery in a crisis.

Exercise Bright Fire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the date, purpose and scope of Exercise Bright Fire 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exercise Bright Fire was a two-phase exercise held in September and October of last year and was designed to test home defence communications across the United Kingdom.

Heat Injuries

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action has been taken by his Department's chief of public relations concerning the BBC television programme entitled "Taking Liberties" about heat injuries in the services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The chief of public relations has raised with the BBC the Ministry of Defence's concerns about the balance of this programme.

Iran and Iraq (Commercial Links)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what special initiatives were taken within his Department and particularly within the DESO to promote or examine the prospects of commercial links with both Iran and Iraq following the end of the war between those two nations.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department and the defence export services organisation within it have continued to work in accordance with the guidelines for exports to Iran and Iraq as announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Foreign Secretary on 29 October 1985, at column 450.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Paul Malone

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Attorney-General if he will inquire into the disappearance from Chester Crown court, of handwritten interview records, in the case of the trial of Paul Malone in March 1987; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Three handwritten interview records were produced as exhibits during the trial of Paul Malone. Two remain in the possession of the crown court at Chester and the third, which was released to the discipline and complaints department of the West Yorkshire police on 25 August 1988, remains in the custody of the West Yorkshire metropolitan police.

HEALTH

Leukaemia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of cases of children developing (a) leukaemia and (b) non-Hodgkins lymphoma, where a parent worked in (i) farming, (ii) chemicals, (iii) iron and steel, (iv) the nuclear industry, (v) coal mining and (vi) other occupations in each of the last four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

EC Food Hygiene Directive

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of his discussions with the European Commission on the draft food hygiene directive.

Mr. Freeman: The draft "Food Hygiene" directive has not yet been submitted by the Commission to the Council and there is currently no timetable for discussions. However, an early draft of a proposal for a Council directive on the protection of human health by monitoring the wholesomeness of foodstuffs and observing basic principles of hygiene during their production handling and sale (the "Food Hygiene" directive) has recently been circulated to interested parties for comments on its scope, principles and approach.

Natural Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to request the medicines advisory research committee of the Natural Medicines Society to assess natural medicines; what proportion of those persons serving on the Medicines Control Agency practise alternative or complementary medical techniques; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to request such outside bodies to undertake assessment functions which, under the Medicines Act 1968, are a matter for the licensing authority. It is however open to companies to support their applications with opinion from such advisers as they consider appropriate.

Professional staff of the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) are qualified in medicine, pharmacy and related sciences.

I understand the Natural Medicines Society to be supportive of herbal, homeopathic and anthroposophic medicines. Different factors apply in each case. Herbal medicines are, in European Community (EC) law, subject to the main pharmaceutical directives. Herbalism holds in common with conventional medicine that efficacy is proportional to dose. Guidelines for the assessment of herbal medicine were discussed with industry and published in 1985.

Homeopathic products are not at present subject to EC directives, but a Commission proposal has very recently been put to the Council of Ministers. It would be premature to anticipate the adoption of the directive with arrangements peculiar to homeopathic medicines. Officials have already had informal preparatory communication with those interested in the United Kingdom in homeopathic medicines. This communication will be developed during negotiations in Brussels.

Anthroposophic medicine has some characteristics in common with homoepathy, but there are distinctions. It will have to be clarified whether it is the intention that the directive is to apply to such medicines and, if so, what modifications should be considered.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many expressions of interest have been made for hospitals to opt out of existing arrangements within the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 191 units have expressed an interest in NHS trust status, including a number with more than one hospital.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the report of the chief medical officer from the expert group examining the work of Mr. Barry Richardson on chemical emissions and cot deaths.

Mr. Freeman: The chief medical officer has asked the group of independent experts to report as soon as possible. However, Mr. Richardson's theory—that emission of toxic gases from fungal growth on cot mattresses could be responsible for some cases of sudden infant death syndrome—is a complex one and requires careful and responsible examination involving a range of scientific disciplines. It is difficult to forecast precisely when this ongoing work will be completed.

Geriatric Wards (Staffing)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the staffing levels on the geriatric wards at Stepping Hill, Stockport; and whether he has discussed the matter with either the regional or district health authorities.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 23 April 1990]: We have been assured by the chairman of the Stockport district health authority that local managers, with the agreement of senior nursing and medical colleagues, have assessed and will continue to keep under review the nurse staffing levels on the geriatric wards at Stepping Hill hospital. We do not intend to erode local responsibility for managing the hospital services by intervening in this matter.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review staffing levels in geriatric wards in the light of correspondence from Mr. Pink, a charge nurse at Stepping Hill hospital, Stockport.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The Department of Health does not and could not prescribe the staffing requirements on geriatric wards across the country because, for example, nursing requirements depend upon the number and individual needs of patients, the design of wards, and the skills and experience of nurses. That is why general managers working with medical and nursing colleagues decide such matters at the local level.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report or place copies in the Library, the replies sent by Ministers to correspondence from Mr. Pink, a charge nurse at Stepping Hill hospital, Stockport.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 23 April 1990]: Replies on behalf of Ministers and the chief executive of the management board of the National Health Service were sent to Mr. Pink on 28 November 1989 and 5 April 1990. I am arranging for copies of these replies to be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iraq (Arms Component Exports)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when his Department saw the contract involving Sheffield Forgemasters for the Iraqi order;

(2) what special checks were made of the 44 items of piping now sent to Iraq;

(3) how many approaches were made to his Department by Walter Somers querying the Iraqi order for equipment;

(4) what action was taken after the report of Walter Somers that they had been approached about aiming equipment in the Iraqi supergun order;

(5) what specifications of the Iraqi export order were given to his Department.

Mr. Ridley: In the light of charges laid against an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the day on which his Department was first made aware that Iraq was acquiring export material for a major gun or launcher;

(2) what information he has on non-military research done by the Space Research Corporation;

(3) when he was made aware of changes in the specifications of the steel for the Iraq order placed with Walter Somers;

(4) if he will make a statement on the involvement of the Advanced Technology Institute in the Iraqi gun order.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 26 April 1990]: In the light of charges laid against an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are now being taken by his Department to check on the items being manufactured in the United Kingdom for export to Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the technical specifications of the steel ordered for the pipes intended for Iraq that were the subject of correspondence between his Department and Sheffield Forgemasters in July 1988.

Mr. Ridley [holding answers 24 April 1990]: In the light of charges laid against an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to which overall contracts the gun components for Iraq were part of; and whether any such contracts were promoted by his Department through the British Overseas Trade Board export intelligence service.

Mr. Ridley [holding answers 23 April 1990]: In the light of charges laid against an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Product Development, Sheffield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the director of the Centre for Product Development Services in Sheffield; what matters were discussed; and what plans he has to hold another meeting.

Mr. Ridley: I have not met the chairman of the Centre for Product Development Services in Sheffield: nor have I met the directors. I have no immediate plans to do so.

Pollution Regulations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from the national council of the Confederation of British Industry in regard to the effects on the competitive position of British industry of proposals to tighten environmental pollution regulations.

Mr. Forth: The CBI has recently sent the department a copy of its submission to Government on the forthcoming White Paper on the environment. Among other things the submission addresses the important question of the competitive implications for British business of action to secure environmental improvements.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of taxation, including national insurance contributions, was derived from (a) direct taxation and (b) indirect taxation, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: Internationally, there is no general agreement on the criteria for distinguishing between direct and indirect taxes. However, broadly speaking, taxes on income and capital can be regarded as direct taxes, and taxes on expenditure as indirect taxes. On this basis, and including relevant non-tax items (such as national insurance, community charge and royalties), the figures requested are as follows:

	(1)	(2)
1978	49·0	51·0
1979	46·2	53·8
1980	46·5	53·5
1981	47·4	52·6
1982	48·3	51·7
1983	48·7	51·3
1984	49·2	50·8
1985	49·7	50·3
1986	47·3	52·7
1987	46·8	53·2

(3) Total taxes (including rates) plus social security contributions plus community charge plus royalties.

Roads

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Ryrie rules have been modified or disposed of to take account of the announcement of privately funded roads.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Ryrie rules were formally retired by the then chief secretary in his speech to the Institute of Directors in Glasgow on 5 May 1989. He also clarified the Government's general position on private finance which remains as set out in the Treasury paper of February 1988 entitled "Private Finance in Public Expenditure". In the particular case of privately financed roads, he gave an explicit assurance that reductions would not be sought in the roads programme on a scheme basis to offset privately financed projects. A copy of the Treasury paper and the speech have been placed in the Library of the House.

Lending Limits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the information he has on those European countries which have limits on the amount their building societies or equivalents can lend as a percentage of the purchase price of a house.

Mr. Ryder: Housing finance systems in other European countries are quite different from the United Kingdom. No comprehensive information is held centrally. However, a book published by the European Community Mortgage Federation entitled "Mortgage credit in the European Community" lists the conditions applying in most EC member states. A copy is in the House Library.

Schedule D Debts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing, for schedule D debts, what proportion and how much of the total debt outstanding at 1 January 1989, 1 July 1989 and 1 January 1990 was accounted for by debt attributable to taxpayers in (a) band 1, (b) band 2, (c) band 3, and (d) others; and what proportion of and how many taxpayers were accounted for by each band.

Mr. Lilley: The information is not available in the form requested.

The categorisation of accumulated debts referred to the local collector applies to all assessed taxes. Assessed taxes comprise corporation tax, capital gains tax and income tax. Assessed income tax comprises schedule D, schedule E and taxed income.

The Department analyses debts referred for local action into those for company cases (corporation tax) and those for individual taxpayers (capital gains tax) and income tax).

For individual taxpayers, the figures of debts outstanding at mid-month counts in January 1989, July 1989 and January 1990 are set out in the table.

Income tax and capital gains tax

Notes:
Band 1 = over £100,000.
Band 2 = between £20,000 and £100,000.
Band 3 = between £4,500 and £20,000.
Others = below £4,500.

The table shows the numbers of tax debts. No figures are available for the numbers of taxpayers involved.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a graph similar to figures 3 and 4 in the National Audit Office report on the collection and enforcement of debts by the Inland Revenue, showing the effect of Inland Revenue actions on schedule D debt clearance in relation to the first instalment due on 1 January 1990.

Mr. Lilley: Accurate and processed statistical data showing the effect of Inland Revenue actions on schedule D clearance in relation to the first instalment due on 1 January 1990 is currently only available for up to 13 weeks after this date. A graph showing the requested details for the first 13 weeks has been placed in the Library.

Education, Police and Fire Services

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the level of value added tax required if education, the police and the fire service, currently in part funded by local authorities, were funded from this source;

(2) what would be the basic rate of income tax if it had to cover expenditure at present met by local authorities on education, the police and the fire service.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 April 1990]: If local authorities spent in line with total standard spending in England and Wales, and total current expenditure in Scotland, the total cost of education, the police and fire service (including civil defence) in 1990-91 would be around £24 billion. If this expenditure were transferred to central government with no change to revenue support grant and specific grants for the police and fire service eliminated, this would imply additional expenditure of around £21·5 billion. This is equivalent to an increase of around 14p in the basic rate of income tax.

The estimated revenue from VAT in 1990-91 is £32·1 billion. For each one percentage point increase in the VAT rate, the extra revenue yield is around £2 billion in a full year.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq (Arms Sales)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments have been involved in considering the export order for the Iraqi gun.

The Prime Minister: Export controls are administered by the Department of Trade and Industry who seek advice from the Ministry of Defence and other Departments as necessary.

Gallipoli

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on parliamentary representation at official ceremonies to mark the anniversary of Gallipoli.

The Prime Minister: The Defence Secretary and I represented Her Majesty's Government at the ceremonies in Gallipoli on 25 April.

As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said in a letter to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 5 March, he hoped that a cross party ANZAC group of Members of Parliament and Peers would be represented.

The ceremonies at the Cenotaph and Westminster abbey were attended by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary as well as by other Members of Parliament from a number of parties.

National Curriculum

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the introduction of the arrangements for the national curriculum under the Education Reform Act 1988; and what action is being taken to reduce the burden of form filling by teachers.

The Prime Minister: We need the national curriculum to raise standards in our schools. There is welcome evidence from Her Majesty's inspectorate that many schools are making satisfactory progress with implementing the national curriculum. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science is taking great care that the new requirements are introduced in a way that does not overburden teachers. He has been particularly concerned to limit the paperwork required of teachers and has taken a number of steps to this effect, including, for example, changes to the proposed requirements for statutory curriculum information.

Privatisation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the Government's privatisation programme since 1979, and what were (a) the net receipts from each sale, (b) the number of shareholders now registered for each privatised company, (c) the number of employee shareholders in each privatised company and (d) the profit or loss for each company in their final year in state ownership.

The Prime Minister: Privatisation is recognised worldwide as one of this Government's bold and far-reaching achievements. Twenty-nine major businesses have been privatised and almost 50 per cent. of the 1979 state sector and around 800,000 jobs have been transferred to the private sector. Receipts so far amount to some £27·5 billion, with future sales projected at a rate of about £5 billion a year.

The information my hon. Friend requests is as follows. Figures for the number of shareholders are taken from the latest published reports and accounts of the companies, which do not provide the figures for employee shareholders.

Upper Bann

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister whether she proposes to visit the constituency of Upper Bann before 17 May.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Council of Europe

Mr. Hill: To ask the Prime Minister if she will announce the composition of the United Kingdom delegation for the 42nd session of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: The 42nd session parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe will be opened in Strasbourg on 7 May 1990. The delegation from the United Kingdom for the session will consist of 11 members of the Conservative party, six members of the Labour party and one member of the Liberal Democrats. I have also appointed a number of substitute delegates.

The appointments of representatives and substitutes have been made on the basis of nominations by the leaders of those parties concerned.

The same delegation will be representing the United Kingdom Parliament at the assembly of the Western European Union, which next meets in Paris on 5 June.

Representatives from the Conservative Benches will be my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir. G. Finsberg), who will act as leader of both delegations, and the hon. Members for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith), for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill), for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel), for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris), for Halesowen and Stourbridge (Sir J. Stokes), for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson), for Ashford (Mr. Speed), for Streatham (Sir W. Shelton), for Medway (Dame P. Fenner) and the Earl of Kinnoull.

Representatives from the Labour party will be the hon. Members for Neath (Mr. Coleman), for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett), for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy), for Tooting (Mr. Cox), for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry), and for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing).

Representatives from the Liberal Democrats will be the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston).

The following substitutes have been appointed to act as necessary on behalf of the delegates. From the Conservative Benches, the hon. Members for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson), for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell), for Poole (Mr. Ward, for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone), for Brighton, Kempton (Mr. Bowden), for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord), for Ravensbourne (Sir J. Hunt), Lord Newall and Lord Rodney.

From the Labour Party, the hon. Members for Wansbeck (Mr. Thompson), for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland), for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds), for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Lambie) and Lord Kirkhill.

From the Liberal Democrats, Lord Mackie of Benshie.

EMPLOYMENT

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the recent publications by the Health and Safety Executive on the work of the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls: I welcome the publication by the Health and Safety Executive of the booklet and leaflet entitled "The Work of HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate" and "Nuclear Energy and the NII" respectively. These should assist public understanding of the important work carried out by the inspectorate to ensure a safe operating regime for civil nuclear installations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many copies of the publication, "The work of HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate" have been printed since publication; to which outlets the brochure has been distributed; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the production and distribution of the publication.

Mr. Nicholls: Some 3,400 copies of the booklet entitled "The Work of HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate" have been printed for sale by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and its accredited agents. The booklet brings up to date the booklet of the same name published in 1982. Copies have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has obtained the agreement of the appropriate trade unions over safeguards with regard to the sale of the skills training agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There are requirements to inform and consult trade unions under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. These have been and will continue to be met in full. There have been extensive consultations with union representatives throughout the sale process and I have met them on two occasions.

Hazardous Substances

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many organisations have been given authorisation to conduct full health and safety surveys under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988; and what information he has concerning the availability of computer databases to facilitate the standardisation of information collected in Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations audits.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no requirement under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 for an organisation to be authorised by the Health and Safety Executive or any other body to undertake health and safety assessment on behalf of an employer.

Commercially produced computer database packages to assist employers in recording information relating to the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 are widely available and extensively publicised in the health and safety press.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he received a copy of the European Commission proposal for a Council directive on the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances (COM [89] 575 final-SYN 277, dated 9 January 1990); and what response he has made to the Council or Commission on the proposal.

Mr. Nicholls: The proposed directive was brought to my right hon. and learned Friend's notice on 9 March 1990. Since formal discussion of this proposal in EC Council has yet to start, no response has been made.

Radiation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new guidance has been issued in regard to the implementation by industries using radioactive materials of the provisions of the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

Mr. Nicholls: On 7 February 1990, the Health and Safety Executive published a guidance note, "Respiratory protective equipment for use against airborne radioactivity".

Environmental Protection Training

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in training schemes leading to qualifications in environmental protection or environmental improvement techniques for each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

NATO Civil Wartime Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether agreements have been drawn up to cover the legal aspects of the proposed employment of United Kingdom civil servants as staff of NATO civil wartime agencies; and whether agreement has been reached on the status under international law of United Kingdom civil servants and representatives of private industry when they take up their proposed roles as NATO civil wartime agencies staff.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Unlawful Parking, Newham

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on how many police and traffic warden hours have been devoted in the current year to keeping Green street and Katherine road in the London borough of Newham clear of unlawful parking; how many fixed penalty notices have been issued in those roads in the current year; and what priority is given to keeping these streets clear of unlawful parking.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No specific records are kept of the number of hours worked by police officers and traffic wardens undertaking enforcement duties in Green street and Katherine road. Similarly, no specific records are kept of the number of fixed penalty notices issued at these locations.

Both roads received substantial enforcement attention from traffic wardens, with Green street being patrolled on a daily basis. In addition, police traffic patrols also target the area on a rota basis to supplement the traffic warden effort.

Fire Stations (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the fire stations that cover the Don Valley constituency area.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the Don Valley constituency area is covered by three fire stations—Edlington, Mexborough and Rossington.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the fire stations in south Yorkshire that are under threat of closure.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the chief fire officer of South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority has completed a review of fire risk categorisation and that he is now reviewing the standards of fire cover throughout his area.

I understand that the chief fire officer has not yet submitted a report or recommendations to South Yorkshire fire and civil service defence authority concerning the provision of fire cover. It would, therefore, be inappropriate for my right hon. and learned Friend to comment on speculative statements about fire station closures.

A fire authority which proposes to reduce the operational establishment of its brigade is required to seek the approval of my right hon. and learned Friend to the reductions under the terms of section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947. My right hon. and learned Friend is committed to maintaining nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover and to the maintenance of an effective fire service.

Crime Rates

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the rates of burglary (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other European Economic Community member states;

(2) what are the most recent figures for (a) violent crime and (b) rape; and what are the comparable rates of these crimes in other European Economic Community member states.

Mr. John Patten: The most recent comparative information on crime rates in different countries relates to 1988 and is published in "Experiences of Crime across the World" (Key findings of the 1989 International Crime Survey), for example in table E1. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Special Branch

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the special branch document ref. no. 10368/74; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 30 March 1990 at columns 375-77.

Young Prisoners

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to provide for the incarceration of younger healthy prisoners in an outdoor working environment with the minimum possible time spent in cellular confinement.

Mr. Mellor: Inmates need to be kept in conditions of security appropriate to the nature of the individual prisoner and his offence. Establishments already seek, within available resources, to provide balanced and integrated regimes which keep inmates as fully occupied as possible. Programmes of activities include physical education, exercise and, where practicable, opportunities for outside work.

Overseas Voters

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with Ministers from those countries that have residents applying for votes in future British elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Armley Gaol

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fine defaulters are currently imprisoned at Armley gaol, Leeds; how many of these are serving sentences of six months or less; and in each case, what percentage of the total current prisoner population of Armley these prisoners represent.

Mr. Mellor: According to records held centrally, which are approximate, 28 fine defaulters were held in Leeds prison on 28 February, 1990. They formed between 2 and 3 per cent. of the population of Leeds prison. All had been committed for periods of six months or less.

Somalian Refugees

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funds have been received from the United Nations or any other agency for the settlement of Somalian refugees; and on what projects such funds have been spent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. The United Nations does not make any formal contribution towards the resettlement of Somalian refugees in the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom does, of course, contribute to the costs of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. In 1989 we gave £19,366,000 to UNHCR. Arrangements for the reception and resettlement of refugees in the United Kingdom assume that their basic needs are adequately met by existing services provided by both central and local government but, in addition, grant aid is made available to encourage community development through national and regional voluntary bodies.

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of the Dunbar report into the 1989 riot at Risley remand centre in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 25 January at column 890.

Wakefield Prison

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made by his Department of the security implications for Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, of the recent temporary transfer of staff to Her Majesty's prison, Manchester.

Mr. Mellor: The operation of contingency arrangements for the deployment of staff on detached duty to assist at another establishment has full regard to the need not to compromise the security of the sending establishment.

Rural Violence

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to discuss with chief officers of police measures to deal with violent incidents involving groups of young people in or outside licensed premises in rural areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In February 1989, an interdepartmental circular provided advice on how local organisations in England and Wales might work together to tackle the problems associated with alcohol misuse. Local organisations including the police are encouraged to identify local needs and decide how best these might be met. In addition, in seven selected areas in England, the Home Office is monitoring experimental byelaws which provide the police with additional powers to control drinking in public places. I understand that a similar experimental byelaw is in operation in one area in Scotland and it is planned to extend the scheme to two further areas. The results of these experiments will be discussed with chief officers of police. I have no further plans, at present, for discussions with chief officers on this subject.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are operating in Leicestershire; how many were operating in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the Leicestershire police that at the end of March 1990 there were 1,136 neighbourhood watch schemes in Leicestershire, covering approximately 70,000 households. This compares to 990 schemes at the end of 1988, an increase of 146 schemes over the last 15 months.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales approximately how many letters have been received by his Department during the past four weeks relating to the community charge system of local taxation (a) from hon. Members and (b) from others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Between 26 March and 20 April inclusive, my Department received 82 letters from hon. Members and 130 letters from members of the public and other organisations about the community charge.

Planning Applications

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines are issued by his Department to local planning authorities in Wales as to the appositeness or otherwise of considering the financial viability of large scale development projects requiring planning permission prior to undertaking expensive consultation procedures in relation to the planning application.

Mr. Grist: None.

Radioactive Substances Act

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many firms or organisations have been successfully prosecuted in each year since 1979 under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960; and what penalty was incurred in each case.

Mr. Grist: None.

Health Authorities (Voluntary Contributions)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to health authorities in Wales on the extent to which voluntary and charitable contributions should be sought and to what classes of project they should be applied; and if he will publish any letters or guidance documents on these issues issued by his Department.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 23 April, at columns 38-39.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will set a target for Welsh local authorities responsible for waste disposal, in respect of the recycling of paper, glass and cans in household refuse;

(2) whether he will encourage all waste disposal authorities in Wales to provide a comprehensive service for collection from households of paper, glass and cans for recycling.

Mr. Grist: The Government have set a target of 50 per cent. of recyclable household waste to be recycled by the year 2000. Proposals in the Environmental Protection Bill will give district councils in Wales duties to prepare plans and to report on recycling, and powers to arrange for the provision of recycling facilities.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he has had with Welsh district councils on the resources required for providing an effective waste disposal service, including the provision of a collection service for recycling of paper, glass and cans.

Mr. Grist: The resources required by local government are discussed with local authorities at meetings of the Welsh consultative council on local government finance and its various sub-groups. Representatives of the Welsh Office and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution also attend meetings of the regional waste management groups where all waste management matters, including recycling, are discussed.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is being taken to assist coastal local authorities with the removal of debris on beaches dumped by ships at sea.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 24 April 1990]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 25 April 1990 at columns 261-62.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Security

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Lord President of the Council who is responsible for maintaining and updating security provisions in the Palace of Westminster.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Final responsibility for security policy in the House of Commons rests with Mr. Speaker and, in the House of Lords, with the Lord Chairman of Committees, acting on behalf of the House of Lords' Administration Committee. Day-to-day executive responsibility for security policy is delegated to the Serjeant at Arms and Black Rod in their respective areas of the building. Operational responsibility for security throughout the Palace of Westminster rests with the head of security, who works in support of these authorities and is answerable to them.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Lord President of the Council what matters relating to the security of the Palace of Westminster he makes it his practice to answer questions on.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Within the limitations of my own role as Leader of the House, I endeavour to be as helpful as possible in answering parliamentary questions on security matters, but for reasons which the hon. Member will appreciate, it has not been the practice of my predecessors, nor is my practice, to answer questions relating to security policy or to cases affecting individual Members or staff.

SCOTLAND

Crofter Housing

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on assistance to crofter housing.

Mr. Rifkind: With effect from 16 May 1990 the maximum rates of assistance available under the crofters building grants and loans scheme (CBGLS) will be increased as indicated in the table.

	Present levels			Revised levels

New House	8,700	13,500	22,200	11,500	17,500	29,000
House Improvement	1,500	8,000	9,500	2,000	10,500	12,500

Grant is at 50 per cent. Loans are at 7 per cent. rate of interest.

The new levels of assistance will be available to new applicants and applicants whose applications are currently under consideration. They will also be available to those that have had applications approved but who have not yet started work, provided that they re-apply and accept the revised conditions set out in the Crofters etc. Building Grants (Scotland) Regulations 1990.

These regulations and the related guidelines have been modified to emphasise that assistance under the crofters building grants and loans scheme is provided for those who live on and cultivate their crofts and is designed to benefit the crofting community at least as much as the individual crofter.

The period to which grant conditions apply to new houses has been extended from 10 to 20 years. Disposal of an assisted croft house to someone other than a member of the family or a crofter working a croft in the area and in certain circumstances the disposal of the croft land other than the house, to someone other than a member of the family, may result in recovery of a proportion of grant. These changes should provide a disincentive to disposal of croft houses to those who do not work a local croft.

I have reviewed the circumstances in which housing assistance might be made available where a house or house site has been detached from the croft and assistance for a house on the bareland croft is sought.

Each case will be taken on its merits; but applications will be considered in two sets of circumstances. These are:

(a) where a crofter has acquired a house or house site pertaining to the croft and the tenancy of the remainder of the croft has passed by assignation or otherwise to a member of the crofter's family, or, where the former crofter was aged or infirm, to any named individual who requires a house to enable him to cultivate the croft;

(b) where the croft could not be satisfactorily cultivated without the provision of a new house and it would benefit the township if a new house were provided to enable the crofter to reside on the croft.

Assistance will not generally be provided where the detached house might reasonably have been made available to the incoming crofter, where the crofter is already adequately housed within reasonable working distance of the croft, and where the price paid for an assignation and any associated permanent improvements or other circumstances suggest that the main object of an assignation is to make an incoming crofter eligible for assistance under the scheme. Where a house has been provided with grant assistance, assistance for a new house pertaining to the same croft will not be made available for 20 years unless the Secretary of State considers that there are special circumstances which would justify it.

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employment training scheme trainees are placed with (a) Grampian Holdings, (b) John Wood Group plc, (c) W. & J. Barners, (d) IBM United Kingdom Ltd., (e) The Royal Bank of Scotland, (f) Guinness, (g) GEC Plessey (Kirkcaldy), (h) Roche Products (Dalry), (i) Polaroid (UK), (j) McQueen Ltd. (Galashiels) and (k) Rolls Royce and Associates Ltd. (Thurso).

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 April 1990]: In employment training placements are negotiated between training managers and placement providers and embodied in a contract between those parties: the content of such contracts is deemed to be commercial in confidence. The information sought is therefore not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar (Incident)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his decision to issue certificates under the Crown Proceedings Act in respect of legal action relating to the deaths of three persons in Gibraltar.

Mr. Waldegrave: Proceedings have been brought against the Ministry of Defence in the High Court in Northern Ireland by relatives of the three members of the Provisional IRA who were shot dead in Gibraltar. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has signed certificates under section 40(3)(a) of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, as extended to Northern Ireland, to the effect that any liability of the Crown alleged in the actions arises neither in respect of Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, nor in respect of Her Majesty's Government in Northern Ireland. Copies of the certificates were served on lawyers acting for the relatives on 26 March.

East-West Co-operation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe held in April on the lifting of restrictions on west-east co-operation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The concluding document of the Bonn CSCE meeting on economic co-operation in Europe represents a valuable contribution towards stimulating market-oriented economic principles throughout Europe and to the general development of economic co-operation. The document contains an invitation to the OECD to consider hosting meetings of experts drawn from CSCE and OECD states to continue the dialogue in specific fields, including trade. This proposal was originally put forward by the United Kingdom.

Iraq

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government first learnt of attempts by Iraq to obtain krytrons in the United States for potential use in nuclear warhead triggers.

Mr. Waldegrave: The interception of a consignment of capacitors bound for Iraq on 28 March at Heathrow was the result of co-operation between the United States and United Kingdom customs authorities over a period of several months. We are not aware of any attempt by Iraq to obtain krytrons in the United States.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of the Iraqi nuclear programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: Iraq is a party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and, as such, has undertaken not to develop nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices. We expect Iraq to abide by her international legal obligations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will raise the violation by Iraq of its commitment not to obtain nuclear weapons capability as a party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty at the next meeting of parties to the treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: Parties to the non-proliferation treaty are currently meeting in Geneva for the third preparatory committee to the NPT review conference. Since the committee is largely devoted to administrative matters, we do not consider it an appropriate forum in which to raise this matter. We would, however, expect the interception at Heathrow of a consignment of capacitors bound for Iraq on 28 March to be discussed at the review conference on 20 August-14 September.

Argentina

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were raised by Ministers or officials of this Department during the visit to the United Kingdom by the Foreign Minister of Argentina, Senor Cavallo, in April, with his counterpart, or members of the Foreign Minister's visiting party.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 18 April, at column 845.

Hong Kong

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters concerning civil or military aspects of nuclear energy the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude) discussed during his visit to the Crown Territories of Hong Kong in April.

Mr. Maude: During my visit to Hong Kong in April, I held no specific discussions about civil or military aspects of nuclear energy. I did, however, pay a visit to the Castle Peak power station, where I held discussions with the China Light and Power Company, whose interests in the nuclear power station under construction at Daya bay in southern China was mentioned in passing.

Indian President

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was discussed during his meeting with President Venkataraman of India during his recent visit to London.

Mr. Maude: During his meeting with President Venkataraman, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed international and regional issues. The meeting confirmed the excellent state of Indo-British relations.

USSR

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he or his officials raised with his Soviet counterpart, other Soviet Foreign Ministers or Foreign Ministry officials during his visit to Moscow on 9 to 11 April.

Mr. Waldegrave: During his recent visit to the Soviet Union, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the full range of bilateral and international issues.

Biotechnology

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on steps Her Majesty's Government have taken and plan to take to ensure the detection of any diversion by any other state of biotechnology for offensive military purposes.

Mr. Waldergrave: The 1972 biological and toxin weapons convention, to which over 110 states are party, prohibits the development, production, stockpiling, or other acquisition of microbial or other biological agents of toxins, except for peaceful purposes. Any evidence that a party was in breach of the convention would be a serious matter. We have alerted our Australia group partners to the possibility of diversion or biotechnology equipment, material and know-how for use in biological warfare, and are taking parallel action with potential United Kingdom suppliers. The Export of Goods (Control) Order has also for many years prohibited the export of biological materials and related equipment adapted for use in war unless specifically licensed.

Poland

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he will take to help the Polish economy by converting loans to grants.

Mr. Waldegrave: Poland has benefitted from successive rescheduling within the Paris club of debts to Governments. Under the most recent, in February, Poland need make no payments this year. The Paris club has also agreed, without commitment, to set up a working group on long-term debt issues once the first review of Poland's IMF standby programme has been successfully completed.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific technological help has been given to Poland over the past two years; and what plans exist for it to be increased.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subject to security considerations, western technology has been available through commercial channels. We believe Poland most needs the managerial skills and technical expertise to run free-market and democratic systems and we have created the know-how fund to supply this.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the European Community to help Poland.

Mr. Maude: The European Community has responded quickly and generously to the economic and political reforms in Poland by measures which include, 158 mecu —£117 million, approximately—free food, removal or suspension of all quantitative restrictions on Polish exports to the Community, generalised system of preferences status for exports into the EC, including the reduction of certain tariffs or levels, 1 billion ecu—£750 million, approximately—lending by the European investment bank, and 300mecu in 1991—£225 million, approximately—project aid for environmental, agricultural and training projects in Poland and Hungary.

Poland will also benefit from the establishment of the European training foundation, the TEMPUS student mobility scheme and the European bank for reconstruction and development.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what restructuring of loans to Poland has so far taken place.

Mr. Waldegrave: Poland's Government creditors agreed in the Paris club in February to reschedule 100 per cent. of principal and interest in arrears at the end of 1989 and payments due up to March 1991. Bank creditors agreed a rescheduling of almost all commercial debt in July 1988 over a 15-year period. Further talks are currently being held.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the European Community to assist Poland.

Mr. Maude: We have taken every opportunity to encourage Community support for Poland. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has taken a leading role in promoting close relations between the EC and Poland. We have encouraged and supported the numerous specific measures which have been put in place by the Community.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what food has been sent to Poland from European Community stocks.

Mr. Maude: The European Community has so far supplied 158 mecu—£117 million, approximately—of free food to Poland from Community stocks. The free food comprised deliveries of breadmaking wheat, maize, barley, beef, olive oil and citrus fruits.

Beirut Hostages

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to secure the release of John McCarthy, Brian Keenan, Terry Waite and Jack Mann who are currently being held hostage in Beirut; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 18 April to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans), at column 843.

Western European Union

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues were discussed during the meeting of the Western European Union in Brussels on 27 April.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friends, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and the Secretary of State for Defence, attended the ministerial council of Western European Union in Brussels on 23 April. They had a useful exchange of views with Foreign and Defence Ministers from other WEU member states covering progress towards Germany unification, the prospects for a coventional forces in Europe agreement and a conference on security and co-operation in Europe summit, co-operation on arms control verification, and future defence co-operation. They reaffirmed the need for United States and Canadian troops to continue to be stationed in Europe, and the importance of Western European Union and the north Atlantic alliance in which a united Germany would take its place alongside its fellow members.

Expatriates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the number of persons who were previously resident in Britain who are now resident in each country abroad, above a level of 500 British expatriates in each country; and if he will estimate in each case how many are of pensionable age and how many of working age, respectively.

Mr. Maude: We have no means of estimating the number of British residents living in each country abroad who were previously resident in Britain, nor can we estimate their ages.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Harvest

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the size of the United Kingdom harvest in (a) tonnes and (b) value, at actual and at 1989 prices in each year since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: The size of the cereals harvest and the value of cereal sales off farms are shown below.

Year	Cereal harvest ('000 tonnes)	Value of output (£ million)	Value of output at 1989 prices (£ million)
1979	17,416	1,184	1,357
1980	19,472	1,463	1,616
1981	19,621	1,693	1,725
1982	21,913	2,062	1,971
1983	21,307	1,996	1,738
1984	26,602	2,420	2,260
1985	22,466	2,281	2,210
1986	24,489	2,174	2,117
1987	21,675	2,043	1,993
1988	21,118	1,898	1,929
[1]1989	22,403	1,926	1,926

[1] Forecast.

It will be noted that the size of the harvest does not correspond exactly to the value of output—sales off farms—even when this is measured at constant prices. This is partly because some of the harvest is used on farms for animal feed and because some of each year's harvest is sold off farms in the next calendar year.

Farm Diversification (Lincolnshire)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food how many farm diversification schemes in Lincolnshire have so far been approved and grants given.

Mr. Maclean: Thirty applications for farm diversification capital grant covering a total investment of £733,354 have so far been approved in Lincolnshire. Grant payments totalling £33,819 have been made to date. Feasibility study grants have also been approved in four cases.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the comparative rates of use by British and American farmers of maneb, mancozeb and zineb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government regularly survey British farmers for their usage of pesticides, including maneb, mancozeb and zineb. They do not hold comparable information for American farmers.

Deer Herds (TB)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to eliminate tuberculosis within deer herds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Tuberculosis in deer was made a notifiable disease in June 1989 and a compulsory slaughter with compensation scheme was introduced in September 1989, when marking and movement record requirements also came into force.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek advice from the advisory committee on salmon stocks on the desirability of a United Kingdom contribution to the proposed Greenland and Foroese salmon quota buy-out.

Mr. Curry: We are aware of the proposals put forward by private interests to buy-out the salmon quotas for Faroes and west Greenland, which have been agreed in the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation. Any such proposals in relation to these quotas would need to be handled through NASCO as the international organisation with powers to arrange for the protection and conservation of salmon stocks in relation to high seas fisheries in the north Atlantic. A formal proposal has not yet been put to NASCO, although the issue is expected to be raised at least in principle at the meeting in Helsinki in June this year.

The salmon advisory committee is currently fully occupied in discharging its initial remit to examine and report on influences on stocks within Great Britain. We do not consider it appropriate to seek advice of the salmon advisory committee on the buy-out proposal.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of sewage sludge were dumped at sea by each of the water authorities in England and Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 2 April 1990 c. 363]: The amounts of sewage sludge dumped at sea by each of the water authorities in England and Wales in each year since 1979 are as follows:

Wild Fish

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had on the proposed European Community Council Regulation on the sale of wild caught fish; what effect he considers this might have on the sale of wild salmon and sea trout; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We are in the early stages of considering these draft proposals, consulting upon them with interested parties, and will be seeking clarification from the Commission on a number of aspects. As presently drafted, the focus of the proposals is upon the premises in which fishery products are handled and processed. The proposed labelling requirements are intended to link products with the approved premises in which fish were processed for the purposes of inspection. An indication of the origin of the fish before being presented to the approved establishment would not be required.

ENVIRONMENT

Civil Servants (Accommodation)

65. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had about standards of accommodation for civil servants working in central London.

Mr. Chope: Guidance on standards of accommodation for civil servants in London and elsewhere is contained in the office accommodation standards code which is maintained by my Department. I have not been involved in any recent discussions on this issue.

Beaches

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will arrange for the monitoring results of all designated beaches in the European Community sampled in the summer of 1989 to be placed in the Library;

(2) which designated bathing waters beaches in Europe under the 1976 EC directive, had a higher level of total coliforms and faecal coliforms for the 1989 season than Seaton Carew centre.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is collated and published by the Commission of the European Communities, in accordance with article 13 of directive 76/160/EEC. Information in respect of United Kingdom bathing waters for the 1989 bathing season was sent to the Commission on 8 February 1990. The information is held in the House of Commons Library. The latest report published by the Commission relates to the 1987 bathing season.

Local Government Finance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether community charge regulations enable poll tax arrears and payments to be deducted at source from the payments made to (a) non-employed trainees and (b) employed trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Where a charging authority has obtained a liability order—that is, an order under regulation 29 of the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989—in respect of arrears of community charge, it may make an attachment of earnings order under regulation 32 of those regulations. Such an order requires the employer to make deductions from the debtor's earnings. For these purposes "earnings" has the meaning given in section 24 of the Attachment of Earnings Act 1971. Since an attachment of earnings order can operate only where there is an employer-employee relationship, payments made to non-employed trainees cannot be the subject of such an order. To the extent that the pay of employed trainees falls within the definition of "earnings" in the 1971 Act, it is attachable.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he holds on current local authority charges in England and Wales concerning the collective community charge; and what was the equivalent level of rates for 1989-90.

Mr. Chope: Contributors to the collective community charge are liable to pay the same amount (on a daily basis) as the amount set for the personal community charge in that area. The amounts reported to the Department for each authority's average charge for 1990-91 were placed in the Library of the House on 18 April 1990, together with a comparison with the average rate bill in 1989-90. Local authorities estimated that as at 1 December 1989 the number of people liable to contribute to the collective community charge over a full year reduced by 5 per cent. to cover the cost of collection to which the landlords are entitled was 30,000.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to review the community charge in the light of experience and representation in respect of (a) joint and several liability and (b) second home charge where it is a second home only because it is for sale.

Mr. David Hunt: We continue to keep all aspects of local government finance policy under review. On second homes, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) on 21 March, Official Report, column 658. In particular, we have prescribed that local authorities may not levy a standard charge for at least three months where a property is unoccupied and substantially unfurnished. This is similar to the arrangements under domestic rates.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his most up-to-date assessment of the numbers of local authorities in England which are charging standard community charge on empty properties at (a) the single rate, (b) the double rate, (c) zero rate, (d) 0·5 rate and (e) 1·5 rate.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 20 April, Official Report, column 1033.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of the current levels of standard community charge levied on empty properties on (a) inter-regional labour mobility, (b) regional economic development and (c) the housing market.

Mr. Chope: We have given charging authorities the discretion to set standard charge multipliers for properties in their area at 0, 0·5, 1, 1·5 or 2 times the personal community charge. We have prescribed nine categories of property in respect of which no standard charge is payable and two where the multiplier may not exceed unity. As with domestic rates, we have prescribed that no standard charge is payable in respect of unoccupied, unfurnished properties until three months after they become unoccupied. Authorities have wide discretion to specify additional classes of property which enables them to respond to local factors. This discretion contrasts with the lack of such discretion that existed under domestic rates.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give such information as he has available on (a) the sums which will be received from standard community charge in each local authority in England during 1990-91 and (b) which authorities are not charging at the level of twice the personal community charge.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available.

Bulb Trade

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has obtained a copy for its library of the article, "The Bulb Trade—A Threat to Wild Plant Populations", in volume 23 of the FFPS journal, "Oryx"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. Endangered species of bulbs are already afforded strict protection under the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora (CITES). The United Kingdom plays a full and active part in the CITES plants committee and in discussions with our EC partners concerning the trade controls on bulbs. At the seventh CITES conference in 1989, we supported the addition to the appendices of the genus Galanthus (snowdrop) and were successful in proposing the addition of the genus Sternbergia (autumn daffodil), thereby ensuring the regulation of trade in these species.

Peat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ban all use of peat by his Department; whether he will formulate a national peatlands conservation policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We already use alternatives to peat whenever appropriate. We will carefully consider extending their use, but it is considered premature at this stage to ban the use of peat completely.

The Government recognise the nature conservation importance of the peatlands and are aware of the concerns expressed about the effects of peat extraction on them. We believe the best way of resolving these complex issues is within the established planning and conservation framework. We shall of course take account of forthcoming advice from the Nature Conservancy Council, together with the views expressed by the voluntary conservation bodies in their "Peat Report", the horticultural industry and many others. In England and Wales, mineral planning authorities are undertaking reviews of mineral working sites and permissions under the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981 and will be considering peat working in this context.

Pollution Inspectors

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution inspectors he expects to retire in the next year and in each of the next five years, by divisions.

Mr. Trippier: The number of inspectors reaching retirement age over the period is as follows:

Divisions	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96
Director	—	—	1	—	—	—
Regulatory standards	—	—	1	—	2	—

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department was represented at the seminar on the environmental impact of Sellafield, held at Chilton, sponsored by the National Radiological Protection Board, on 23 March.

Mr. Trippier: My Department was represented at the seminar by the director of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Radiation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he, or officials of his Department, have been invited to participate in, or been observers at, the sixth international standing conference on low level radiation and health, to be held at the University college of North Wales, Bangor, on 7 to 8 July.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Mineral and Peat Extraction

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions since 1981 mineral planning authorities have made orders modifying the planning permission for mineral and peat extraction or requiring the use of land to be discontinued or continued subject to conditions.

Mr. Moynihan: According to our records, since 1981 no orders have been made which relate to peat extraction. Six orders have been made relating to other minerals.

Nature Conservation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those nature conservation orders which have been made since the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 came into force; and if he will list those applications which have been submitted by the Nature Conservancy Council to himself and been rejected.

Mr. Trippier: The number of orders made or rejected in England is as follows:

	Made	Rejected
1981	—	—
1982	2	—
1983	3	1
1984	4	1
1985	5	2
1986	1	—
1987	2	—
1988	—	—
1989	6	—
1990	1	—

In addition, it has been unnecessary for the Secretary of State to make an order on about 10 occasions because agreement was reached with the owner-occupier of the land concerned or the threat to the land did not materialise. Furthermore, agreement has been reached on seven occasions after the making of an order and the orders have been subsequently revoked. The responsibility for making orders in Wales and Scotland rests with the respective Secretaries of State.

Airborne Emissions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by year for the last five years the number of buildings that have suffered damage problems from airborne emissions of (a) lead, (b) carbon monoxide and (c) particulates.

Mr. Trippier: No case of damage to buildings from airborne emissions of lead or carbon monoxide have been reported. These substances would not be expected to damage buildings. Particulates from diesel-engined vehicles and some industrial processes can give rise to soiling of buildings especially in urban areas, but are not known to cause structural damage.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in establishing Ordnance Survey as a next steps agency.

Mr. Trippier: Ordnance Survey becomes an executive agency on 1 May and Mr. Peter McMaster, a barrister and professional surveyor who is the present director general, will be its first chief executive.

Ordnance Survey will continue to be a separate Government department, but as an agency it will be able to develop and expand its business on increasingly commercial lines. It will be expected to achieve progressively more demanding targets and for 1990-91 we have brought forward by one year the agency's key financial target to recover not less than 55 per cent. of the total annual cost of core activities; this will rise to 65 per cent. by 1992-93. Other financial objectives are:

to recover at least 100 per cent. of the total cost of public sector repayment at home and overseas; to maximise the return on small scales and special products and recover not less than 110 per cent. of the total cost in that category.

These targets are subsumed in the principal financial target shown at paragraph (a).

For 1990-91 the performance of Ordnance Survey will be monitored by the following financial, productivity and quality of service targets which are linked to the strategic objectives set out in the framework document:

(a) to recover at least 65 per cent. of the total cost incurred by the agency;
(b) to survey 0·93 million house units (based on construction forecasts for major developments) so as to keep the national mapping of Great Britain up-to-date;
(c) to increase from 81,000 to 97,000 the number of basic scale maps available in digital form;
(d) to publish on microfilm within four months, each large-scale map reaching the criteria and specification for reproduction;
(e) to dispatch within seven working days (including the day the order is received), 90 per cent. of orders for 1:50,000 folded maps.

The levels of delegation to the director general for capital expenditure and new information technology projects have been increased to £1 million and £2 million respectively.

Copies of the framework document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Housing Action Trust, Sunderland

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the actual expenditure by his Department on the ballot arranged by the Electoral Reform Society in connection with the proposed housing action trust in Sunderland.

Mr. Chope: We expect the cost for conducting the ballot to be around £12,300.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of the consultation and consultants' reports to his Department in connection with the proposed housing action trust in Sunderland.

Mr. Chope: The initial consultants' report and subsequent tenant consultation exercise cost around £620,000 including VAT.

House Building Land

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to permit the release of more house building land outside the restraints of existing plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We announced last year that, in order to meet needs for low-cost housing in rural areas, planning authorities may exceptionally grant planning permission for the development of small unallocated sites which would not ordinarily be released for general housing development. We emphasised that such sites must be sensibly related to existing settlements, and that arrangements must be in place to reserve the housing in question for local needs. The full policy is set out in the draft revision of "Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 (Housing)" issued last October.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Chope: The target reduction for energy consumption in my Department's buildings is 15 per cent. over the five-year period ending in April 1995.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Chope: The latest estimate of energy consumption for buildings occupied by my Department for 1989-90 is:

	Consumption
Electricity	34,000,000 Kwh
Gas	2,600,000 therms
Liquid Fuel	3,300,000 litres
Solid Fuel	70 tonnes

Empty Farm Cottages

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will fix the standard community charge on empty farm cottages in England and Wales on the same basis as that in Scotland.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have provided that local authorities may not levy a standard charge for at least three months where properties, including farm cottages, are empty and substantially unfurnished. Local authorities have discretion to increase this period if they wish; and to levy a standard charge of less than the maximum if they want to. This discretion has been given to authorities precisely so that they can reflect local circumstances. We will be monitoring the position closely over the next few months to see if changes are necessary for 1991-92.

Industrial Development Grants

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the grants made by his Department under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 showing the value of the grant as a percentage of the whole project cost.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Owls

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the approximate number of (a) barn owls and (b) tawny owls reported found dead whose death is ascribed to collisions with traffic in 1989.

Mr. Trippier: The approximate numbers of barn owls and tawny owls reported as found dead from collisions with traffic in 1989 are 480 and 450 respectively.

Water Supply

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the operation of section 7 of the Water Supply and Sewerage Services (Customer Service Standards) Regulations 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 1159).

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under regulation 7 of the Customer Service Standards Regulations domestic customers may in some circumstances be eligible to claim payments or credits against water charges of £5 per day, if their water supplies have been interrupted or cut off and not restored within specified time limits. Such payments or credits are initially a matter for the water companies. Disputes as to eligibility may be referred by either party to the Director General of Water Services.

Water Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the presence of carbon tetrachloride in public water supplies near the Harwell Atomic Energy Authority site.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Thames Water Utilities has kept the Department informed of the results of monitoring for carbon tetrachloride in the water taken from its Blewbury borehole and put into public supply. Since the beginning of April the water has contained between 0·7 and 1·6 micrograms per litre which is well below the prescribed concentration of 3 micrograms per litre in the Water Quality Regulations.

Environment White Paper

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the proposed White Paper on the environment; and when he expects to introduce legislation on this subject.

Mr. Trippier: The White Paper on the environment will be published in the autumn and will include any proposals for further legislation.

GEC-Marconi (Toxic Gas Leak)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the leak of toxic chemical gases from the GEC-Marconi research centre at Great Baddow, Essex, on 13 April; and if he will instruct Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to conduct an investigation into the incident.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive have investigated the circumstances of the fire which occurred on 13 April 1990 at the GEC-Marconi research centre at Great Baddow, Essex. The exact composition of the fumes released during the fire is unknown, but I can assure the hon. Gentleman that despite media reports to the contrary no cyanide was involved.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those bodies responsible for each of the research projects currently undertaken by his Department into waste management, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Devizes (Sir C. Morrison), 23 April, Official Report, column 2.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 27 April 1990]: I regret that for reasons of commercial confidence I cannot associate the names of contractors with the costs for each project already given.

PRIME MINISTER

Pensioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister what further steps she proposes to make additional financial provision for pensioners whose sole income is provided by their state pension.

The Prime Minister: Most such pensioners are already entitled to additional help through income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit. Pensioners have a higher entitlement to these benefits through the pensioner premiums, which were increased earlier this month and will continue to be reviewed annually. In addition, a special increase in the premiums made in October 1989 has given extra help totalling £200 million a year to over 2·5 million less well-off disabled and older pensioners.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if the case of the Birmingham pub bombings was raised by either side during her recent meeting with the Irish Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: The subject was not discussed.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by the Cabinet Office, for the latest year available.

The Prime Minister: The latest available breakdown (1988-89) of energy for accommodation occupied by the Cabinet Office is as follows:

Electricity	294,485·22
Gas	53,904·17
Liquid fuel	39,905·96

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by the Cabinet Office.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office target will be to achieve savings rising over five years to 15 per cent. of the current annual costs.

ANZAC Day

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what factors she took into account when selecting the official party to represent Britain on ANZAC Day in Turkey.

The Prime Minister: As Prime Minister of a nation which lost so many lives in the campaign, I decided that I should attend the Gallipoli ceremonies. My right hon. Friend the Defence Secretary also attended. No official invitations were issued.

Mr. Martin Galvin

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the decision of the Irish Government to offer Irish citizenship to Martin Galvin, who has been banned from entering the United Kingdom on security grounds, and the consequent decision of the Home Office to raise the ban on Mr. Galvin's admission because of EEC rules; if she will invite the Council to consider the implications for the security of member states of decisions similar to that of the Irish Government; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I understand that Mr. Galvin was registered as a citizen of the Republic of Ireland in 1986 in accordance with that country's law. This fact was one factor among others in the reconsideration of the 1984 decision to exclude him from the United Kingdom. Should circumstances change materially, it will remain open to my right hon. and learned Friend to reimpose a ban as necessary. It follows that there are no grounds for raising the matter in the European Council.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Film Production

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he proposes to give to feature film production in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The Government provide support of £1·5 million a year through British Screen Finance Ltd. for feature film production, together with a further £500,000 a year for short films and script development. Our present five-year commitment to British Screen is due to expire at the end of this year, but we announced in July 1989 that funding will continue at the present level of £2 million a year for a further three years, until the end of 1993.

Baldrige National Quality Award

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to institute an award for quality similar to the Baldrige national quality award in the United States of America.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no such plans.

Measurement Accreditation

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has any proposals to increase the numbers of national measurement accreditation service centres between now and the planned establishment of the large European market at the end of 1992.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Growth in the number of laboratories accredited by NAMAS, the national measurement accreditation service, is continuing. However, NAMAS is a voluntary accrediation service and growth between now and the end of 1992 will be determined by the rate at which laboratories apply for accreditation.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will supply the numbers, by standard planning region, of national measurement accreditation centres.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The regional distribution of accreditations granted to laboratories by NAMAS is as follows:

	Number
East	125
South-East	303
South-West	66
East Midlands	60
West Midlands	123
North-East	56
North-West	81
Yorkshire and Humberside	77
Wales	32
Scotland	66
Northern Ireland	19

European Community Standards

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will supply figures, by standard planning region, for the average waiting time between the application by companies for certification of products in accordance with European Community standards and the receipt of certificates.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that this information is not available.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Forth: My Department aims to achieve a 15 per cent. reduction in energy usage over the next five years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department for the latest year available.

Mr. Forth: Energy consumption in buildings occupied by the Department of Trade and Industry in 1988-89, the latest full year for which figures are available, was as follows:

	million
Electricity	37·8 kilowatt hours
Gas	14 therms
Oil	2·8 litres

Export Restrictions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what exports have been refused a licence under the Export of Goods Control Order 1989, since it came into force; for what countries were the prohibited goods destined; and what goods and materials were involved in each case.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 23 April 1990]: It is not the practice to publish such information.

Iraq (Arms Component Exports)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether officials of his Department made any statement or communication to the press prior to 18 April indicating that his Department did not think it likely that the pipes impounded on Teesside by Her Majesty's Customs were for military purposes;

(2) what response his Department gave to the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) when he approached them about the Iraqi contract.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 23 April 1990]: In the light of charges laid against an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the specifications of the Iraqi export order were first available to his Department.

Mr. Ridley: In the light of charges laid against an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the day on which his Department was first made aware of the military implications of the Iraqi contract with Sheffield Forgemasters and Walter Somers;

(2) what was the day on which it was made known to his Department that Dr. Gerald Bull had conceived plans involving piping for a gun or launcher;

(3) what letters there are on the Iraqi contract now known to be for a gun between his Department and Sheffield Forgemasters; and if he will list the dates of them.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 26 April 1990] In the light of charges laid against an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Friedreich's Ataxia

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial support is given to research into Friedreich's Ataxia.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council, which receives grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science, spent £197,000 in 1988-89, the last financial year for which figures are available, on research projects which were relevant to Friedreich's Ataxia. The council is always willing to consider soundly based proposals for research funding in competition with other publications. In addition to this, university departments and medical schools, with support from University Funding Council block grants and heath authorities, may be undertaking research into Friedreich's Ataxia, but information on this is not collected centrally.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of the amount spent by the Medical Research Council in 1989-90.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Medical Research Council's actual gross expenditure in the 1989-90 financial year was £191,143,000.

Environmental Enterprise Award Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of schools and colleges have participated in the environmental enterprise award scheme for schools and colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: The environmental enterprise award scheme is operated on behalf of the Department by the World Wide Fund for Nature with financial support from the Laura Ashley Foundation. It offers prizes to pupils and students in the age range seven to 19 who submit environment-related practical projects.

Following the launch of the scheme in September last year, 134 groups of pupils or students registered projects in 1989-90. Of the 18 registrations by pupils or students in the 16 to 19 age category, five were by students in colleges. The scheme is to continue in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many people were undertaking courses leading to qualifications in environmental protection for each of the last five years.

Mr Jackson: Readily available information is as follows for students in England.

November 1988
Students on courses at establishments in England

	Higher education courses[1] (thousands)	Further education courses[2] (thousands)
Students identified as studying subject:
A[3]	0·6	1·2
B[4]	0·2	0·1
C[5]	3·5	0·1
Total: A, B and C	4·4	1·4

[1] Establishments other than universities.
[2] Excluding adult education courses.
[3] Environmental health; cleaning science; solid waste.
[4] Pollution control; conservation policy.
[5] Human ecology; earth science; environmental studies and other environmental sciences; environmental engineering.

Brighton CTC

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the company or companies intending to invest in Brighton's city technology college at Woodingdean;

(2) what sums of money the private sponsors investing in the new city technology college at Woodingdean, Brighton, will be putting into that project in the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(3) when it is estimated that the Brighton city technology college will be open to receive pupils; and how many pupils will be received in the first year of operation;

(4) what guarantees he has had from the Faraday Trust that adequate sponsorship for the Brighton city technology college project will be forthcoming; and what percentage of the total cost of the project will be provided by the private sector;

(5) what references have been provided for the private sector supporters of the Brighton city technology college; and what measures have been taken to check on those references;

(6) what discussions have recently taken place between Ministers and officials from his Department, local education authority representatives and representatives from the Faraday Trust; and what the contents of those discussions were;

(7) what information he has on the curriculum and admissions policy to be followed by the Brighton city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the pursuant reply that my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on Thursday 26 April 1990, Official Report, column 270.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) in respect of the Brighton city technology college what sums of public money have directly and indirectly been paid over to, or repaid by, Mr. Ivor Revere or to or by any company with which he has been associated; and if, in every case, he will give details of each transaction including date, amount, payee and drawer;

(2) if he will list for each payment forming any part of the sums of £2·3 million and £2·5 million specified in those answers to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) of 20 October 1989, Official Report, column 264 and the hon. Member for Blackburn of 24 April in respect of the Brighton city technology college, the amount and date of each payment, the payee and the drawer.

Mr. MacGregor: In June 1989 a sum of £250,000 was paid from public funds as a deposit for the purchase of the site of the former Fitzherbert school in Brighton. The balance of the price, £2,250,000, was paid from public funds in September 1989. Those sums were paid to the CTC trust and thence to solicitors acting for the trust and by them to solicitors acting for the initial purchaser, Mr. Ivor Revere. In December 1989 the CTC trust discovered that the purchase price of £2·5 million included a commission of £200,000 charged by Mr. Revere. This was immediately recovered and returned to public funds.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what factors account for the difference between the figure given in his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report, 24 April for the sum paid from public funds for the acquisition of the proposed city technology college site in Brighton, and that given in his answer to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) of 20 October 1989, Official Report, column 264.

Mr. MacGregor: The figure of £2·5 million quoted in my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 20 October 1989, Official Report, column 264, included a commission charged by the then principal sponsor of the proposed Brighton CTC who purchased the site initially before its transfer to the CTC trust. The commission was repaid immediately once the CTC trust discovered that it had been charged. The net cost of the site to public funds is £2·3 million, excluding legal expenses, as I told the hon. Member on 24 April, Official Report, column 145.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 24 April, Official Report, column 146, what consultations he is undertaking as part of his review of the proposed Brighton city technology college, following the withdrawal of the principal sponsor; and what deadline he has set for the conclusion of these discussions.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the pursuant reply that I gave to him on Thursday 26 April 1990, Official Report column 270. Consultations were undertaken with the Michael Faraday Trust.

Putney CTC

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make a statement on progress towards establishing a city technology college on the site of the former Mayfield school, Putney;

(2) how much ADT securities or companies and individuals associated with them have offered by way of financial support for the proposed city technology college on the site of the former Mayfield school, Putney; and how much has been paid over by them;

(3) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of the proposed city technology college on the site of the former Mayfield school, Putney; and how much of this is due to be met by (a) private donors (b) public funds.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department is considering proposals to establish a city technical college on the site of the former Mayfield school. ADT plc has pledged £1 million sponsorship towards this project. No payments by the sponsor are required at this stage. Architectural feasibility studies are being undertaken in order to determine the capital costs of establishing the CTC. Until these are completed, no firm figure for capital costs can be given. If a decision is taken in favour of going ahead, I will contribute 80 per cent. of total capital expenditure on this project and the sponsors will contribute the remaining 20 per cent.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response has been made by the Medical Research Council to the letter from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council recommending further research into bronchitis and emphysema following the council's 1988 report, Cm. 379.

Mr. Jackson: The secretary of the Medical Research Council wrote to the Industrial Injuries Council (IIAC) on 3 June 1988 explaining that the council would review the possibilities for further research in this field. When it completes this review it will inform the IIAC of its conclusions. The Medical Research Council is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals in competition with other applications.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much he has spent or allocated for research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy from 1985 to 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) was first diagnosed in November 1986. No funds were allocated specifically for research on it prior to that date. Bovine spongiform encephalopathy belongs to a family of diseases called the transmissible spongiform encephalopathies which include scrapie in sheep. The main United Kingdom centre of research on scrapie and related diseases is the neuropathogenesis unit in Edinburgh which is jointly run by the Agricultural and Food Research Council's institute for animal health and the Medical Research Council. The following table gives the science budget funding allocated by the Agricultural and Food Research Council to the institute for animal health for work on scrapie and related diseases since 1985.

1985-86	584
1986-87	805
1987-88	742
1988-89	702
1989-90	950
1990-91	1,500
1991-92	[1]2,950

University departments, with support from University Funding Council block grants, may be undertaking research on bovine spongiform encephalopathy, but information on this is not collected centrally.

University of Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to review the extent of surplus land and buildings available to University of Wales college of Cardiff.

Mr. Jackson: That is a matter for the institution itself in consultation as necessary with the Universities Funding Council.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to review or clarify the terms of the repayable grant of £4·4 million made to University of Wales college of Cardiff to assist the merger of University college, Cardiff and the University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 20 March 1990, Official Report, column 520.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department aims to reduce energy use by 15 per cent. (temperature corrected at constant prices) over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

Fuel consumption for calendar year 1989

	Quantity
Electricity Kilowatt hours	4,751,507
Gas therms	102,168
Liquid Fuel litres	313,686

This information relates to the Department's headquarters premises and all Her Majesty's inspectorate's local offices.

Parental Choice

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to (a) require parents wishing to change their child's school to state what the reason is for their request and (b) deny any request based on racial grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Local authorities are required by the Education Act 1980 to enable parents to express a preference as to the school their child should attend, and to give reasons for their choice. Such reasons are, quite properly, only of relevance if the school in question is oversubscribed. They will then be tested against the published admission criteria, which cannot be racial ones. In other circumstances, parents' choices should be accepted without further ado.

My right hon. Friend has said, in commending the code of practice recently produced by the Commission for Racial Equality, that racial discrimination has no place in the education service. The Department has also taken a variety of initiatives to improve the response of the education service to ethnic diversity, while the remits to the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council require them, in exercising their functions, to take account of the ethnic and cultural diversity of British society, and of the importance of promoting equal opportunities for all pupils, regardless of ethnic origin and gender.

Medway CTC

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will name all individuals and bodies which have offered themselves as sponsors of the proposed Medway city technology college;

(2) if he will place in the Library copies of letters from him to officers of the Skinners Company covering the proposed Medway city technology college;

(3) if he will make a statement on the sponsorship of the proposed Medway city technology college by (a) the Skinners Company, (b) Cable and Wireless and (c) McAlpine.

Mr. MacGregor: A consortium consisting of Cable and Wireless plc, the Skinners Livery Company, Robert McAlpine and Sons, and Evelyn Rothschild has expressed interest in supporting a city technology college in the Medway area. To date, no project for a city technology college in this area has been agreed, and the court of the Skinners Company has now decided that it will no longer sponsor a city technology college. It is not appropriate to make public details of private correspondence between me and sponsors, or potential sponsors, of city technology colleges.

Welsh Students

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of applications for places in each university college in Wales were made by prospective students from Wales in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 25 April 1990]: Applications to United Kingdom universities for admissions to full-time undergraduate courses are dealt with by the Universities Central Council on Admissions.

Information about the candidature at individual universities, or constituent colleges of individual universities, is not released by the Universities Central Council on Admissions without prior authorisation of the institution (or its constituent colleges).

The table, prepared from data provided by the Universities Central Council on Admissions, shows the percentage of applications from United Kingdom candidates to the University of Wales as a whole made by individuals recorded as being of Welsh domicile.

Applications received for entry to the University of Wales

	per cent.
Academic year beginning:
1979	23·7
1984	20·4
1985	20·0
1986	20·2
1987	19·9
1988	20·4
1989	20·2

Note: Each applicant is permitted to make up to 5 applications for courses falling within the Universities Central Council on Admissions scheme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Population

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current prison population.

Mr. Mellor: On Friday 27 April the total prison population was 45,948. This represents a reduction of some 3,513 since the same time last year. The initiatives taken by the Government to reduce the number of people held in custody are bearing fruit. The intention of our proposals in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" (Cmd. 965) is to reduce the prison population still further.

Pentonville Prison

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what he is doing to speed up the completion of the Pentonville extension;

(2) when the extension at Pentonville was originally expected to be completed; and what the completion date now is.

Mr. Mellor: No plans exist for extending accommodation at Her Majesty's prison Pentonville but a phased programme of improvement work is under way. This includes the refurbishment of the four living blocks, including installation of integral sanitation, and improvements to ancillary facilities.

Refurbishment of the first living block is virtually complete and, on current plans, the remaining blocks should be finished by 1994. Work is due to start in the coming year on a new reception area and improvements to the gate. Other work planned in the next few years includes a new kitchen which should be ready by 1993-94.

Prisons, North-West

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from which prisons in the north-west he has received reports from boards of prison visitors since January.

Mr. Mellor: As at 23 April 1990, annual reports for 1989 had been received from boards of visitors for Her Majesty's prisons Haverigg, Kirkham, Liverpool, Manchester, Risley and Wymott.

Prison Disturbances

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent prison disturbances.

Mr. Mellor: My hon. Friend will understand that following the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend in the House on 26 April at the conclusion of the disturbances at Manchester prison, it would now be appropriate to await the outcome of Lord Justice Woolf's inquiry into the disturbances before seeking to draw conclusions.

In the meantime, however, as was explained to the House last week, my right hon. and learned Friend is taking urgent action in a number of areas to reduce the possibility of a repeat of the appalling events of the last few weeks.

Prison Building

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress on the Government's prison building programme.

Mr. Mellor: The Government are engaged in the largest prison building programme this century. Eight new prisons, providing 3,500 places, are already open. A further 14 are at various stages of construction and design, and are planned to provide over 8,000 new places by 1994. In 1991, we shall be spending nearly £300 million on new prisons.

Much is also being done to improve conditions at existing establishments. In 1990-91, we shall be spending over £120 million in all in improving the prison estate, and over £20 million on major maintenance. Similar sums will be spent in the following two years.

Local Authority Grants

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase grants for use by local authorities' civil defence and emergency planning departments to respond to peacetime natural disasters or industrial accidents.

Mr. John Patten: Provision for civil defence grant payable to local authorities has increased from £21·867 million in 1989-90 to £23·372 million in 1990-91. Under the Civil Protection in Peacetime Act 1986, local authorities may use civil defence resources in connection with emergencies and disasters occurring in peacetime.

Japanese War Criminals

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate an investigation into the possibility of Japanese war criminals who should face criminal proceedings living in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Any allegations that alleged Japanese war criminals may now be resident in the United Kingdom would of course be seriously considered. We are not aware that any such allegations have been made, however, and therefore see no reason to initiate any investigation.

Metropolitan Police Force

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the level of morale in the Metropolitan police force.

Mr. Waddington: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the morale of his force is excellent.

Prisons

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prisons are more than 100 years old.

Mr. Mellor: Thirty-four per cent. of prison establishments (42) in England and Wales were in use as prisons before 1890. Many of these have, of course, been substantially altered or reconstructed since they first opened as prisons. In addition, 4 per cent. of establishments (five) are in premises which are partly or wholly over 100 years old but which have been converted to prison service use more recently.

Remand

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many objections were received by his Department to the building of a new remand facility at Everthorpe.

Mr. Mellor: Apart from representations made by my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis), four letters and a petition signed by 65 residents were received objecting, in principle, to the building of the remand centre on the Home Office land at Everthorpe. Additionally, 19 representations were received in respect of the loss of woodland on the site chosen.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to his Department of keeping Lorrain Osman in prison on remand; and how long that period of remand has been.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Osman was remanded in custody on 7 December 1985 pending consideration of a request for his extradition.

On 1 June 1987 he was committed to custody to await the Secretary of State's order for his surrender to the Hong Kong authorities. Mr. Osman has not yet been returned to Hong Kong because of the series of appeals initiated by him against extradition.

On the basis of average operating costs for Pentonville prison, the total cost to date of detaining Mr. Osman is estimated at about £56,000.

Overseas Voters

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the proposed expenditure in 1990-91 on advertising the rights of overseas voters under the Representation of the People Act 1989, for each overseas country;

(2) what is the total sum to be spent in 1990-91 advertising the rights available under the Representation of the People Act 1990 to overseas voters.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is set out in the table.

Settlement

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of people allowed to settle in the United Kingdom from other countries in each year from 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total number of persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in each of the years 1979 to 1989 is published in table 18 of the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1988" (Cm 726) and in table 3 of Home Office Statistical bulletin issue 8/90 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1989", copies of both of which are in the Library.

Falmouth Police Station

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet able to announce the commencement date for Falmouth's new police station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Approval has now been given for the building of the new police station to start in 1992-93.

Magistracy

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on (a) the duties and (b) the separation of responsibilities of the magistracy and of the justices' clerks and managers' administrative roles;

(2) if he will make a statement on the judicial independence of magistrates, with reference to the proposals of the Le Vay report;

(3) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on joint funding between central and local government of the magistracy; what implications have been assessed for other funding arrangements; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what alternative is being considered to the agency proposed in the Le Vay report on magistrates courts;

(5) if he will make a statement on progress towards the implementation of the Le Vay report on the magistracy.

Mr. John Patten: As my right hon. and learned Friend stated in his reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) on 21 March 1990 at column 634, we wish to have well-founded estimates of the costs of the executive agency proposals in the scrutiny report and for comparison purposes those of an alternative model based on areas managed by independent boards. I have already made it clear that we shall not reach decisions on the structure or future financing of the magistrates courts service until we have an opportunity to consider these estimates. In reaching decisions we shall take into consideration both the paramount importance of preserving the independence of judicial processes and the need to ensure that there are satisfactory arrangements for the effective and efficient management of the resources committed to the magistrates courts service.

Mr. Viv Richards

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether any request was made for police protection for Mr. Vivian Richards on his arrival at Heathrow airport on 23 April;

(2) what was the cost of the provision of a police escort for Mr. Vivian Richards on his arrival at Heathrow airport on 23 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No request was made to the Home Office, but I understand that Mr. Richards was escorted by the police through Heathrow airport on 23 April to prevent congestion caused by the extensive media interest. No additional costs were incurred, and, contrary to some press reports, none of the police officers was armed.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Waddington: A target reduction of 15 per cent. over five years has been set.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not readily available in respect of all the buildings occupied by the Home Office. However, in respect of the 21 buildings which in 1989-90 accounted for over 70 per cent. of Home Office total expenditure on energy, the information is as follows:

Energy consumption in 21 Home Office buildings in 1989-90

Metropolitan Police (Housing Allowance)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the amount of the new force housing allowance for the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The new force housing allowance for the Metropolitan police has not yet been set.

Wildlife Protection (Prosecutions)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions of drivers have been instigated, and how many resulted in successful prosecution, in respect of deaths to protected species under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 as a result of collisions with traffic; and if he will make a statement;

(2) under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, how many prosecutions have been instigated, and how many have been successful, in respect of the illegal poisoning of birds of prey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available centrally.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters to him of 29 December 1989, 5 February and 23 March 1990, with regard to Mrs. R. Sarwar of 209 Northmoor road.

Mr. Waddington: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Missile Technology Control Regime

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to initiate amendments to the missile technology control regime agreements to include prohibitions on the sale of large-scale projectile launchers and high altitude cannon.

Mr. Waldegrave: The missile technology control regime (MTCR) aims to control transfers that could make a contribution to nuclear weapons delivery systems other than manned aircraft. Launch and ground support equipment and facilities usable for delivery systems falling within the MTCR parameters are already covered under item 12 of the MTCR equipment and technology annex.

European Security Commission

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the European security commission proposed by President Havel of Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Czechoslovak Government outlined their proposal to representatives of CSCE countries in Prague on 6 April. We expect to have further discussions with the Czechoslovak authorities after considering the proposal in NATO.

Turkey

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised with the Turkish Government issues of human rights abuses in that country.

Mr. Maude: We regularly raise the issue of human rights in Turkey with the Turkish Government. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the matter when he saw the deputy Prime Minister on 22 January. Most recently my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised the question with President Ozal on 25 April.

Rights of the Child

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has established a timetable for ratification of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom signed the United Nations convention on the rights of the child on 19 April 1990. We intend to ratify the convention as soon as possible.

Mr. Jonathon Moyle

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will call for a report from Her Majesty's ambassador in Santiago on the death of British editor Jonathon Moyle in his hotel room in Santiago on 28 or 29 March; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he is satisfied that the Chilean authorities are fully investigating the death in his hotel room in Santiago on 28 or 29 March, of Jonathon Moyle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Her Majesty's embassy at Santiago is in contact with the examining magistrate, and keeps the consular department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office fully informed of developments in the investigation into Mr. Moyle's death on 31 March 1990. The consular department is in contact with Mr. Moyle's parents and former employers.

A Chilean magistrate gave approval on 2 April 1990 for a full investigation into the death of Mr. Moyle. The Chilean authorities are pursuing their investigation vigorously and the results are expected shortly.

Mr. Victor Taipe Zuniga

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now raise with the Peruvian Government the detention of Victor Taipe Zuniga, president of the National Mineworkers Federation.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British embassy in Lima is looking into this case and has contacted the Peruvian authorities.

Cambodia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has any plans to re-examine its policy in respect of the seating of Cambodian representatives at the United Nations.

Mr. Sainsbury: We shall have to look closely at the question of Cambodia's seat at the United Nations in the context of current diplomatic activity aimed at achieving a peaceful settlement.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit a copy of the report by the British mission to Cambodia of December 1989 in the Library.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 31 January, Official Report, column 223.

Burma

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding United Kingdom relations with Burma.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 27 February, Official Report, column 111.

European Community (Member States)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has raised within the European Community the issue of the constitutional imperative of one member state to work for the acquisition of part of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No. The EC does not have competence to consider questions of interpretation of the constitution of the Republic of Ireland.

European Civil Service

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase the number of (a) generalist, (b) specialist, (c) lawyers and (d) economist British recruits to the European civil service.

Mr. Maude: While appointments are a matter for the EC institutions themselves, we are working with the European Commission to improve the recruitment of British nationals throughout the range of disciplines, and particularly as generalists. We and the Commission have recently agreed a package of measures aimed at increasing recruitment of United Kingdom nationals. These include regular recruitment competitions for generalists in addition to those for lawyers and economists, the bringing forward of more United Kingdom nationals from the reserve list of those successful in competitions, and improved publicity.

For our part we are taking action to increase the number of United Kingdom candidates applying for employment in the institutions. A European stream within administrative grade recruitment to the civil service will be created, increased funding provided for secondments to the EC institutions and a central unit established within the Cabinet Office to co-ordinate the British recruitment effort.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest developments in Somalia and any international discussions regarding Somali refugees.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Somali Government's proposals for internal reconciliation have so far been rebuffed by the Somali National Movement. The situation of Somali refugees is kept under review by the relevant international organisations. So far this year, we have contributed a further £325,000 for Somali refugees.

Gibraltar

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from (a) the Irish Government and (b) the Spanish Government about his decision to issue certificates under the Crown Proceedings Act in respect of legal action relating to the deaths of three persons in Gibraltar.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have had no representations.

Launching Equipment

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has had (a) from the Government of Canada and (b) from the Government of Barbados about pictures of the launching equipment in their countries constructed by the late Dr. Bull.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he first received warnings from the United States of America about the Space Research Corporation.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the light of the charges laid against an individual on 25 April and in the light of the continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be wrong to make further comments on these matters.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration each aim to reduce energy consumption by 15 per cent. over the next five years at an annual rate of 3 per cent.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department for the latest year available.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the calendar year 1989, energy consumption in Foreign and Commonwealth Office buildings was:

	Energy consumption
(i) Electricity	19,411,000 kwh
(ii) Gas	391,000 therms
(iii) Fuel Oil	1,003,000 litres

The figures are taken from statistical returns produced by the Property Services Agency (PSA).

The PSA does not provide details of ODA fuel consumption. However, expenditure in the financial year 1988-89 was:

(i) Electricity	95,641
(ii) Gas	70,250

Iraq (Missile Development)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he first became aware of Iraq's involvement in an advanced missile development programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: We first became aware of Iraq's involvement with advanced ballistic missiles in 1987 when Iraq announced it had developed missiles with a 650 km range. It used such missiles against Iran in early 1988.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Lorrain Osman

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General what have been the costs incurred by Her Majesty's Government in dealing with all aspects of the Lorrain Osman case.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The costs fall into three general categories. First, there is the cost of his detention, on which I would refer the hon. Member to the other reply given to him today on this matter. Secondly there are the legal costs incurred in the proceedings in the United Kingdom against Mr. Osman, and in respect of his subsequent appeals. Up to his committal, such costs fell to the Hong Kong Government. Costs identified so far in the first of Mr. Osman's habeas corpus applications amount to over £20,000. Costs incurred in the second and third habeas corpus applications were awarded against Mr. Osman. Finally there are the administrative costs incurred by Ministers and officials in dealing with the case, answering correspondence, parliamentary questions, and so on. These arise from the normal duties of the people concerned and cannot be calculated separately.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Stationery

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take steps to arrange for a stationery supplies store to be established in the Palace of Westminster for the purchase of common office requirements not readily available in shops close to the Palace.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Present plans envisage that the first opportunity to establish any such service for those who work in the House will arise with the completion of phase I of the new parliamentary buildings when a small general shop run by the Refreshment Department and selling a limited range of essential items will be opened. Thereafter it is understood that planning for phase 2 will include the provision of a number of retail units.

European Community Business

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he now expects the Government to respond to the Select Committee on Procedure's report on how European Community business should be dealt with by the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Government have been giving detailed and careful consideration to the issues covered by the report and I expect to be in a position to publish their response shortly.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by the Privy Council Office;

(2) if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by the Privy Council Office for the latest year available.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Privy Council Office occupies part of the Cabinet Office building in Whitehall. In the financial year 1989-90 the costs to the Department for the supply of electricity and gas were £10,923 and £1,920 respectively. The office has no formal targets for reducing consumption, but expects to contribute to the overall reduction of 15 per cent. over five years proposed for Government Departments by the Energy Efficiency Office of the Department of Energy.

HEALTH

Leighton Hospital, Crewe

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been done into the numbers of private patients using Leighton hospital, Crewe, during the last two years and their views on the creation of an independent hospital trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest information held centrally on private patients treated at Leighton hospital is given in the table.

Private patients, Leighton hospital, Crewe District Health Authority, 1987-88 and 1988-89

	1987-88	1988-89
Average daily occupied beds	6·5	9·5
In-patient cases treated	950·0	917·0
Day case admissions	423·0	573·0
In-patients occupying a bed as at 31 March	7·0	8·0
In-patient average length of stay (days)	2·5	3·8

Source: KP21 return.

Since 1989, Leighton hospital has provided no accommodation for private in-patients and day cases, although it continues to receive an income from other services provided for private patients. We know of no research into the views of private patients on the creation of independent hospital trusts.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute a consultation procedure in the Crewe and Nantwich area which will enable patients and the general populace of Crewe and Nantwich to give their opinions on the creation of an independent hospital trust at Leighton hospital, Crewe.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It will be for Mersey region to determine locally the detailed arrangements to be made for consultation if an application for NHS trust status is submitted by Leighton hospital. We have made it clear that we expect regions to seek the views of all those with an interest, including the local community.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what machinery has been recommended by his Department to Leighton hospital, Crewe as a means of consulting the staff before any decisions are taken on the creation of an independent hospital trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Applications for NHS trust status will not be invited until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation. It will then be for regions to determine locally the detailed arrangements to be made for formal consultation on applications. We have made it clear that we expect them to seek the views of all those with an interest, including the staff at the unit concerned.

Radiation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he, or officials of his Department, have been invited to participate in, or be observers at, the sixth international standing conference on low-level radiation and health, to be held at the University college of north Wales, Bangor, on 7 to 8 July.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he, Ministers or officials of his Department, have been invited to attend, or present a paper at, the seminar on environmental radioactivity and leukaemia clusters, to be held at the Institute of Cryogenics at Southampton university on 1 June.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has received notice of this scientific seminar and an official will attend as an observer. In addition, I understand that papers will be presented by officers from the National Radiological Protection Board, and the public health laboratory service.

Nursing Staff

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of nursing staff employed in private hospitals in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the year ending 31 March 1988, the latest date for which this information is available centrally, there were 56,447 nursing staff (whole-time equivalents) employed in private hospitals, homes and clinics in England.

Source: KO36 return 1988. Private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under Section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects a review to be undertaken into the special hospitals system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Major changes in the management of the special hospitals service were made during the latter half of 1989, including the transfer of management responsibility to the new special hospitals service authority and the introduction of general management. We have instructed the authority to review existing policies and priorities within the strategic framework provided by the Government's stated objectives for the further development of the service, to provide an effective basis for its management of special hospitals in future years. We will review its progress regularly, and a comprehensive evaluation of the new arrangements will be undertaken in due course.

Drugs

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris) on 4 April at column 652, if his Department has made any forecast of the likely increase in the cost of drugs in 1990-91; what this increase is likely to be; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department's forecast of the cost of drugs and appliances prescribed by general practitioners and dispensed by pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors in England is published in the supply estimates 1990-91 (242-XIII, HMSO), a copy of which is in the Library.

The forecasts of expenditure are the subject of continual updating as new information becomes available, and the statistical models from which the forecasts are derived are subject to close monitoring and development. The Department has recently commissioned management consultants to review its models and suggest improvements. The Department will shortly be revising its forecast of drugs expenditure in the family practitioner service in the light of both the forthcoming consultants' report and recent outturn information.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes are planned in the funding arrangements for the blood transfusion service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No fundamental changes to the arrangements for blood supply to the National Health Service are planned.

New accounting arrangements are being introduced which will help to establish closer relationships between regional transfusion centres and their hospitals and so enable an even better service to be provided. These changes affect the way in which the regional transfusion centres are funded for their operating costs of approximately £70 million per annum. The regional health authorities have traditionally allocated funds direct to the regional transfusion centres. In future those funds will be devolved to the district health authorities and the regional transfusion centres will recover their operating costs in proportion to the districts' demands on the regional transfusion centre for blood supplies.

The reimbursement of the regional transfusion centres will not include any element for the blood itself. This is freely donated by voluntary donors to whom we are all indebted.

I understand that two regional transfusion centres have introduced the new arrangements from 1 April this year and the others plan to do so from 1 April 1991.

Adoption (Romania)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the procedures to be followed when couples in the United Kingdom wish to bring a baby from Romania for adoption in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are established procedures whereby prospective adopters, once the Romanian authorities have provisionally agreed to place a child with them, should obtain entry clearance for the child. The application is made to the consulate in Bucharest. This must include information about the child, his state of health, and documents to verify that the child is legally available for adoption, with parental consent where appropriate. The application is transmitted without delay to London where my Department requests that the applicants' local authority undertakes, within a maximum of six weeks, the inquiries necessary to determine that the applicants are suitable adopters for that child. We have asked local authorities to act swiftly in the current Romanian crisis.

These procedures are necessary to protect the children in accordance with the central principle of adoption law that the child's welfare is the first consideration. It would be wrong—and in breach of the United Nations declaration on adoption and fostering—if lower standards were applied to Romanian children who are especially in need of protection from further risk.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure the quality of care in residential care homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are today publishing "Caring for Quality" guidance on standards for residential homes for elderly people. Copies have been placed in the Library. This SSI publication is an important further component of the Department's programme to raise standards in residential care. Steps are being taken to improve standards in residential care homes. Other measures include:

The setting up by local authorities of arms length inspection units to inspect all homes, whether public or independent, in an even-handed way;

A training pack for registration and inspection staff commissioned by the Department which was published earlier this year;

A £2·2 million development programme, the caring in homes initiative, aimed at improving life for people in residential care homes;

From 1 April 1991 social services authorities will be responsible for meeting the care costs of people eligible for public support who enter independently run residential and nursing homes. In entering into contracts with such homes authorities will be expected to satisfy themselves of the quality of care provided. In addition, care managers will ensure that the needs of the individual continue to be monitored.

The complaints procedures for personal social services to be set up and publicised by all social services authorities will provide additional safeguards.

The Registered Homes Act 1984 and associated regulations placed a responsibility on local authorities to register private and voluntary residential care homes catering for four or more residents, to inspect them at least twice a year and to ensure that good standards are maintained. Fresh legislation is under consideration to bring homes for fewer than four residents under control.

Health Service Indicators

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Health Service indicators for 1988-89 will be published.

Mr. Freeman: The set of 1988-89 indicators, which has just been sent to every English health authority, has been placed in the Library.

Kidney Patients (HIV Infection)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many kidney patients have received HIV-contaminated blood as a result of transfusions; and if he will take steps to make such persons eligible to benefit from the funds held by the Macfarlane Trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Of the reports received by the communicable disease surveillance centre of cases of HIV infection among the recipients of blood transfusions, none relates to kidney patients.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health is currently considering its energy policy and aims to achieve the target suggested by the ministerial group on energy efficiency of a 15 per cent. improvement over five years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Freeman: The last year for which figures are available is 1988-89 and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security will provide the figures for the then Department of Health and Social Security.

Capital Accountancy System

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grounds underline the decision to use an interest rate figure of 6 per cent. in the new capital accountancy system to be introduced into the National Health Service in 1991.

Mr. Freeman: The 6 per cent. interest rate is a real (as opposed to nominal) rate based on the long-term cost of capital, and is the same as the discount rate used for the non-trading part of the public sector. The discount rate is based on the cost of capital for low-risk purposes in the private sector, and aims to ensure that investments in the public sector are broadly comparable, in terms of economic efficiency, to those undertaken in the private sector.

Regional Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate what the allocations would have been to each English regional health authority for 1990-91 if the same cash total had been distributed on the same basis as the 1988-89 allocations; what is the difference between the allocation estimated as above and the actual allocation; and if he will express the actual allocation as a percentage of the estimated allocation.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 4 April 1990]: The table shows the information which is available, and 1988-89 was the final year of allocations under the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula. Allocations in 1989-90 were based on a uniform increase for all regions, while 1990-91 allocations represent the beginning of the introduction of the new weighted capitation formula proposed in "Working for Patients".

It is not possible to estimate what regions would have received in 1990-91 if the old RAWP formula had been applied. Allocations in 1988-89 were based on ministerial judgment about the right pace of movement towards funding targets set by the old allocation formula. The question of how Ministers would have exercised their judgment in 1990-91 if the old system had continued is an entirely hypothetical one.

Furthermore, the application of the RAWP formula would require information which is no longer collected.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has examined the findings of the Bristol pathologist specialising in sudden infant deaths.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 April 1990]: We are aware of a three-year study due for completion in 1993 which the department of child health at Bristol maternity hospital is undertaking into factors which may be contributing to sudden infant deaths. I understand that the team, which includes a paediatric pathologist, will be collecting information on the social and medical history of infants who die and recording data on the thermal environment and levels of electro-magnetic radiation present in their homes. Comparisons will be made with a control group of healthy infants. We await the outcome of this research with keen interest.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the case of the Birmingham pub bombings was raised by either side at the recent meeting of the Anglo-Irish conference.

Mr. Cope: No.

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contacts his Department has had with the BBC over its preparation for the "Private View" programmes about the Kincora boys' home.

Mr. Cope: None. I am not aware of any programmes called "Private View". An approach was made to my Department's press office by the BBC's "Public Eye" programme but no assistance was offered to the programme.

Terrorism (Use of Stolen Vehicles)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been charged in (a) the Irish Republic and (b) Northern Ireland with the theft in the Irish Republic of vehicles which were subsequently used in terrorist incidents in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 April 1990]: The information is not collated centrally, but I understand that since 1 January 1989, no such charges have been brought.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vehicles stolen in the Irish Republic have been used in bombings, shootings or other terrorist incidents in Northern Ireland since the beginning of 1989; and if he will give details.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 April 1990]: Comprehensive and reliable information is not available.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what contribution the United Kingdom has made to the International Atomic Energy Agency's assessment of safety significant events team programme; and what benefits he expects to accrue to safety of nuclear facilities in the United Kingdom from ASSET.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom endorses the International Atomic Energy Agency's (IAEA) "Assessment of Safety-Significant Events Team" (ASSET) service, and recognises the contribution which it makes to the improvement of operational safety worldwide by assisting nuclear operators to achieve the safe operation of installations. However, given the expertise of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate, we see no current need to request the services of ASSET in order to ensure a safe operating regime at the United Kingdom's civil nuclear installations.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the recent meeting he had with the trade unions at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy and I met Atomic Energy Authority staff trade unions representatives on 22 January 1990. We discussed a range of issues, including the formation of Nuclear Electric, the maintenance of the nuclear option and the greenhouse effect.

Electricity Companies (Audits)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that independent audits in respect of (a) the finances and (b) the environmental commitment of electricity companies are made freely available to the public.

Mr. Baldry: All limited liability companies are obliged to have an independent audit of their accounts under the Companies Act 1985. The annual accounts of the companies must be submitted to Companies House where they are available for inspection. Schedule 9 to the Electricity Act 1989 requires licence holders to prepare and publish an environmental statement, after consultation with the Countryside Commission, Nature Conservancy Council and other statutory bodies. These documents, when finalised, should complement the guiding principles set out in the statement of environmental care prepared and publicised by the generators last year.

Pollution Abatement Technology

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to create a fund for National Power and PowerGen to fund the installation and maintenance of pollution abatement technology.

Mr. Baldry: I have no such plans.

Oil and Gas Resources

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will publish his next report on the development of the oil and gas resources of the United Kingdom, the Brown Book.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have today published the latest edition of the Brown Book, and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office. The report gives a detailed account of the development of oil and gas resources during 1990.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Wakeham: The only building of which the Department of Energy is the sole occupant is its London headquarters, into which it moved in September 1989. That building already has an up-to-date building energy management system and other energy-saving measures judged likely to be cost-effective after the necessary period for the building, plant and equipment to settle down. In its premises in Aberdeen, Glasgow, London and Lytham the Department is a minor occupant; and it is for the major occupants to set targets for reductions in energy consumption within the Government's overall policy. At Leicester, where energy consumption is determined by the meter testing operations carried out by the Department's gas and oil measurement branch, I have set a target for reductions of 15 per cent. over the next five years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1989-90 my Department spent a total of £186,585 on fuel, of which £167,655 was spent on electricity and £18,930 on gas. The Department moved to new headquarters premises during the year and complete consumption figures are not available. The figures do not include fuel consumption at the Department's former headquarters building, where fuel was included within the overall accommodation charge paid to the Property Services Agency.

Fuel Exports and Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the total value at constant prices of oil, natural gas and coal exported and imported, respectively, in March on the same basis as his answer of 9 November 1989, Official Report, columns 767-68;

(2) what was the total tonnage of oil, natural gas and coal exported and imported, respectively, in March on the same basis as his answer of 9 November 1989, Official Report, columns 767-68.

Mr. Wakeham: The equivalent information for exports and imports of oil, gas and coal for March 1990 as set out in my earlier answer of 9 November 1989, Official Report, columns 767-68 is not yet available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total of electricity imported and exported through the channel link with France in each month of 1989 and each of the first three months of 1990; and what was the value of such imports and exports in each month in question.

Mr. Wakeham: The most up-to-date information on electricity imports is as follows:

	Volume (gigawatt hours)	Value (£ million)
1989
January	1,259·5	26·7
February	1,004·9	21·2
March	1,007·5	21·3
April	1,129·9	24·0
May	1,339·4	29·9
June	1,210·3	27·0
July	1,419·7	33·2
August	1,150·1	24·9
September	1,227·8	27·0
October	1,426·6	28·5
November	962·9	21·6
December	834·8	19·7
1990
January	1,092·5	25·8
February	0	0

Source: Customs and Excise, Overseas Trade Statistics.

There were no exports of electricity in any of the above months except January 1990. In January 1990 electricity exports amounted to 1,069 gigawatt hours, worth £25·2 million.

Figures for March 1990 are not yet available.

Industrial Development Grants

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the grants made by his Department under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 showing the value of the grant as a percentage of the whole project cost.

Mr. Wakeham: No such grants have been made.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the advertising component of the budget of the Energy Efficiency Office for each year since its inception.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Advertising is part of a much wider marketing strategy for the Energy Efficiency Office. However, the advertising component of the Energy Efficiency Office's budget since its inception in 1983 is as follows:

	£000
1983-84	1,630
1984-85	4,227
1985-86	4,191
1986-87	6,062
1987-88	942
1988-89	1,842
1989-90	806

Coal Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his privatisation plans for the coal industry.

Mr. Baldry: It remains the Government's intention to introduce legislation during the next Parliament to return British Coal's coal mining activities to the private sector. The timing and form in which they will be privatised have yet to be decided.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make a statement on reduced earnings allowance.

Mr. Scott: Our policy on reduced earnings allowance, which was thoroughly discussed during the passage of this year's Social Security Bill, is set out in Cm. 917 "The Way Ahead", copies of which are available in the Library.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether any departmental advice has been given to the independent doctors who sit on vaccine damage tribunals regarding the implications of the Loveday judgment on their consideration of whether or not, on the balance of probabilities, a child has been damaged by whooping cough vaccine;

(2) how many doctors sit on the vaccine damage tribunals, and what are their specialties and experience.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: These matters are the responsibility of the president of social security and medical appeal tribunals and vaccine damage tribunals and arrangements have been made for him to respond to the right hon. Member.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for a vaccine damage payment because of alleged damage from the whooping cough vaccine, given either separately or in combination with other vaccines, were received in 1989 and in each of the preceding four years; and in each case what proportion were successful.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The available information is given in the table.

Number of claims and awards under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act on the grounds that whooping cough vaccine (administered either singly or in combination with other vaccines) caused severe disablement 1985 to 1989

	Number of claims	Number of awards[1]
1989	20	nil
1988	23	3
1987	37	9
1986	42	15
1985	52	23

[1] The awards in each year do not necessarily relate to the claims made within the same year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence from other countries is considered by doctors adjudicating on applications for vaccine damage payments because of alleged damage from the whooping cough vaccine; and whether they are encouraged to consider evidence from those countries which also have vaccine damage payments schemes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In considering whether severe disablement was caused by a particular vaccine the doctor will have regard to the body of research and medical opinion emerging worldwide. In particular, as part of the evidence, account has to be taken of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's decision in the case of Loveday v. Renton. After taking evidence from a wide range of medical opinion both from this country and abroad, Lord Justice Stuart-Smith concluded that he was not satisfied on the balance of probability that pertussis vaccine can cause permanent brain damage in young children.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any vaccine damage payments have been made to children allegedly damaged by the whooping cough vaccine since the announcement of the Loveday judgment.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since April 1988, when judgment was given in Loveday v. Renton, there have been no vaccine damage payments in respect of claims made on the grounds that whooping cough vaccine caused severe disablement.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response has been made to the letter from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council recommending further research into bronchitis and emphysema following the council's 1988 report (Cm. 379).

Mr. Scott: Various avenues are being pursued, including consultations with the Medical Research Council, and I understand that the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council is discussing ways of establishing a formal study with the steel industry, the European coal and steel fund and the Health and Safety Executive.

21-hour Rule

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department has any plans to issue new guidelines to social security officials on how to apply the 21-hour rule for unemployed adults wishing to study; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department is shortly to issue to officials clarification of its existing procedures. The instruction will be designed to ensure that the Department's policy is operated as efficiently as possible and no new guidelines on its policy concerning the application of the 21-hour rule or changes of that policy are involved.

Family Credit

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will supply figures for the number of people claiming family credit for each district authority in the counties of (a) Cleveland, (b) Cumbria, (c) Durham, (d) Northumberland and (e) Tyne and Wear; and if he will indicate in each case what percentage this represents of the total eligible to claim family benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is available only in relation to the Department's own local office areas. The latest available information about the number of families receiving family credit who at the time their awards were made were living in the areas covered by the local offices in the counties concerned is as follows.

	Number
Ashington	661
Barrow in Furness	482
Berwick upon Tweed	277
Bishop Auckland	929
Blyth	713
Carlisle	701
Chester-le-Street	360

Sunderland (South)	695
Wallsend	428
Whitehaven	299
Workington	422

Information about the total numbers of families eligible for family credit can be obtained only for Great Britain as a whole, and only retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead of 23 April, Official Report, column 87, how many of the new and review applications relating to vibration white finger were completed in each calendar month since January of this year.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Action Credit Schemes

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what national insurance contribution is payable by participants in action credit schemes who are in receipt of a £5 per week disregard in order to maintain a full national insurance contribution record; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Earnings from action credit schemes are normally accrued by the employer in a special account and are released to the employee at the end of the training period. A single earnings-related class 1 national insurance contribution is due on the final payment and is subject to the weekly upper earnings limit. Participants can also pay voluntary class 3 contributions during the course of the scheme.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department's target for energy savings is to reduce the level of consumption by 15 per cent. over the next five years, after correction for weather and space occupied, in line with the Government's overall target for energy consumption.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department for the latest year available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures are for the financial year 1988-89. The division of administration of the Department of Health and Social Security was not completed at that time and the figures therefore reflect the consumption of both Departments.

	Energy consumption
Gas	7·8m therms
Electricity	130m kWhrs
Solid fuel	4,250 tonnes
Liquid fuel	4·6m litres

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to enable people on action credit schemes to maintain full entitlement to national insurance contributions if (a) the participant receives the commission bonus, but remains unemployed, and (b) the participant receives the commission bonus and enters full-time employment.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A person who completes a course of training under an action credit scheme but who subsequently remains unemployed can then claim class 1 national insurance contributions credits. If he or she enters full-time employment class 1 national insurance contributions will be payable in the normal way.

WALES

Channel Tunnel

13. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last discussed with the chairman of British Rail investment in facilities for the marshalling of freight for transmission through the channel tunnel.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have had discussions with British Rail at both national and regional level during 1989. Further discussions at national level will be taking place next week.

Local Government

14. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of (a) county councils and (b) district councils in Wales; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I met representatives of the Welsh Counties Committee and the Council of Welsh Districts on 30 January to discuss local authority budgets for 1990-91. I also met Gwent district councils association on 13 March 1990, when it discussed a variety of issues. On 25 April I had the pleasure of opening the new headquarters for the Council of Welsh Districts in Cardiff.

Training and Enterprise Councils

15. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the proposed total expenditure for training in Wales in 1990-91; how much of this will be spent on training and enterprise councils; and what assessment he has made of the progress made in developing these councils.

Mr. Roberts: The Training Agency's total budget for Wales is £144,324,000. How much of this will be allocated to TECs will depend upon their individual start dates. The network of TECs in Wales is now complete with seven councils in the development phase. I am extremely pleased that we have reached this position much earlier than originally envisaged and look forward to all the TECs in Wales being operational by about the turn of the year.

Legislative Devolution

16. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for legislative devolution in the Principality.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Welsh Language

17. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the Welsh language in the national curriculum.

Mr. Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received a great number of representations about Welsh in the national curriculum, including about 160 responses to his statutory consultation exercises.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 9 March 1990 the number of unemployment claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales was 4,636, 13,722 and 86,638 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made. Since the last general election unemployment in Newport district, Gwent and Wales has fallen by 49·2 per cent., 47·4 per cent. and 45·1 per cent. respectively.

Local Government Finance

19. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of local government expenditure will be raised from the community charge payer, the uniform business rate payer and Government grant; and what were the Government's original estimates if councils had kept to Government spending guidelines.

Mr. Peter Walker: On the basis of local authority budgets for 1990-91, 58 per cent. of expenditure will be met from Government grant, 20 per cent. from the national non-domestic rate and 22 per cent. by charge payers. After allowing for rebates and transitional relief the amount met locally should reduce to below 19 per cent.

If local government had spent in line with my settlement 61 per cent. of its expenditure would have been met by central Government grant and 21 per cent. by non-domestic rates, leaving 18 per cent. to be met by community charge payers. After taking account of transitional relief and community charge rebates the share met by charge payers would have fallen to below 15 per cent.

21. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to increase the standard spending assessment for Clwyd.

Mr. Peter Walker: Standard spending assessments (SSAs) for 1990-91 were discussed with, and agreed by, the Welsh local government associations. The formulae for 1991-92 are under discussion and all representations will be considered before final decisions are taken on grant distribution for that year.

22. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his experience with implementation of the community charge in the current year; and whether he will recommend any major changes in its application next year.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have been impressed with the professionalism demonstrated by Welsh local authorities in implementing the community charge, and I have written to the chairmen of the associations to that effect. As with any new policy, the Government will monitor the working of the policy in practice.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the number of local authorities in Wales which are charging standard community charge on empty properties at (a) single rate, (b) double rate (c) other ratios.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no such assessment. I shall shortly be collecting information from all charging authorities about the use they have made of their powers to specify property classes and set multipliers at less than the maximum.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has held with the local authorities in Wales on the level of standard community charge to be levied on empty properties.

Mr. Peter Walker: I consulted the Welsh local authority associations on draft regulations prescribing standard charge classes and maximum multipliers for those classes. Within the framework established by legislation and regulations, decisions on standard charge multipliers for any class of property are for individual charging authorities.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to visit any of the poll tax administration and collection offices in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no present plans to do so.

Sea Defences

20. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will order an immediate and comprehensive review of the Principality's sea defences.

Mr. Grist: A survey of the sea defences round the coastline of Wales and England was announced by the chairman of the National Rivers Authority, Lord Crickhowell, on 22 March.

Baden-Wurttemberg

23. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives from the government in Baden-Wurttemberg; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I had the very great pleasure of accompanying the Minister—President of Baden-Wurttemberg, Herr Dr. Lothar Spath, and other members of his delegation, including senior business men, during their visit to Wales on 26-27 March. Together, Herr Dr. Spath and I signed a co-operation agreement between Wales and Baden-Wurttemberg which will pave the way for joint activity in a range of industrial, academic, technological and commercial fields.

Transport

24. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had any recent discussion with Welsh local authorities on the future of transport.

Mr. Roberts: My right hon. Friend has had a number of meetings with local authorities' representatives, including the Gwent District Councils Association on 13 March 1990. A variety of issues, including transport, was discussed.

Flooding, Towyn

25. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what communication he has had with the European Community regarding aid for flood victims in Towyn.

Mr. Grist: The Department has been involved in arranging payment of £111,500 as EC aid to the three appeals set up by the mayors of Colwyn, Rhuddlan and Delyn.

Local Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what would be the estimated charge on the basis of current expenditure (a) per household and (b) per capita for each Welsh district if a system of local income tax were introduced.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 22 February 1989, c. 624. I have made no subsequent estimates of the effect of introducing a local income tax in Wales.

Waste Recycling

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy regarding the separation and recycling of waste by district, borough and city councils in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 27 April, c. 366-67.

Road Deaths

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of road fatalities in Wales since 1 October 1989 and for each year from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Roberts: Data for 1990 are not yet available, but the provisional figure for the period October to December 1989, the latest available, is 55. Information requested is as follows for the remaining years.

	Fatal road casualties
1980	268
1981	275
1982	300
1983	245
1984	250
1985	245
1986	235
1987	220
1988	226
[1]1989	232

[1] Provisional.

Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health authorities which provide a full-time psychiatric nursing service seven days a week; and if he will provide details of emergency cover arrangements made by those authorities which do not have a full-time service.

Mr. Grist: Deployment of psychiatric nurses is a matter for individual health authorities. The information requested is not available centrally.

Mental Hospital Sites

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that money raised from the sale of mental hospital sites is used in full for the development of services for the mentally ill.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office proposes to issue later this year revised and consolidated guidance to district health authorities on the management of the National Health Service estate, including the disposal of National Health Service land and buildings. In respect of the use of receipts from sales at mental illness hospital sites this guidance will concentrate on the need, already clearly stated in the Welsh Office mental illness strategy, for health authorities to satisfy themselves in advance of significant reductions in the provision of hospital psychiatric services that there is a pattern of alternative services available which will meet adequately the individual needs of persons suffering from a mental illness who are or would otherwise have been in hospital. The Welsh Office will wish to be assured through the county mental illness plans drawn up by the district health authorities, social services authorities and other interested groups, through the executive committee's annual review process of district health authorities' performance and through the revised arrangements for local consultation on changes in health services that this is happening and in particular that there is in place a financial strategy for the development of a comprehensive new pattern of mental illness services which takes fully into account the contribution that existing service resources, including land and buildings, can make. While, therefore, there is unlikely to be a blanket requirement that all receipts from sales at mental illness hospital sites should be re-invested in the new pattern of services, the Department will wish there to be a clear linkage between the development of local services and the optimal use of the resources which become available.

Mental Illness

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list all submissions under the mental illness strategy which have been made by participating bodies, stating which have been accepted for Welsh Office funding; and if he will give the amount in each case;

(2) what extra resources have been provided to health authorities, local authorities and the voluntary sector to date in carrying out his mental illness strategy; what posts and projects are currently being funded; and what extra resources will be provided in future;

(3) what arrangements have been made to ensure that funds provided for projects financed under his mental illness strategy are spent in full on these projects.

Mr. Grist: The local planning and implementation of the mental illness strategy is co-ordinated by the eight county joint planning teams, which comprise representatives of district health authorities, social services authorities, and other interested groups. All eight county teams have submitted plans which have been considered as a basis for Welsh Office funding for the current year. Chapter 16 of the Government's expenditure plans 1990-91 to 1992-93 (Cm. 1016) indicated that the sum of £2·2 million would be made available in 1990-91 to support developments under the mental illness strategy. Provisional offers totalling some £1·6 million are being made to county teams; the distribution of these extra resources by county and between partners in the teams is not yet finalised, and depends upon the acceptance of the offers by the county teams, and in some cases the clarification of particular aspects of specific proposals. A further offer of some £100,000 is being made in respect of bids from other organisations intended to support the development of services under the strategy on an all-Wales rather than a county basis.

The overall total of £2·2 million available under the strategy represents resources additional to those directly available to partner agencies in the county teams for the provision of mental illness services. Recipient bodies will be responsible for ensuring the full and proper application of funding to the agreed purposes; the Welsh Office will be monitoring activity and reviewing progress made by county teams during the course of the year, and will be holding annual review meetings with each team.

It is not possible to forecast what resources will be made available in future years, not least because that will depend in part upon the progress made in developing new patterns of service, and the levels of funding which the county team partners are prepared to commit from their own resources.

Office Chairs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria apply to decisions on the replacement of office chairs in his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: Office chairs are replaced when they are broken, worn out or no longer meet modern standards or requirements.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the standard useful life of office chairs used by civil servants.

Mr. Peter Walker: A number of factors will determine the life of an office chair, including the frequency of use, changing user requirements, the introduction of information technology, and improvement in product design and manufacture.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average age of the office chairs in his Department replaced with new chairs in the final quarter of the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: At least 10 years.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department's aim is to reduce its energy consumption over the next five years to a level which will give a saving of 15 per cent. of the current energy bill.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Peter Walker: Energy consumption in buildings occupied by my Department in 1988-89 was as follows:

	Energy consumption
Electricity	18,048,000 kWh
Gas	840,000 therms
Liquid fuel	7,000 litres
Solid fuel	86 tonnes

Museum of Modern Art

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will reconsider his refusal to support the proposal to establish at Machynlleth the Welsh museum of modern art; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: The Department does not provide direct financial assistance for museums other than the National Museum of Wales. The attention of the organisers of the proposed museum at Machynlleth has been drawn to the possibility of alternative sources of support, but it is entirely for the bodies concerned to decide on priorities.

Coastal Sediment, Anglesey

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will appoint an inquiry into the cause of a 6-mile wide band of sediment off the Anglesey coast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Water samples are being tested to determine the nature of this occurrence.

Management Information System

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he now has available to him a fully operational management information system.

Mr. Peter Walker: A new computerised finance system became operational on 1 April 1990 as planned.

Rural Housing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of local authorities to discuss the housing shortage in rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Department regularly meets all housing authorities in Wales to discuss a wide range of relevant issues.

DEFENCE

Radar Emissions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to any ill effects on animal livestock of radar emissions; and what estimates he has as to the range over which such emissions might pose a health hazard.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am not aware of any studies into the effects of radar transmissions on animal livestock.

Defence Export Services

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the respective roles of the Defence Export Services Organisation and International Military Services.

Mr. Alan Clark: The primary role of the MOD Defence Export Services Organisation is, in conformity with Government export control policies, to assist the British defence industry in selling its products in overseas markets. It is also responsible for the disposal by sale, at home and overseas, of surplus service equipments and stores. International Military Services Ltd. is a private limited company incorporated under the Companies Act whose shares are vested in the Secretary of State for Defence. It offers, on a commercial basis, a range of marketing and project management services in the defence field available to both Government and industry.

Stornoway Airport

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what account has been taken of noise from ground engine running in the survey of aircraft noise at Stornoway airport; and what plans he has to make measurements of that source of noise during the forthcoming military exercise at Stornoway;

(2) what account has been taken of noise from aircraft performing run-in and break manoeuvres in the survey of aircraft noise at Stornoway airport; and what plans he has to make measurements of this source of noise during the forthcoming military exercise at Stornoway.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the information contained in the letter of 23 April to the hon. Member from my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many simulated attacks were made on Stornoway airport during 1988 and 1989; and how many of these occurred during periods of military activation of the airfield.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave on 9 March 1989 (column 675). There were no recorded simulated attacks on Stornoway airport during the periods of military activation in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the replies to the hon. Members for Western Isles on 20 February, Official Report, columns 664-65, what was the number of practice approach and overshoot movements at Stornoway airport during 1989 which occurred during periods of military activation of the airfield.

Mr. Neubert: There were 60 recorded practice approaches and overshoots by military aircraft at Stornoway airport during periods of military activation of the airfield in 1989.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what are the minimum permitted height and maximum permitted speed for aircraft carrying out simulated attacks on Stornoway airport; and what are the regulations concerning the direction of ingress to and egress from the airfield during these attacks.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 9 March 1989 (column 675).

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has a target of 25 per cent. for the reduction in consumption of non-operational energy on the Defence estate for the period 1985-86 to 1990-91. The Ministry will also participate in the target reduction on non-operational energy of 15 per cent. over five years set for all Government Departments with effect from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available and equivalent figures for each of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of operational and non-operational energy consumption by the armed services and the procurement executive for 1988-89 are contained in table 3.6 in volume 2 of the 1990 Statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm. 1022-11). The only figures available for the civil estate are those for electricity and gas for the calendar year 1989.

There are:

Energy Consumption

Electricity	Gas
71,803,344 kWhs	1,653,321 therms

RAF Trials

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the trials activity to be conducted by the Royal Air Force central tactics and trials organisation to the west of the Isle of Lewis between 30 April and 4 May; how many and what types of aircraft are involved; what airfield the aircraft will be operating from; and what precautions will be taken to avoid dropping missile or other debris on vessels operating in the extended danger area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The purpose of this trial is to assess the capability of United Kingdom air defence assets in the detection of incoming cruise missiles, which will be simulated by television-guided Martel missiles. Buccaneer, Tornado F3, Nimrod, NATO E3A and Shackleton aircraft will take part in the trial, operating from RAF Lossiemouth, Coningsby, Leeming and Kinloss, and from the German air force base at Geilenkirchen. A maximum of 12 aircraft will participate in the trial area at any one time and approximately 60 sorties will be flown over the trial period.

A notice to mariners has been issued advising of the extension to the range danger area, and all proper precautions will be taken to ensure that no vessel is within range of any missile when firing takes place.

Low Flying

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of his Department's investigation of a complaint about low flying over Coll, Lewis, on 6 April 1989.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing further to add to my letter of 19 June 1989 to the hon. Member, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recently reported breach of low-flying regulations over St. Kilda by two Tornado aircraft from RAF Leeming.

Mr. Neubert: In September 1989, the National Trust for Scotland complained about unauthorised low-flying military aircraft on 24 and 26 June 1989 over a bird sanctuary on the St. Kilda group of islands. Following an investigation by the Royal Air Force police, appropriate disciplinary action has been taken against the aircrews concerned.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low-flying aircraft were received by his Department in 1988 and in 1989 from addresses in the Western Isles; and how many were found to relate to aircraft operating from Stornoway airport.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence received the following numbers of complaints or inquiries about military low flying from addresses in the Western Isles:

	Number
1988	4
1989	21

Complaint records do not generally identify the operating base of the aircraft concerned, but one complaint in 1988 and two complaints in 1989 have been positively identified as relating to military aircraft operating from Stornoway airport.

Near Miss (Stornoway)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Nimrod aircraft which was involved in a near miss with a British Airways aircraft near Stornoway on 13 March was participating in exercise Northaxe.

Mr. Neubert: No.

RAF Crash, Berwickshire

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now publish the report on the fatal RAF crash 12 months ago at Fast Castle, Berwickshire.

Mr. Neubert: Yes.

Petrol

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of vehicles used by his Department currently run on (a) leaded petrol and (b) diesel.

Mr. Neubert: Information is not available in the form requested. However, within the main vehicle fleets, 56 per cent. of vehicles use diesel fuel and 36 per cent. use leaded petrol. The remaining 8 per cent. are capable of using unleaded petrol.

CIVIL SERVICE

Business Appointments

59. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many business appointments of former civil servants have been approved by the advisory committee in the last year.

Mr. Luce: Twenty-seven in 1989.

Skill Centres

60. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what rules govern the arrangement of civil service buy-outs such as the recent purchase of skill centres.

Mr. Luce: The overall objective is to get the best value for the taxpayer consistent with the avoidance of possible conflicts of interest.

Civil Service Agencies

62. Mr. Squire: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what proportion of the original agency candidates have now been successfully set up as agencies within the civil service.

Mr. Luce: Nine of the original 12 candidates for agency status are among the 30 executive agencies which have now been launched. Work continues on the remaining three candidates.

Civil Service (Duties and Functions)

63. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will review the duties and functions of the civil service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Ministers continually review the functions and priorities of their Departments in order to improve efficiency and service to the public.

Trade Unions

64. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what recent discussions he has had with civil service trade union representatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes).

Civil Service Medical Centre

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he has any plans to improve the present method of manually recording treatment of persons by the civil service medical centre; and whether individuals treated by the centre can be supplied with records of past treatment.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The only form of treatment provided by the civil service occupational health service (CSOHS) at its clinic in central London is the provision of immunisations and other prophylactic procedures for individuals exposed to specific risks. Each individual is supplied with a personal record of the procedure undertaken but, at present, it is not possible to supply records of past procedures.

A feasibility study is currently being undertaken into the information-recording needs of the service in preparation for introducing a new computer system in 1991-92. This study will address the issue of improving all recording systems in the CSOHS.

The CSOHS became a "next steps" agency at the beginning of April and Dr. George Sorrie, the medical adviser and director, will be pleased to provide information about day-to-day operations of the CSOHS if the honourable Member for Cynon Valley would like to write to him directly.

TRANSPORT

Irradiated Fuel

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will ensure that the proposed transportation of irradiated fuel from the Torness nuclear power station will satisfy the current International Atomic Energy Authority series 6 regulations on the emissions of radioactivity from exposed surfaces of the flasks used to carry the irradiated fuel;

(2) if he will name the type of flask to be used for the transport of irradiated fuel from the Torness nuclear power station; and in which way these flasks differ from other varieties of nuclear flasks;

(3) if he will ensure that the current means of transportation of irradiated fuel from Hunterston B nuclear power station and the proposed transport of irradiated fuel from Torness nuclear power station will comply with his Department's requirements.

Mr. Portillo: Irradiated fuel flasks are designed and tested in accordance with the International Atomic Energy Agency's safety series No. 6 and certified for compliance by my Department. Regular compliance audits are carried out at points of departure, transhipment and receipt.

The proposed mark A2 flask, to be used at Torness nuclear power station, is an evolutionary development of the existing mark I AGR fuel flask.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the provisions for protection of aircraft flying on advisory routes from other air traffic; and what regulations exist to restrict other aircraft from crossing advisory routes without air traffic control clearance.

Mr. McLoughlin: The statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. The CAA discharges its responsibilities in respect of air traffic control through the national air traffic services (NATS), a joint CAA/Ministry of Defence organisation.

I have been informed that air traffic service advisory services have been established offering, in addition to flight information services, a continuous separation service to all participating aircraft. Participation is not compulsory and it has to be emphasised that the advice offered to participating aircraft relates only to known traffic. Pilots of aircraft wishing to cross an air traffic service advisory route should contact the appropriate air traffic services unit before doing so in accordance with the rules of the air. The United Kingdom aeronautical information publication contains details of the advisory airspace within the United Kingdom.

Road Deaths

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the number of road fatalities in England since 1 October 1989 and for each year from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Atkins: Following is the table requested for road accident fatalities from 1980 to 1989. No information is yet available for 1990.

Number of road accident fatalities in England: 1980-1990

Year	Killed
1980	4,984
1981	4,896
1982	4,943
1983	4,576
1984	4,754
1985	4,322
1986	4,546
1987	4,349
1988	4,283
[1]1989	4,492
[1,2]1989	1,254

[1]Provisional.
[2]4th quarter.

M1 (Junction 15A)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the contract for junction 15A on the M1 to be let; and when he anticipates it being completed.

Mr. Atkins: The construction of the new junction 15A on the M1 motorway in Northamptonshire is part of the contract for the A43 Blisworth and Milton Malsor bypass.

A £15 million contract for construction of the bypass has been awarded to Calliford Engineering and work started on site on 18 April. Construction is expected to take about two years.

EC Aviation

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his policy on the recent proposal by the European Community Commission to take responsibility on behalf of European Community member states for aviation negotiations with non-European Community countries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy towards the application of the liberalisation principles currently being applied to bilateral aviation relations within the European Community to international aviation agreements between the United Kingdom and non-European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: We continue to seek liberal aviation arrangements both bilaterally and within the European Community. At its March meeting, the Council of Transport Ministers agreed in principle that negotiations should get under way with the countries of the European Free Trade Association on a package of civil aviation measures and asked the Commission to produce more specific proposals for this. We are considering the Commission's proposal about responsibility for aviation negotiations with non-EC countries.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of Transport aims to achieve real cost reductions in energy consumption of 5 per cent. per annum over the next five years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Atkins: Consumption of energy by the Department of Transport in 1989-90 is calculated to have been:

	Energy consumption
Electricity	32 million kWh
Gas	1·6 million therms
Liquid fuel	240,000 litres
Solid fuel	185 tonnes

Airline Safety

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that all the passengers in an airliner can be successfully evacuated in 90 seconds if the cabin is full of smoke and some of the exits inoperable; and how recently a practical demonstration of evacuation on each of the civil airliners currently on the British register has taken place;

(2) how many of the recommendations relating to airliner safety arising from the fire on a 737 aircraft at Manchester in 1985 have now been made mandatory on British airliners; and if he will list them.

Mr. McLoughlin: The statutory responsibility for the safety regulations of civil aviation within the United Kingdom rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. As my hon. Friend's questions require detailed answers, I have drawn them to the attention of the chairman of the authority and asked him to write to my hon. Friend direct.

Long-haul Flights

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on when the Civil Aviation Authority expects to produce the fourth version of CAP 371 for fixed-wing long-haul and ultra long-haul two-crew operations.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am advised by the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation, that it is currently examining the results of tests and research conducted by several nations into the effects of long-haul two-crew operations. When these tests have been fully analysed, the Civil Aviation Authority will make any necessary changes to the provisions contained in CAP 371 covering such flights.

Jump Seats

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he last met his European partners to discuss the use of jump seats on tourist buses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will introduce legislation to ban jump seats on tourist buses.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 26 April 1990]: British requirements for folding crew seats are similar to those in other European countries. This Department is involved closely in the current European Commission work on a draft directive to cover all safety aspects relating to bus and coach construction, including these seats. It would be premature for Ministers to discuss appropriate EC requirements before the technical work is complete.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied or owned by the Duchy of Lancaster;

(2) if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied or owned by the Duchy of Lancaster, for the latest year available.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The principal building which is both owned and occupied by the Duchy, and which houses their administrative staff, is at Lancaster place. Heating for this building, which comprises the main form of energy used, is supplied on a fixed cost basis from a circuit linked to an adjoining building. The amount of energy and type of fuel consumed is not within the Duchy's control.

Other buildings owned by the Duchy are leased to occupiers who are responsible for meeting their own costs of energy consumption. It would not be appropriate for the Duchy to set energy consumption targets, or to seek a breakdown of fuel consumed.

THE ARTS

P G Wodehouse Memorial Library

29. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next plans to visit the P G Wodehouse memorial library at Dulwich college to discuss support for cultural commemorations.

Mr. Luce: I shall be visiting the P G Wodehouse memorial library tomorrow. P G Wodehouse made a unique contribution to the literature of this country.

Arts, South-West

32. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about arts in the south-west.

Mr. Luce: I visited Plymouth on 9 February and met many representatives of the arts in the south-west. I was able to see at first hand the thriving arts scene they have created.

Library Association

33. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Library Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. Luce: I last met the president of the Library Association on 18 April and discussed matters of concern to the Library Association and other issues of mutual interest.

National Companies

34. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the current financial circumstances of the national companies.

Mr. Luce: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 5 March, column 480.

Arts Companies (Trading Deficits)

35. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the number of Arts Council clients who are currently in deficit.

40. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the number of arts companies currently trading in deficit.

52. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about arts companies which are in current deficit.

Mr. Luce: I understand that arts organisations funded directly by the Arts Council were expected to have accumulated deficits of some £12·7 million, or 6 per cent. of total turnover, by the end of March. This figure conceals a wide variation in the performance of individual organisations.

European Community

36. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he intends to spread British culture into the European Community.

Mr. Luce: Lead responsibility for the promotion of British culture overseas rests with the British Council which launched last autumn its "Britain in Europe" initiative to encourage commercial sponsorship of visits to Europe by leading British arts organisations. The Arts Council is also actively exploring the new opportunities for artistic interchange which 1992 will bring.

I am confident that the excellence of many British performers and companies will continue to be recognised in Europe and recently had the pleasure of showing to my EC colleagues some of the range and distinction of Glasgow's cultural provision during its inauguration celebrations as EC city of culture.

Liverpool Theatres

37. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the financial circumstances of the Liverpool Playhouse theatre and Everyman theatre.

Mr. Luce: I understand that the Arts Council is continuing to work closely with Liverpool city council to ensure a satisfactory solution to the problems facing these two theatres.

Arts Funding

38. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what additional resources he will make available to the arts consequent upon his proposed restructuring of their funding in England.

Mr. Luce: I expect changes in the structure of arts funding that I have announced to be achieved within the Arts Council's existing financial allocation. There will, of course, be an appropriate transfer of resources from the Arts Council to the regional arts board as clients are devolved.

Museums and Galleries

39. Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what provision he is making for the refurbishment and repair of museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: I have earmarked £180 million over the next three years for the building and maintenance programmes at the national museums and galleries which I sponsor.

Welsh Arts Council

41. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has any proposals for the restructuring of the Welsh Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: No, but I shall be considering with my Welsh and Scottish colleagues whether the Welsh and Scottish Arts Councils need to be brought within the new planning and monitoring arrangements that I have proposed for the English regions.

Arts, East Midlands

42. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a further statement on funding for the arts in the east Midlands.

Mr. Luce: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 12 February 1990, columns 15-16.

Works of Art (Public Viewing)

43. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what contribution the private sector can make to preserve important works of art for public viewing.

Mr. Luce: The Government firmly believe in the partnership between private and public sectors in the preservation of our nation's heritage. There are many ways in which the private sector, whether corporations or private individuals, may contribute to the preservation of important works of art in this country. Sponsorship and generous private patronage of our museums and galleries has already made a significant contribution to the acquisition, conservation and display of important works of art. Those who are fortunate enough to own such works of art may offset them against capital taxation by either offering them to the nation in lieu of tax or to a national institution by means of a private treaty sale. Similar benefits to both the nation and the individual or corporate giver will accrue from cash gifts to arts charities with the establishment of gift aid as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement. I am confident that the introduction of this concession will further encourage both corporate and private giving to museums and galleries and fine arts charities such as the national art collections fund as well as more generally to a range of other arts bodies.

53. Mr. Wood: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to encourage public access to important works of art held in private hands.

Mr. Luce: I actively encourage public access to privately owned works of art by facilitating the lending of such works for public exhibition through the Government indemnity scheme. This scheme, by removing the substantial cost of insurance, not only makes it possible for institutions around the country to stage exhibitions which often include the cream of private collections but enables the long-term loan of privately owned items to institutions which can then display them in their galleries.

Arts Council

44. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he is next due to meet the chairman of the Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest.

50. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make further funds available to the Arts Council to enable it to assist the local authorities which have now been subject to capping of the community charge to maintain support for libraries, museums and cultural activities.

Mr. Luce: It is up to local authorities to decide how much to spend on the arts.

Public Libraries

45. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the current level of expenditure on public library services.

48. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the current level of expenditure on public library services.

Mr. Luce: Information on the current level of expenditure on public library services is not held centrally. The latest figures available show that expenditure by 100 authorities in England totalled £495·2 million in 1988-89. This indicates a real terms increase of 4·3 per cent. over expenditure by 106 authorities in 1978-79.

47. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to meet the Library Association to discuss the level of funding for public library authorities.

Mr. Luce: I met the president of the Library Association on 18 April. Our discussions covered a wide range of library interests. The question of funding for public library authorities was not raised. It is a matter for individual local authorities.

Business Donations

46. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether there have been any donations from the private or corporate sector to assist with the refurbishment of public buildings under his control.

Mr. Luce: I recently announced the establishment of the museums and galleries improvement fund, a joint initiative between the Wolfson charities and Government. The fund will have an annual budget of £4 million for the next three years for the refurbishment of galleries in United Kingdom public museums and galleries. I greatly welcome this exciting initiative.

National museums and galleries have attracted substantial support from business and private sources towards the refurbishment of their buildings. The following are recent major donations (over £0·5 million):

Sponsor	Amount (£ million)	Museum/Gallery	Purpose
MEPC	1·0	Sir John Soane's Museum	Repairs to fabric of the building
Clore Foundation	6·0	Tate Gallery	New Clore Gallery housing The Turner bequest (opened 1987)
Sainsbury Brothers	Substantial sum	National Gallery	New Sainsbury Wing (due open Spring 1991)
Walter Annenberg	$5·0	National Gallery	Refurbishment of Impressionist Rooms
Nomura Securities Ltd.	1·5	Tate Gallery	Refurbishment work
Mr. T. T. Tsui	1·25	Victoria and Albert	New Chinese Gallery
Mr. Wohl	0·75	National Gallery	Refurbishment of Room 9
Benefaction from the late Sir John Addis	0·66	British Museum	Islamic Gallery (opened June 1989)
Sainsbury Family	0·85	Science Museum	New Food For Thought Gallery (opened October 1989)

Repertory Theatres

49. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the number of repertory theatres currently facing financial deficits.

Mr. Luce: I understand that building-based drama companies operating outside London and funded by the Arts Council were projected to have an accumulated deficit of some £1·47 million by the end of March. This represents about 4·4 per cent. of their annual turnover and conceals a wide variation in the performance of individual companies.

Budget Statement

51. Mr. Squire: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he intends to inform the general public how they can benefit arts institutions following the last Budget.

Mr. Luce: The introduction by the Chancellor of the gift aid incentive to charitable giving provides a most welcome opportunity for the arts to raise even more resources from individuals and the private sector. The Arts Council and the Museums and Galleries Commission intend to publicise the new arrangements.

Acceptance in Lieu

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the total amount of tax satisfied consequential on the acceptance of objects and property in lieu of inheritance tax and capital transfer tax which have been covered in the public accounts by means of resort to the Reserve in respect of the five financial years since the written answer on 26 July 1985 on behalf of the then Minister for the Arts, Official Report, column 779; and if he will indicate the average annual figure which would arise from a breakdown of the total amount.

Mr. Luce: The amount of tax satisfied by means of resort to the Reserve in the last five financial years is listed in the table. Due to underspends in each financial year on the annual provision of £2 million provided jointly by my Department and that of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment for the acceptance in lieu of objects and property, the amount actually spent from the Reserve was less than the original call. I list the actual money spent from the Reserve from the hon. Member's information.

Year	Amount of tax Satisfied/Call on the Reserve £	Amount actually spent from the Reserve £
1985-86	520,000·00	366,707·00
1986-87	1,165,000·00	947,842·00
1987-88	7,338,444·00	6,627,464·00
1988-89	5,584,692·88	4,719,816·88
1989-90	9,977,898·00	9,513,768·05
Total	24,586,034·88	22,175,597·93
Annual average	4,917,207·00	4,435,120·00

NATIONAL FINANCE

Local Government Finance

Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of local government as a proportion of gross domestic product in (a) 1960, (b) 1970, (c) 1979, (d) 1985, (e) 1989 and (f) 1990.

Mr. Lilley: The importance of local government within the economy is generally measured on the basis of their expenditure. Such expenditure as a percentage of GDP, using definitions consistent with the information contained in the financial statement and Budget report, is given in the table.

Local authority expenditure[1] as a percentage of GDP

	Per cent.
1960	9¼
1970	13¼
1979	12½
1985	11¼
1989	10½
1990-91[2]	11

[1] Current expenditure on goods and services, current grants and subsidies, interest, capital expenditure and net lending.

[2] FSBR forecast. If the effect of the abolition of domestic rates on the measure of GDP is excluded the figure becomes 10¾ per cent.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total of capital allowances claimed by companies in respect of (a) scientific research and (b) patents and know-how, and the corporation tax forgone as a result of such claims, giving the most recently available information.

Mr. Lilley: Allowances for scientific research are tentatively estimated to be in the region of £1¼ billion in 1988. Fully used to reduced corporation tax liability, the cost to the Exchequer would be about £½ billion. No estimate can be made for patents and know-how.

Unit Labour Costs

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in tabular form for the period 1980 to 1990, for the United Kingdom, France and Italy, the change in unit labour costs and the change in currency parities expressed as a percentage against German unit labour costs and the value of the deutschmark.

Mr. Ryder: The table shows indices of EC and CSO estimates of relative unit labour costs (whole economy), expressed in a common currency (deutschmark), for the years since 1980 for which complete data are available.

	United Kingdom (CSO)	France	Italy	Germany
1980	100·0	100·0	100·0	100·0
1981	115·0	104·1	108·9	100·0
1982	107·2	99·9	111·0	100·0
1983	100·3	98·1	119·4	100·0
1984	101·5	100·3	124·3	100·0
1985	104·4	103·7	125·7	100·0
1986	89·3	98·8	122·1	100·0
1987	84·2	94·1	121·1	100·0
1988	95·1	93·6	124·7	100·0

These figures have been derived using whole economy unit labour cost indices as published by the European Commission in "European Economy, November 1989" by the CSO in "Monthly Digest of Statistics", and from the nominal bilateral exchange rates published by the IMF in "International Financial Statistics".

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to percentage changes in unit labour costs in each European Community country and percentage changes in each European Community country's exchange rate against the deutschmark in the past five years.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The table shows indices of EC and CSO estimates of relative unit labour costs (whole economy), expressed in a common currency (deutschmark), for the latest five years for which complete data are available.

Indices, 1980 = 100

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988

Spain	94·3	95·6	90·6	88·8	95·9
Portugal	101·0	105·0	96·6	93·1	97·0

These figures have been derived using the whole economy unit labour costs indices published by the EC in "European Economy, November 1989" and by the CSO in "Monthly Digest of Statistics", and from the nominal bilateral exchange rates published by the IMF in "International Financial Statistics".

Minimum Reserves

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the European countries which operate minimum reserve requirements; and what they are in each case.

Mr. Ryder: Minimum reserve requirements in the main European countries are as follows:

Austria:
Between 9 per cent. and 4½ per cent. of sight, time and savings deposits in Schillings, certain securities issues, net foreign exchange position.

Belgium:
Not used currently.

Denmark:
No compulsory reserve requirements.

Federal Republic of Germany:
Between 6·6 per cent. and 12·1 per cent. on residents sight deposits. 12·1 per cent. on non-resident sight deposits. 4·95 per cent. on time deposits and 4·15 per cent. on savings deposits.

France:
5·5 per cent. on sight deposits, 3 per cent. on time deposits.

Greece:
A primary reserve requirement of 8 per cent. on drachma and foreign currency deposits.

Ireland:
A liquidity ratio of 10 per cent. of banks' current and deposit account liabilities to non-bank residents plus net interbank funding on the domestic market plus net external liabilities.

Italy:
25 per cent. of the monthly increase in deposits in excess of the growth of capital and reserves, up to a maximum of 22·5 per cent. of the level.

Luxembourg:
Not used.

Netherlands:
The money market cash reserve requirement varies with conditions in the money market. Until 2 May it is between 1¾ per cent. and 3¼ per cent. of guilder and foreign currency short-term deposit liabilities plus 25 per cent. of all other liabilities.

Portugal:
17 per cent. of eligible liabilities (private sight, notice and time deposits in escudos and foreign currency deposits held by residents or emigrant workers).

Spain:
5 per cent. of sight, time and savings deposits, plus securitised bank liabilities held by domestic non-banks in Peseta.

Switzerland:
Not used.

United Kingdom:
Not used for purposes of monetary control.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Ryder: The target reduction for energy consumption in Her Majesty's Treasury is a cumulative 1½ per cent. per annum saving over five years. Reductions in individual buildings may vary from this norm.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Ryder: The information, which covers major offices only, is as follows:

	Gas '000 therms	Electricity '000 kWh	Solid/liquid fuel '000 litres
Government Offices, Great George Street, London SW1	169	3,341	42
Chessington Computer Centre, Surrey	71	935	97
Alencon Link, Basingstoke, Hampshire	1	100	24
Grosvenor House, Basingstoke, Hampshire	6	53	—
Riverwalk House, London SW1	57	1,449	—

All figures reflect consumption in calendar year 1989.

Recycling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to zero-rate, for the purposes of value added tax, recycled paper and cardboard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: No.

Arms Exports

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will make a statement on the prosecutions to be undertaken for breach of regulations prohibiting the sale of arms with reference to the seized gun components destined for Iraq.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 23 April 1990.] One person has been charged in connection with these export consignments. Customs and Excise is continuing to make inquiries to see whether firms or other individuals have committed offences in the United Kingdom. The disclosure of any further information than this may prejudice any subsequent proceedings.

European Monetary System

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Southport of 18 April, what form the representations from British industry regarding British entry into the ERM of the EMS took; and how many were in support of British entry and how many against.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 24 April 1990]: My right hon. Friend has received several written representations from British industry indicating support for sterling's entry into the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Taxation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will apply the formula used in his reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 4 April 1989, Official Report, columns 7-8, to those on 1989-90 incomes of £6,000, £12,000, £18,000, £24,000, £30,000, £36,000 and £42,000 to indicate aggregate tax gain or loss since 1979 for (a) a single man, (b) a man with no children and (c) a married man with two children.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The information is in the table which shows the additional liability to income tax in 1989-90 if the 1978-79 regime had been indexed for inflation and applied to the individuals specified.

Increase in 1989-90 in income tax under 1978-79 indexed regime

Earnings £ per annum	Single person £ per annum	Married man £ per annum
6,000	286·30	264·70
12,000	766·30	744·70
18,000	1,246·30	1,224·70
24,000	1,916·05	1,841·55
30,000	2,538·55	2,476·05
36,000	3,716·05	3,538·80
42,000	5,332·30	5,079·30

Note: Calculations assume no other source of income and no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowance. Child tax allowances in 1978-79 are excluded from the calculations as they were being phased out.

EMPLOYMENT

Benefits

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any cuts have been imposed on the youth training and employment training benefits for Scotland in 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

Gas Containers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the improved health and safety to the public and workers expected to accrue from the recently introduced pressure systems and transportable gas containers regulations; and what information is being made available, in what numbers, and to whom, arising from these regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: The following information is generally available on the regulations:

The Pressure Systems and Transportable Gas Containers Regulations 1989: (S.I. 1989 No. 2169), HMSO, ISBN 0 11 098169 3, £3·40, (11,000 copies printed).

Safety of Pressure Systems: Approved Code of Practice, COP 37, HMSO, ISBN 0 11 885514 X, £4·50, (6,000 copies printed and a further 10,000 copies are currently being printed).

Safety of Transportable Gas Containers: Approved Code of Practice, COP 38, HMSO, ISBN 0 11 885515 8, £4·00, (9,700 copies printed).

A Guide to the Pressure Systems and Transportable Gas Containers Regulations 1989: HS(R) 30, HMSO, ISBN 0 11 885516 6, £4·50, (10,000 copies printed).

Safe Pressure Systems: IND(S)27(L), free (50,000 copies printed).

A further free leaflet will be available later in the year giving guidance on competent persons as defined in the regulations. Copies of the free leaflets are available on request from any of the following Health and Safety Executive public inquiry points:

Broad Lane, Sheffield, S3 7HQ
Telephone: 0742 752539

St. Hugh's House, Stanley Precinct,
Trinity Road, Bootle, Merseyside L20 3QY
Telephone: 051 951 4381

Baynards House, 1 Chepstow Place,
Westbourne Grove, London W2 4TF
Telephone: 071 221 0870

The other publications are obtainable through booksellers or from HMSO publications centre, PO Box 276, London SW8 5DT (Telephone: 071 873 9090).

The regulations are to be introduced over the next four years and it is therefore too early to assess their impact.

Hazardous Substances

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the implementation of paragraphs 77 and 78 of the approved code of practice in regard to the surveys conducted under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations (COSHH) came into force on 1 October 1989 and their implementation is being monitored by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). It is too early for the HSE to comment on the effectiveness of paragraphs 77 and 78 of the COSHH approved code of practice.

Advisory Committee on Women's Employment

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many meetings the Department's advisory committee on women's employment held in 1989; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Nicholls: The advisory committee on women's employment which I chair held three meetings in 1989. The topics discussed include child care, labour retention and attraction, importance of women and family friendly policies, the employment of women in rural areas and women and public appointments.

Equal Pay Appeals

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take to shorten the time taken through the employment appeal tribunal procedure for equal pay for equal value cases to be dealt with.

Mr. Nicholls: Appeals to the employment appeal tribunal in equal pay cases come to a hearing in the same time as other cases and there is no reason for such appeals to be given precedence. However, the Government are concerned to remedy any unreasonable delays and after consultation with the Lord Chancellor and the senior judiciary it has now been agreed that additional judge time will be provided. This should enable the employment appeal tribunal to reduce the time taken for all cases.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response has been made by the Health and Safety Executive to the letter from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council recommending further research into bronchitis and emphysema following the council's 1988 report, Cm. 379.

Mr. Nicholls: The chairman of the Health and Safety Commission replied to the chairman of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on 16 June 1988, expressing sympathy with the council's viewpoint that further research should be conducted into non-smoking, dust-exposed workers and giving details of the Health and Safety Executive's studies on dust problems.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what studies have been carried out into bronchitis and emphysema among steelworkers and non-smokers since 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: I am unaware of any studies which have been carried out into bronchitis and emphysema among steelworkers and non-smokers since 1988. There is an on-going programme of research supported through the independent scientific committee on smoking and health that includes assessments of the prevalence of bronchitis among non-smokers as well as smokers. Some of the relevant studies were completed during 1988-89 and findings will be published in the scientific literature.

Health and Safety

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions were brought in a magistrates court for health and safety offences for each year since 1974; and how many of these resulted in a conviction.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is available in the form requested only for 1988-89. In that year, provisional figures show that in England and Wales HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates laid a total of 1,990 informations in magistrates courts and that 1,798 of these resulted in a conviction.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions were brought in courts other than a magistrates court for health and safety offences for each year since 1974; how many of those resulted in a conviction; what was the average fine in each year; and how many custodial sentences were awarded in each year.

Mr. Nicholls: The information about courts other than magistrates courts in England and Wales is available in the form requested only for the year 1988-89. For Scotland, separation of summary and solemn procedure hearings could be done only at disproportionate cost. Factory and agricultural inspectorates are given in the table. Since 1974 two HSE prosecutions have resulted in suspended custodial sentences.

Type of court	Informations laid	Convictions	Average fine per conviction £
Crown	66	56	2,145

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the maximum fine available to magistrates for health and safety offences in each year since 1974; on how many occasions each year the maximum was awarded; and what was the average fine each year.

Mr. Nicholls: The vast majority of health and safety offences can attract the maximum fine specified in section 33 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 (HSWA). The remainder (which are of a minor nature) attract a variety of lesser maxima.

The maximum fine available to magistrates for offences described in section 33 of HSWA was initially £400. The Criminal Law Act 1977 raised it to £1,000. In 1984 it was further increased to £2,000 by the Criminal Penalties Increase Order.

Provisional figures from HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates show that in 1988-89 45 informations attracted the maximum fine of £2,000 from magistrates. For the same year the average fine for convictions in magistrates courts was £505. In earlier years it is not possible to distinguish the level of fine in magistrates courts from that in all courts. The table shows the average level of fine in all courts since 1975:

Prosecution action taken by HSC/E Enforcing Authorities (excluding local authorities), 1975-1988-89[1]

Date of hearing	Average fine per conviction (£)

Restart

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the restart menu options and indicate which of them involves the client leaving the claimant count;

(2) how many restart interviews were conducted in the period July 1986 to June 1989; what numbers were referred to each menu option; what numbers actually took up their referral; what numbers were referred to the unemployment benefit service for (a) non-attendance at interview, (b) non-availability and (c) refusal of suitable employment; and, of the latter three groups, what number had their benefit suspended or withdrawn, for Great Britain and each of the standard regions.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for the restart programme, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the employment service agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: The Department is committed to a target for energy savings (temperature and price corrected) of 15 per cent. over a five-year period commencing on 1 April 1990.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Eggar: Figures for energy consumption are available only by cost. For the year ending 31 March 1989 the energy expenditure of the Department was as follows:

Fuel	Expenditure (£ millions)
Electricity	5·917
Gas	2·905
Other	0·578
Total	9·400

Factory Inspectorate

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the review carried out by the Health and Safety Executive internal audit section and the Treasury staff inspection division decision on Her Majesty's factory inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The review is a confidential management document.

Employment Service

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has approved the employment service's operational plan for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has approved the plan and placed copies in the Libraries of the House. The plan sets out the ways in which the employment service intends to meet the targets he has set for it in the annual performance agreement which was published on 2 April. The plan also sets out how the business of the employment service is expected to develop over the next three years and shows how the employment service intends to improve the efficiency and quality of its services to the public.

Public Expenditure

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those organisations consulted on the reduction in public expenditure in the gross cost per trainee week.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 April 1990]: None.

SCOTLAND

Fish Farming Advisory Committee

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of his fish farming advisory committee, the dates and venues of its meetings since being established; and if he will make a statement on its work so far.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has appointed the hon. Lord Grieve VRD, QC, MA, LLB as chairman of the fish farming advisory committee and Professor G. Dunnet as vice-chairman. The membership is made up as follows: Mr. J. A. MacAskill, Highlands and Islands development board; Dr. J. Francis, Nature Conservancy Council; Mr. D. Campbell, Countryside Commission for Scotland; the councillor for the appropriate area of Highland regional council; Messrs I. McLennan and A. Graham, Western Isles islands council; Mr. D. McKerrell, Argyll and Bute district council; Mrs. J. Crichton, Orkney islands council; Mr. T. Kelly, Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland; Mr. D. Buchanan, Highland river purification board and Mr. D. Hammerton, Clyde river purification board. Representatives of other statutory bodies may be invited as necessary.

The committee met over 19 and 20 March 1990 in the Fort William area to discuss procedural matters. The committee has been established at the Secretary of State's request by the Crown Estate to advise commissioners on applications for sea bed leases which have given rise to unresolved objections by any of the bodies represented on the committee. The committee stands ready to consider any such cases.

Peat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ban all use of peat by his Department; whether he will formulate a national peatlands conservation policy; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The hon. Member will no doubt be pleased to note that whenever appropriate, alternatives to peat are already used by Scottish Office. We will carefully consider extending the use of peat alternatives; but it is considered premature at this stage to ban the use of peat completely.

The Government are conscious of the nature conservation importance of the peatlands of Great Britain and are aware of the concerns expressed about the conflicts between peat extraction and the nature conservation interests. We believe that the best way of dealing with the complex issues raised is within the established planning and conservation framework.

Lead Plumbing

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate for each district and islands council (a) the number of houses which have whole or partial lead plumbing and (b) the total cost at current prices of replacing all lead plumbing in the affected houses together with separate estimates for (i) the private sector, (ii) the public sector, (iii) housing associations and (iv) new towns and Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am unable to provide such estimates at present. The responsibility for monitoring the condition of houses in Scotland rests with local authorities for houses in their districts and with Scottish Homes and new town development corporations for houses in their ownership. The Scottish Development Department has however asked those bodies for their estimate of the number of houses with whole or partial lead plumbing and their estimate of the cost of replacing it. Many returns have yet to be received; and I will write to the hon. Member when the information is complete.

Sea Lice

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration his Department's experts are giving to Norwegian experiments to eliminate the use of Nuvan in dealing with problems of sea lice.

Mr. Lang: Information on the use of gold sinny wrasse as "cleaner fish" to remove sea lice from farmed salmon was given in my replies to the hon. Member on 22 January and on 13 November last year.

Scientists in Norway are also working on the use of a natural insecticide, pyrethrin, which is found in chrysanthemum flowers, to control sea lice infestation in farmed salmon. The method employed involves mixing a crude extract of pyrethrin with oil which is poured on to the top of the water in fish cages. Details of the treatment regime, method of recovery and fate of the oil are required before a detailed environmental impact assessment can be made.

Scientists at the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory continue to take an active part in research to develop alternative treatments for sea lice infestation, and to monitor work being carried out elsewhere.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Government intend to respond to the report of the Select Committee on Agriculture on forestry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have responded to the Select Committee's report. It is expected that the Committee will publish this response before the end of May.

Bed-and-Breakfast Businesses

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of bed-and-breakfast businesses which were assessed for non-domestic rates for 1989-90; and what proportion of the total of such businesses were so assessed in each region and islands area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally. We are aware that there have been differences in the criteria adopted by regional assessors in deciding whether a bed-and-breakfast establishment should be entered on the valuation roll. In order to ensure a consistent approach in the future, we propose to clarify in legislation the boundary between domestic and non-domestic in the case of bed-and-breakfast establishments. We have been consulting interested parties on our proposals, and are now studying the many responses received before bringing forward appropriate regulations to limit the liability for non-domestic rates to those establishments clearly being run as a business.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Angus, East on 24 April on waste disposal sites, he will consider introducing a national register of landfill sites; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: District and islands councils in Scotland are the competent authorities with respect to waste management. Each council is required by law to have at its principal office a register containing copies of all current waste disposal licences issued by the council. Accordingly, we have no plans to introduce a national register of landfill sites.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the research and development projects currently being undertaken into waste disposal by his Department and other agencies, listing the cost and number of people employed in each project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Research into waste disposal management and practices is normally commissioned by the DOE on a United Kingdom basis. Details of the work currently under way were given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Devizes (Sir C. Morrison) on 23 April 1990 at columns 2-4. Nevertheless, in order to investigate a particular issue within Scotland we recently contributed £15,000 towards the cost of a study into waste arising in central Scotland being carried out by the SDA.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the operational waste disposal sites which have been identified by the hazardous waste inspectorate in 1989 as having the potential to generate methane gas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1988, the Department asked district and islands councils to identify all sites in their areas which had received biodegradable (potentially methane-generating) waste since 1960. They identified 520 such sites, of which 216 were operational. In February 1989, the authorities were urged by the Department to monitor and take appropriate action at all the sites in accordance with guidelines contained in waste management paper No. 27, "The Control of Landfill Gas".

In view of the limited information available from the survey and the need for further work by the authorities to confirm the extent of any landfill gas problems, it would be inappropriate to publish details of the sites. However, a follow-up survey to review progress will be undertaken shortly, and I expect an appropriate summary to be available in due course.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer on 23 April, Official Report, column 59, what steps his Department will take to identify the risk of contamination in those 58 per cent. of vacant land sites in Scotland for which the question of contamination was unknown.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The 1990 Scottish vacant land survey and any subsequent surveys will identify the extent of contamination in the 58 per cent. of vacant and derelict sites for which the situation was unknown in 1988. It is the responsibility of the local authorities to collect the data for the survey and to identify the extent of contamination.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 59, he will list the names and locations, with grid references, of the 10 per cent. of vacant land which is known or suspected to be contaminated.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The 1988 Scottish vacant land survey was a pilot study of partial coverage. The data were collected on an in-confidence basis by the local authorities. This arrangement precludes me from giving site-specific information and is in accordance with the Government statistical service code of practice (Cmnd 9270).

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds his Department has made available for the purpose of cleaning up contaminated land or leaky waste disposal sites.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for dealing with contaminated land or problem waste disposal sites rests with the site owners.

As far as local authorities are concerned the capital allocation to their general services budget is not targeted and it is for each council to determine its own priorities for expenditure on such work.

The Scottish Development Agency is empowered to provide assistance for the clearance of derelict land which can include contaminated land. For this financial year the agency will have available approximately £58 million to carry out its derelict land function.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Angus, East on 24 April, he will state how many of the (i) open and (ii) closed landfill sites, as contained in the Scottish Development Department Survey 1989, were operational prior to the introduction of the Control of Pollution Act 1974; and how many constitute a serious risk to groundwater.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All the sites included in my reply of 24 April operate under licences or resolutions issued under the requirements of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. The licensing provisions came into operation on 1 January 1978. About 100 of the sites were already operational at that time.

The identification of sites causing pollution to groundwater is the responsibility of the river purification authorities. Although the numbers may fluctuate from year to year, authorities' annual reports for 1988 indicate that 10 active and two or three closed landfill sites are of concern.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: A total of 15 per cent. covering the five-year period to 1994-95. This figure excludes prisons and the minor Scottish Departments.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department for the latest year available.

Mr. Rifkind: The figures, in kilowatt hours, for 1989-90 are:

	Kilowatt hours
Electricity	25,807,925
Gas	2,878,675
Liquid Fuel	1,336,117
Solid Fuel	1,285,443

These figures exclude prisons and the minor Scottish Departments.

Small Businesses

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will urgently announce measures to protect Scottish businesses, especially small businesses and self-employed enterprises, from the effects of (a) increases of water charges and (b) difficulties in passenger and freight transit from Scotland to the continent.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The charging arrangements in Scotland for water supply require authorities to be even-handed in apportioning expenditure between classes of consumer and they have discretion to set different metered charges for different circumstances. There are no provisions for the Secretary of State to intervene in the setting of charges. The average metered water charge for 1990-91 is 30·89p. per cu m, an increase of less than 9 per cent. on last year.

The provision of passenger and freight services from Scotland to the continent is a matter for the commercial judgment of transport operators, which are best placed to evaluate transport needs. If these needs are not being met, Scottish businesses should identify the nature of the services they require and discuss their needs with the transport operators concerned.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has given to the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses of Scotland regarding their complaints against the increases of metered water charges and their effects on competitiveness.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State has received a letter relating to water charges and other matters from the Scottish secretary of the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses Ltd. The points raised by the federation are being considered and a response will be made in due course.

A77

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with Strathclyde regional council concerning the timetable for the Ayr road route (A77); and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 April 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no recent discussions with Strathclyde regional council concerning the timetable for the Ayr road route.

Parts of Strathclyde regional council's section of the Ayr road route were affected by a legal challenge by Glasgow district council in October 1989. Prior to that challenge, the main works associated with this section of the road were due to start in 1991 and it was hoped that the trunk road section would follow on in 1992 subject to the availability of funds and priorities at that time. Advance works for the region's section of the road, in areas not affected by the legal challenge, have already started.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on whether Strathclyde regional council will proceed with construction of the Ayr road route (A77) after 3 May.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 April 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no communication from Strathclyde regional council on the matter of whether the council intends to proceed with the construction of the Ayr road route after 3 May.

Police

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde as to the dates of incidents at which police were armed since 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 April 1990]: I am advised by the chief constable that firearms were issued on 319 occasions over the last five years. If the hon. Member is concerned about any particular incident, he may care to write to the chief constable.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde as to the number of officers by division trained in armed weapons and the number available in any emergency;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde as to how many officers can be armed at any one time.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The number of officers trained in the use of firearms is an operational matter for the chief constable. Officers are issued with firearms only on specific occasions which are judged to require a firearms capability. The Department issued guidelines to the police in 1984 covering the circumstances when firearms may be issued, the authority for issue, training and record-keeping; a copy is in the Library.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Strathclyde as to how many police officers are licensed and insured to drive police vehicles by division.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 April 1990]: I am advised by the Chief Constable that there are 5,296 officers in the Strathclyde force currently authorised to drive police vehicles. These officers are deployed throughout the 15 divisions and other specialist departments within the force on the basis of the Chief Constable's assessment of local needs.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Strathclyde as to the number of armoured vehicles held by his force and their locations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 April 1990]: Strathclyde police do not possess any armoured vehicles.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughter Policy

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what evidence received subsequent to 11 January 1989 he decided to implement the slaughter policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: On the assumption that the question relates to the slaughter policy for salmonella-infected poultry flocks, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him on this subject on 13 December 1989 at column 689.

Agriculture Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the total amount of support for agriculture by the Government for each year since 1979, expressed in actual and constant prices in each case.

Mr. Maclean: Support to the agriculture industry is provided directly by means of grants and subsidies, and indirectly through expenditure on research and development, advisory services, administration and so on.

Agriculture in the United Kingdom reports direct expenditure while the public expenditure White Paper covers total expenditure—direct and indirect—on agriculture, fisheries, food and forestry.

The table gives direct and total expenditure since 1978-79, both actual and at constant (1978-79) prices:

£ million.

Outturn	Direct support		Total support

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much he has either spent or allocated on bovine spongiform encephalopathy (a) research or (b) compensation for each year from 1985 to 1992 in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Expenditure on BSE research to date is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1988-89	454,000
1989-90	922,000

The Ministry recently announced a £6·1 million programme of research on BSE, following the recommendations of Dr. Tyrrell's research consultative committee as follows:

Financial year	Forecast £ million
1990-91	2·2
1991-92	2·2

In addition, the Department of Education and Science will be committing £6·3 million to slow virus research over the next three years.

Expenditure on compensation since the introduction of the compulsory slaughter policy in August 1988 is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1988-89	1,066,613
1989-90	2,127,654

The forecast expenditure on compensation contained in the 1989 public expenditure survey is as follows:

Financial year	Forecast £
1990-91	3,381,300
1991-92	3,482,739
1992-93	3,569,807

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what tests he has carried out for the presence of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy agent on (a) blood, (b) saliva, (c) urine, (d) faeces and (e) semen in cattle which are suspected of having bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make the results public;

(2) what tests he has carried out for the presence of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy agent on (a) blood, (b) saliva, (c) urine, (d) faeces and (e) semen in cattle; and if he will make those results public.

Mr. Gummer: Research is in progress to determine whether the BSE agent is present in the blood and semen of confirmed cases of BSE. Further studies are planned which will determine the infectivity of gut, kidney and salivary gland from confirmed cases. No experiments are being conducted using material derived from clinically healthy cattle.

I shall follow our general policy of publishing the results of the research that we fund.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 86, to the hon. Member for South Shields, how many of the notified cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle were later confirmed as having the disease in each week end 5 January to 13 April.

Mr. Gummer: Results are not yet complete but the information requested to date is as follows:

Week ending	Number notified	Number confirmed	Still alive or awaiting diagnosis
5 January 1990	245	201	18
12 January 1990	292	258	4
19 January 1990	284	234	14
26 January 190	294	242	19

USSR (Agricultural Imports)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the agricultural products which the authorities in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have recently announced will not be permitted to be imported into the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: Cattle, sheep, goats, beef, sheepmeat, bovine semen, bovine embryos and dairy products.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the EEC on the use of Government funds for the promotion of British eggs; how much expenditure has been incurred on this scheme to date; what provision has been made for the full financial year 1990-91; and whether the European Community has approved this expenditure.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to use Government funds to promote eggs. As to the use of the net assets of the old Eggs Authority for such purposes, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on 29 March at column 258.

Animal-derived Protein

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what animal-derived protein can legally be incorporated in cattle rations; and what is his estimate of the annual consumption by cattle of such protein.

Mr. Maclean: The feeding of ruminant-derived protein to ruminants was prohibited from July 1988. Protein derived from other animals may be fed to cattle providing it has been prepared in accordance with the Protein Processing Order 1989 and the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973. Information on the annual consumption by cattle of such protein is not available.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, for the latest year available.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is available only in financial terms and for the Department as a whole. For the 1989-90 financial year the expenditure was as follows:

	£ million
Electricity	1·8
Gas	0·4
Solid and liquid fuel	0·7

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the buildings occupied by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: The Department is participating in the public sector energy efficiency campaign and, in common with other Government Departments, has a target of saving 15 per cent. of its energy bill over a period of five years.

Meat Imports (South America)

Mr. Shore: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what, in constant prices, was the level of imports of Argentinian and Uruguayan meat and meat products in 1972, 1982, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Maclean: Since constant price data are not readily available at this level of disaggregation, the table shows the value and volume of imports of meat and meat preparations from Argentina and Uruguay in the specified years:

	Argentina		Uruguay
	Value £ million	Volume '000s tonnes	Value £ million	Volume '000s tonnes
1972	56·3	93·0	—	—
1982	23·0	16·0	6·4	4·1
1985	0·3	0·3	18·9	13·3
1986	3·9	2·3	24·7	17·0
1987	29·5	17·9	15·9	9·5
1988	23·8	20·3	13·4	9·2
[1]1989	47·9	25·6	24·3	13·2

[1] Optional.

Cows

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of (a) cows and (b) herds of cows in each county of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: The tables show the number of agricultural holdings which had beef or dairy cows at the June 1989 agricultural census, for each county of England, Wales and Northern Ireland, together with the number of cows on those holdings. For Scotland, where county data are not available, the information is by local authority districts.

June 1989 census (England and Wales)
Distribution of breeding cows (dairy and beef) by county

Cattle

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the extent of illegal movement of cattle from the United Kingdom into the Republic of Ireland; what are its implications for dead meat plants in Northern Ireland; what incentive encourages this movement of livestock; whether he has drawn it to the attention of the European Commission; what proposals he has to bring this trade to an end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: It is not possible to determine the extent of illegal exports of cattle from the United Kingdom into the Republic of Ireland, since such movements can be established only when detected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. When there are high negative monetary compensatory amounts (MCAs) chargeable on exports of agricultural produce from the United Kingdom, there is an incentive to export such products illegally. The MCA charge on finished cattle exports to the Republic of Ireland has been around £75 a head in recent weeks, but from 14 May it will be reduced to less than £30 a head following the devaluation agreed in the price fixing. The European Commission is well aware of the problems created in recent years by high MCAs on trade in cattle and other agricultural produce across the Irish land border. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is responsible for prevention of MCA fraud and is vigilant in its efforts to prevent illegal movements across the frontier. Any substantial movement of finished cattle from Northern Ireland for slaughter in the Republic of Ireland must have the effect of reducing the supply of stock available for slaughter at meat plants in Northern Ireland and the consequential reduction in supply could increase the level of producer prices payable in Northern Ireland.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is considering any research in developing a diagnostic test for bovine spongiform encephalopathy in live cattle.

Mr. Maclean: On the advice of the Tyrrell committee, MAFF funds studies at the central veterinary laboratories, Weybridge, on the clinical features in cases of BSE with particular emphasis on methods of early diagnosis. Further studies at this laboratory and at the neuropathogenesis unit in Edinburgh on the genetics, molecular biology and chemical pathology of BSE are also funded by MAFF because of their potential for development of diagnostic tests.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate by number the method of disposal of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle slaughtered during the current year.

Mr. Maclean: The information for 1990 is not yet available.

The information for 1989 is as follows:

Method of disposal	Number
Incineration	5,346
Burial	2,342
Retained for research	10

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the date of birth of the youngest confirmed cases of BSE to date.

Mr. Maclean: The youngest confirmed case of BSE was 22 months old and was born on 18 November 1987.

Horse Slaughter

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the location of those abattoirs used for the slaughter of equines which are export-approved, and their owners or operators; and when such export approval was given.

Mr. Maclean: There are five abattoirs licensed for the slaughter of equines which are export-approved. I shall write separately to the hon. Member.

Drift-net Fishing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the extent of the bycatch of non-target fish in drift-nets on United Kingdom boats.

Mr. Maclean: Precise information on the level of non-target fish bycatches in our drift-net fisheries is not readily available. However, through the appropriate choice of mesh size and net placement our fishermen are known to ensure selective fishing achieving a relatively clean catch of the target species.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there are any plans to establish an observer programme to investigate the incidental capture of non-target species, particularly birds and marine mammals in United Kingdom drift-nets.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans for a scheme that would involve observers being placed on fishing boats. The drift-net fisheries around the UK are relatively small scale and in the main targeted on herring and salmon. The accidental catch of birds or marine mammals is not judged to be a frequent or significant occurrence. There is no evidence that these fisheries are threatening the survival of any species.

Intervention Board

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the location of the work of the Intervention Board.

Mr. Gummer: Ministers have approved in principle the Intervention Board's proposal that a third of the agency's functions, consisting of its external trade work and administrative support, should be relocated in Newcastle, in order to relieve its staff shortages in Reading. About 350 posts will be transferred. In deciding upon Newcastle, where the agency already has facilities, Ministers and the agency were satisfied that there are good recruitment and career prospects, and that satisfactory office accommodation, housing, communications and other facilities are available. Subject to the necessary resources being available, the transfer of work will begin as soon as accommodation can be obtained and be made ready and essential data links installed. After a suitable period at this new site, the agency's experience there will be reviewed and a further report made to Ministers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of the prison service remand sector he expects to be in the hands of the private sector by 1992;

(2) how many remand prison establishments he anticipates being privatised by 1992.

Mr. Mellor: We are not yet in a position to make a further announcement of decisions concerning private sector involvement in the remand system, but hope to be able to do so soon.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage of black prison officers currently serving in British prisons.

Mr. Mellor: Of the 32 per cent. of prison officer grades who responded to the voluntary survey of ethnic origin, 0·43 per cent. identified themselves as black. A primary objective of the current recruitment campaign for prison officers is to increase the number of new entrants from the ethnic minorities: the initial results are encouraging.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the average number of prisoners held in United Kingdom prisons during the years (i) 1974, (i) 1979, (iii) 1984 and (iv) 1989 and (b) the average number of full-time prison staff employed during this period.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is given in the table.

Average population for prison service establishments in England and Wales and average number of staff[1] in prison service employment in selected years.

Number of persons

	1974	1979	1984	1989
Average population	36,867	42,220	[2]43,349	[2]48,610
Average number of staff[3]	19,225	22,414	26,739	31,863

[1] Comprising outstation and headquarters staff.
[2] Including police cells.
[3] Including part-time staff each of whom is counted as a half: disaggregation would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners (a) serving sentences in United Kingdom prisons during the last five years for which figures are available and (b) held on remand pending trial or pending sentence.

Mr. Mellor: Information for England and Wales was published in tables 3 and 4 of Home Office statistical bulletin "The Prison Population in 1989" (issue 12/90), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average number of monthly overtime hours worked by prison staff during the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: "Fresh start" ended overtime working for prison officers; in 1986-87, the last full year they worked overtime, the average number of monthly overtime hours worked was 69. Figures are not held centrally for previous years. There are no central records of overtime for prison staff in other grades.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his programme to (a) refurbish existing prisons and (b) build new prisons.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) on 30 April 1990 at column 395.

Immigration

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provisional figure for the number of persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in 1989 is 48,600. More details are published in table 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 8/90 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1989", a copy of which is in the Library.

Television Licences

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the time taken to process renewal applications for television licences and to cash cheques; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not maintain separate records of representations about the time taken to process renewal applications or to cash cheques, and the information requested could not be provided without disproportionate cost. We believe the number of any such representations to be small.

There were some delays in processing new and renewal applications for the concessionary television licence by the National Television Licence Records Office following the change in the regulations in 1988. In some cases cheques became time expired before eligibility could be established and the licence issued. Now that the backlog has largely been cleared and new internal procedures introduced, it is far less likely that such problems will recur.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General what performance indicators are used by the Crown prosecution service; and if he will make a statement about the performance of the Crown prosecution service to date.

The Attorney-General: The 31 areas of the Crown prosecution service have compiled performance statistics on a monthly basis since October 1986. Separate records are maintained for magistrates court and Crown court cases. The records include the number of defendants in respect of whom cases have been:

(a) received by the CPS;
(b) finalised;
(c) dropped or rejected;
(d) discharged at committal or sent to Crown Court; and
(e) dismissed or convicted.

In addition, information is produced on the number of cases in which defendants have been bound over without trial, the number of adjournments and the extent to which CPS resources have been committed.

From this information the following performance ratios, which enable CPS managers to monitor the quality of the service's performance both nationally and locally, are produced:

Magistrates' Court—

(a) Average processing delay—defendant cases on hand at the end of a period divided by defendant cases finalised in the period. (From this figure the time it would take to deal with the cases currently on hand can be calculated).
(b) Acceptance rate—the proportion of defendant cases received from the police for prosecution that are accepted at initial review.
(c) Prosecution rate—the proportion of all cases finalised that have been prosecuted in the courts.
(d) Conviction rate—the proportion of all defendant cases proceeding to prosecution that result in a conviction. (A conviction is a guilty plea to one or more charges where no trial is held or a conviction after trial on one or more contested charges).
(e) Dismissal rate—the proportion of all contested defendant cases that are dismissed.
(f) Judgment quality—the proportion of all contested defendant cases proceeding that are dismissed on an application that there is "no case to answer".

(g) Adverse cost rate—the proportion of cases prosecuted where costs are awarded against the CPS.
(h) Efficiency rates—
(i) acceptance review—the number of cases reviewed per half-day lawyer session;
(ii) court and court-related work—the number of cases accepted at initial review finalised per half-day lawyer session.
(i) Unit costs—
(i) acceptance review—resource cost (staff and other costs) per case reviewed;
(ii) court and court-related work—resource costs (staff and other costs) per defendant case finalised after acceptance at initial review.

Crown Court—
(a) Average processing delay—defendant cases on hand at the end of a period divided by defendant cases finalised during the period.
(b) Conviction rate—the proportion of trials resulting in a conviction. (A conviction is a guilty plea to one or more counts where no contested trial is held or conviction after trial on one or more contested counts.).
(c) Acquittal rate—the proportion of contested trials resulting in an acquittal.
(d) Judgment quality—the proportion of contested trials resulting in a judge directed/ordered acquittal.
(e) Adverse cost rate—the proportion of defendant cases finalised (including cases committed by the Magistrates for sentence or appeal) that result in the award of costs against the CPS.
(f) Efficiency—the number of cases finalised per CPS staff half-day session.
(g) Unit costs—the resource cost (staff and other costs) per case finalised.

Note: The figures produced for the ratios at (f) and (g) above make some allowance for cases transferred between Areas.

The Crown prosecution service has been a success and has demonstrated that it has been a success. The creation of the service has brought the desired degree of independence of the prosecutor from the investigator, consistency of prosecution policy and decision-making and accountability.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General if he will state (a) the proportion of alleged crimes referred to the Crown prosecution service involving racial harassment in each year since its creation, (b) how many were proceeded with and (c) how many resulted in convictions.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service does not maintain statistics regarding cases involving racial harassment and accordingly the information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General how much information is passed to victims of racial harassment by the Crown prosecution service in cases where it does not decide to proceed.

The Attorney-General: Home Office circular 20/1988 stressed the importance of sympathetic treatment of victims and keeping them informed of the progress and outcome of investigations. This guidance is applicable to all categories of crime including those involving racial harassment. It has recently been reinforced by the promulgation of a victim's charter.

Under the working arrangements between the police service and the Crown prosecution service, it is the police who are the point of contact with the victims. The Crown prosecution service supports the principles of the victim's charter and recognises the importance to the victim of understanding what reasons have operated where a case is discontinued or a plea of guilty to a lesser offence than that charged is accepted. It is the policy of the Crown prosecution service that its staff should, so far as practicable, consult the police on taking such decisions. This should ensure proper understanding themselves and that they are in a position to explain the outcome of proceedings to the victims.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Crawfordsburn Hospital

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the carpeting, furnishing and general refurbishment of the former Crawfordsburn hospital when it was being used as a temporary office for the North Down and Ards unit of management of the Eastern health and social services board.

Mr. Needham: A total of £18,650.

Prison Costs

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the principal factors which account for the annual average cost per inmate in Northern Ireland prisons being the highest in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cope: The custody of large numbers of paramilitary-type prisoners requires additional measures of security and control.

DHSS Staff (Annual Reporting)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the revised annual reporting system for Department of Health and Social Services staff in Northern Ireland came into operation; since when the system for such staff has been monitored; and on what dates any changes were made in the monitoring system.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 April 1990]: The new staff reporting and appraisal system was introduced to the Northern Ireland civil service in stages from 1 April 1987, and for Department of Health and Social Services staff from June 1988. The system has been monitored from the outset.

The Department of Finance and Personnel is reviewing the system.

Mr. Martin Galvin

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will raise at the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference the decision of the Government of the Republic of Ireland to award Irish citizenship to Mr. Martin Galvin, fund raiser for Noraid, and the consequent raising of the ban on his admission under EEC rules.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 April 1990]: I understand that Mr. Galvin was registered as a citizen of the Republic of Ireland in 1986 in accordance with that country's law. This fact was one factor, among others, in the reconsideration of the previous (1984) decision to exclude him from the United Kingdom under the Immigration Act 1981. Should circumstances change, it remains open to my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary to reimpose a ban as necessary. We have no plans to raise the matter in the intergovernmental conference.

EMPLOYMENT

Pesticides

136. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been carried out to establish the incidence of health complaints among farm workers working with pesticides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive publishes annual reports which detail incidents investigated by HSE inspectors which involve misuse of pesticides and allegations of ill-health arising from them. These reports are held in the House of Commons Library.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the employment service's scrutiny into the reasons for drop-outs in employment training will be published.

Mr. Eggar: I have received the report of the efficiency scrutiny of take-up of Department of Employment group programmes, which addresses among other things the reasons for drop-out from employment training. I am currently considering my response to the report.

Environmental Protection Training

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made of environmental protection training needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Department of Employment Training Agency is currently funding a study to examine the labour market and skills implications of increased environmental awareness. The study will focus on air and water pollution and solid waste management. A report will be available in the summer.

Training Agency Staff

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details for each of the Training Agency area offices of the percentage of staff who are registered disabled.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available for Training Agency area offices. The percentage of staff in each of the 10 Training Agency regions who were registered disabled at 31 January 1990 is as follows:

	Percentage
London	2·0
South East	3·2
South West	2·0
Wales	2·3
West Midlands	3·1
East Midlands and Eastern	2·6
Yorkshire and Humberside	2·2
North West	3·2
Northern	3·4
Scotland	2·5

Unemployed Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, when an unemployed claimant who is a quarterly attender has his benefit suspended for not actively seeking work, he automatically loses his quarterly attender status.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. The employment service's chief executive, Mr. Mike Fogden, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Skill Centres

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which 10 skill centres are to be sold to Astra Training Services Ltd.; and what price has been agreed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 13 February 1990 at column 141 that terms of sale had been agreed with Astra Training Services Ltd. for the businesses at 46 skill centres, plus the skill centre training agency's head office, mobile training service, sales teams and colleges, and that the sale of these training businesses would involve a payment of some £11 million from the Government to Astra.

The 10 skill centre sites referred to in my earlier reply on 27 March 1990 at column 158 are sites where a training business purchaser is to be granted a lease. At seven of the 10 sites a lease is to be granted to Astra; these sites are Cardiff, Deptford, Leeds, Leicester, Slough, Swindon and Wakefield. At the remaining three sites—East Lancashire, Ipswich and St. Helens—a lease is to be granted to the consortium headed by Mr. Christopher Lakin.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, South of 23 April, Official Report, column 99, at what stage of negotiations following the receipt of bids for skill centres it was decided that £11 million should be given to Astra Training Services; and what steps were taken to ascertain whether other bidders would revise their positions in the light of the sum being offered.

Mr. Eggar: The payment of £11 million from the Government to Astra Training Services Ltd. represented Astra's assessment of the costs of turning around a business which is currently unprofitable and creating training businesses with good prospects of viability. Deloittes, in conjunction with my Department's other advisers, evaluated all the offers and made recommendations to my Department. The Government decided that the Astra offer, including the £11 million payment, met the Government's six objectives for the sale (a copy of which was placed in the Vote Office on 13 February 1990) more fully than competing offers.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the three civil servants concerned have assumed full-time duties with Astra Training Services Ltd.; and what are the redundancy terms which apply to them.

Mr. Eggar: The three civil servants concerned in the management buy-out of the skills training agency assume full-time duties with Astra Training Services Ltd. on 1 May 1990. Redundancy terms were not appropriate as they transferred their employment under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the main headings of expenditure on action for jobs in addition to expenditure on television advertising and printed material in 1987-88.

Mr. Eggar: The main headings of expenditure on action for jobs in 1987-88, in addition to television advertising and printed material, were press, radio and outdoor advertising, regional campaigns, exhibition material and research.

Mines Safety

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many exemptions from any provisions relating to mines safety have been granted to British Coal by the mines inspectorate in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of exemptions and consents granted by the Health and Safety Executive mines inspectorate from 1987-88 are as follows:

	Number
1987-88	2,026
1988-89	1,911
[1]1989-90	990

[1] Provisional.

It is not possible to give separate figures for exemptions and consents nor information prior to 1987-88 without incurring disproportionate cost.

Training

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total sum to be expended by his Department on the finance of training in the current year; and by what percentage this has changed in real terms over the past five years.

Mr. Nicholls [pursuant to his reply, 5 April 1990, c. 817]: I regret that the figures for expenditure given in the table accompanying my original reply were incorrect, being shown in millions, instead of billions. The correct figures are set out in the table:

Year	£	Percentage
1985-86	1,648,500,000
1986-87	1,830,700,000	+11·1
1987-88	1,945,400,000	+6·3
1988-89	2,328,800,000	+19·7
1989-90	2,840,400,000	+22·0
1990-91	2,693,000,000	−5·2

The percentage changes remain unaltered.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which agencies have been chosen to carry out the electricity privatisation advertising campaign.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department and the regional electricity companies are currently in the process of selecting an advertising agency to carry out a campaign to inform the public of the flotation of the distribution companies. An announcement of the successful candidate will be made in due course.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his current estimate of the cost of the electricity privatisation advertising campaign.

Mr. Wakeham: It is too early to make a reliable estimate of the cost of the advertising campaigns to inform the public of the flotations of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales. The full costs of the privatisation, including advertising costs, will be made available to Parliament in the normal way.

Reactor Fuel

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is offering to store spent research reactor fuel for overseas customers.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are aware of the difficulties currently faced by many operators of research reactors around the world in managing their spent fuel. These reactors are used for a variety of technical and medical research.

The Government will not allow spent fuel from overseas customers to be disposed of in the United Kingdom. However, they are content for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) to reprocess such fuel, provided that any reprocessing contract includes options for the return of waste. It would be the Government's intention that such options would be exercised and wastes returned. If, for whatever reason, the fuel were not reprocessed, it would have to be removed from the United Kingdom within a strictly defined time limit. Reprocessing and storage must be in accordance with the requirements of the relevant regulatory authorities.

THE ARTS

Acceptance in Lieu

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the objects and property accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax and capital transfer tax during the financial year ended 31 March; if he will specify (a) the amount of tax satisfied in each case, (b) whether any offers of objects carried conditions as to destination, (c) the dates in each case of the recommendations received by him from the Museums and Galleries Commission for the acceptance of objects, (d) the total for the financial year of the tax thus satisfied and (e) the means by which that total has been covered in the public accounts; and whether a press notice will be issued by the Office of Arts and Libraries comprising the information given in his reply.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 30 April 1990]: The information that the hon. Member requests is as follows:

Item	Tax satisfied £	Date MGC recommendations received
[1]Collection of Coins	418,429·20	6 January 1989
[1]Painting by Rubens	169,852·48	26 January 1988

[1]Two portraits by Gainsborough, one by Rubens and a landscape by Seghers	6,650,000·00	15 January 1990

Those offers marked [1] carried conditions as to their destinations.

The total tax satisfied in the financial year 1989-90 was £11,513,768·05. A total of £1 million was charged to the vote for royal palaces, royal parks, historic buildings, ancient monuments and the national heritage (class X, vote 4) and £10,513,768·05 was charged to the vote for arts and the heritage (class XIII, vote 2).

Press notices have already been issued announcing the acceptance of all these items.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will give the target reductions for energy consumption in the building occupied by the offices for which he is responsible.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 30 April 1990]: The Office of Arts and Libraries' aim is to reduce energy consumption by 15 per cent. over the next five years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will give the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by the offices for which he is responsible, for the latest year available.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 30 April 1990]: The latest breakdown of energy costs of the Office of Arts and Libraries' accommodation is for 1989-90, and as follows:

Electricity	5,877·30
Gas	871·59
Liquid fuel	777·90

Details of energy consumption are not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Nelson Mandela

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet Mr. Nelson Mandela to discuss reform in South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to meet Mr. Mandela shortly to discuss how the process of peaceful change in South Africa can best be taken forward.

Single European Market

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to discuss arrangements for 1992 with other EEC Foreign Ministries.

Mr. Maude: Her Majesty's embassies in EC member states regularly and frequently discuss single market issues with their host Foreign Ministries. The Foreign Affairs Council next meets on 7-8 May, and the International Market Council on 14-15 May. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I regularly discuss the single market in bilateral meetings with other EC Foreign Ministers.

South Africa

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 4 April.

Lithuania

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's policy on the future status of Lithuania.

Mr. Waldegrave: The people of Lithuania have made clear their wish to determine their own future. We are urging, and will continue to urge, the Soviet authorities and Lithuanians to begin puposeful negotiations aimed at a settlement acceptable to both sides which will satisfy the aspirations of the Lithuanian people.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other EEC member states concerning action to be taken in support of self-determination for Lithuania.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs attended a meeting of Foreign Ministers of the EC member states in Dublin on 21 April. They issued a joint statement which was conveyed to the Soviet Government and to the Ukranians, and was published. The text is as follows:

The Community and its member states express their serious concern at the economic measures recently introduced by Moscow in relation to Lithuania. They believe that measures of a coercive nature can make no contribution to the search for a solution through dialogue. They underline the obligation to exercise maximum restraint and to avoid actions that can only lead to a further deterioration of the situation. They are firmly of the view that an outcome acceptable to all must be sought and that this is possible only by means of discussion. They call on all concerned not to carry through measures which are in consistent with this objective. In view of their serious concern at these developments, the Community and its member states intend to keep the situation and its policy implications under continuous review. A Working Group meeting for this purpose will be held in the near future.

The Secretary of State and his colleagues reviewed the situation during the informal EC summit on 28 April.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the next United Nations Security Council the possible breach of the arms embargo to South Africa in the light of the alleged export of listed biological weapons, including Ebola, Marburg and Rift Valley Fever by the United States of America to South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. We are not aware of any such allegations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average time taken by the district valuers of the Board of Inland Revenue to agree asset valuation for business expansion scheme purposes, following the receipt of a full valuation report from the company concerned.

Mr. Ryder: District valuers are normally expected to report agreed values within 13 weeks of receiving instructions from the inspector of taxes, unless there are particular difficulties.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the reasons for the delay of the district valuation inspector of the small business in agreeing the valuation and definition of the case of the Swan Valley Railway (Holdings) plc for business expansion scheme purposes following agreement from Her Majesty's inspector of taxes (Kidderminster) in January 1989 that all assets except bridges would be regarded as plant and machinery.

Mr. Ryder: I assume that my hon. Friend intends to refer to the Severn Valley Railway (Holdings) plc. The valuation of this case is taking longer than usual because the nature of the property makes the process particularly complex.

Tax Reliefs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the information he has on tax and mortgage reliefs which operate in each European country to the benefit of house buyers.

Mr. Lilley: The available information is as follows. All amounts have been converted to sterling using the latest available purchasing power parities.

Austria

Costs of acquiring a residence, including interest on mortgages, is deductible up to AS 40,000 (£1,466) per year. This is increased by AS 40,000 for a married taxpayer who is the sole earner in a household and by AS 5,000 (£183) for each dependent child.

Belgium

Mortgage interest is deductible up to the amount of imputed taxable income from owner-occupation. There is an additional deduction for mortgage interest in respect of newly built properties.

Denmark

Mortgage interest is partly deductible from earned income. By 1992 interest will be deductible only to the extent of imputed taxable income from owner-occupation.

Finland

Mortgage interest is deductible up to a limit of Mk 25,000 (£2,352).

France

A tax credit is given, for the first five years of a mortgage, equal to 25 per cent. of annual interest up to a limit of F15,000 (£1,217), increased by F2,000 (£162) for each dependent child. In respect of new dwellings bought or constructed the limits are increased to F30,000 (£2,433) for a married couple and by F2,000 (£162) for the first dependent child, F2,500 (£203) for the second dependent child and F3,000 (£243) for the third and each subsequent dependent child.

Germany

A taxpayer who buys or builds a home may deduct from annual taxable income over a period of eight years 5 per cent. of the purchase price or construction cost, up to a maximum of DM15,000 (£3,722) per year. There is a further deduction of DM600 (£149) per year for each child living in the household.

Ireland

Relief is given up to a limit of 80 per cent. of the lesser of the amount of interest actually paid and I£2,000 (£1,639), increased to I£4,000 (£3,278) for a married couple.

Italy

There is a tax deduction of 22 per cent. of interest expenses of house-buyers. This is reduced to 10 per cent. on that part of such expenses which exceeds the difference between aggregate net income and the upper limit of the first income tax bracket. The first income tax bracket is 10 per cent. on net income up to L6,000,000 (£2,504).

Luxembourg

Mortgage interest is deductible up to LF30,000 (£488) annually, increased by LF30,000 for a spouse and LF30,000 for each dependent child.

Netherlands

Mortgage interest is deductible in full.

Norway

Mortgage interest is deductible in full.

Portugal

Mortgage interest is deductible provided that the total deduction claimed for such interest, life insurance and education costs for dependent children does not exceed Esc. 105,000 (£692) for single taxpayers and Esc. 210,000 (£1,384) for married taxpayers.

Spain

Mortgage interest is deductible from the imputed income from owner-occupied property.

Sweden

Mortgate interest is deductible in full for local income tax and for the basic national income tax (maximum rate 17 per cent.) but not always in full for the supplementary national income tax (maximum rate 25 per cent.).

Switzerland

Mortgage interest is deductible in full for federal tax.

Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amounts have been collected to date in respect of value added tax arising from commercial consumption of gas, coal, and electricity, respectively; and what estimate he has made of the likely future annual equivalent income from each source.

Mr. Ryder: Value added tax has not yet been imposed. The standard rating of non-domestic fuel and energy supplies from 1 July of this year is expected to yield £170 million in a full year mainly from the public sector. Most businesses will be able to deduct the VAT on fuel supplied to them as input tax. Separate estimates are not available for gas, coal or electricity.

Association for the Monetary Union of Europe

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Association for the Monetary Union of Europe receives any European Economic Community funding for its work; and whether conferences organised by this body are in any way supported by British funding.

Mr. Lilley: The Association for the Monetary Union of Europe does not figure on the Commission's register of organisations receiving Community funding in 1989; and Her Majesty's Government do not support it in any way.

Chessington Computer Centre

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Government have for the future of the Chessington computer centre.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in consultation with the Minister of State, Privy Council Office, has decided that the Chessington computer centre will become a "next steps" agency. The centre provides a wide range of payroll, financial accounting and personnel record services to central Government and non-departmental public bodies. Executive agency status will allow the centre to develop its business on sound commercial lines, and help the centre to deliver its services more efficiently and effectively.

Dr. Gerald Bull

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions Customs and Excise has had with the Belgian police about the activities of the late Dr. Bull.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 30 April 1990]: In the light of the criminal charges laid against an individual on Wednesday 25 April and in the light of the continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information on these matters.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iraq (Arms Component Exports)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the Government's shareholding via British Steel in Sheffield Forgemasters when the order for the Iraqi gun was first placed with Forgemasters;

(2) on what date his Department first became aware that the Iraqi export order was for military equipment;

(3) whether any inquiries were made to the Export Credits Guarantee Department in respect of the Iraqi gun export order.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what shareholdings nationalised industries have held in the companies presently under investigation by the Customs and Excise Department for exporting pipework and ancillary equipment to Iraq with potential military uses; and if he will set out (a) when such shareholdings were taken up and (b) when they were divested, in each case.

Mr. Ridley: In the light of the criminal charges laid against an individual on Wednesday 25 April and in the light of the continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information on these matters.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the dates when the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) contacted his Department regarding export orders for Iraq; what was the subject of the hon. Member's representation on behalf of Walter Somers; and if he will also state the response of his Department.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 23 April 1990]: In the light of the criminal charges laid against an individual on Wednesday 25 April and in the light of the continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information on these matters.

Eastern Europe

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implications for free trade and enterprise between states in western and eastern Europe that will result from the recent agreement at the conference on security and co-operation in Europe.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are very pleased that the 35 participating states at the recent Bonn CSCE intersessional conference on economic co-operation in Europe were able to reach consensus on an ambitious concluding document. In this document, all the participating states made commitments to expand economic co-operation and to enhance the growth of their economies.

The document also contains important commitments by the countries of central and eastern Europe to fully embrace domestic and international policies to promote the creation of free and competitive market economies where prices are based on supply and demand and where the performance of their economies relies primarily on the freedom of individual enterprise. These mark a further and significant step forward in the economic reform process which should lead to the creation of conditions likely to foster increased economic and industrial co-operation between the east and the west.

The Government are also pleased that the active participation in the conference of representatives of the business community produced many helpful comments and suggestions to encourage greater economic and industrial co-operation. My Department is holding a meeting on 11 May for United Kingdom business participants in the conference and for others who were unable to attend. Among other things we hope to see an exchange of views on the ways in which my Department may be able to help British business take forward any contracts or opportunities identified at the conference, including the use of the various bilateral and multilateral assistance schemes for the countries of central and eastern Europe.

Environmental Protection

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to encourage a joint review with industry of the environmental protection training needs of the work force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: There are no immediate plans for such a review. However, environmental education and training are among the wide range of matters being considered in the context of the forthcoming White Paper on the environment.

Yorkshire and Humberside Partnership

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the members and their organisations who belong to the Yorkshire and Humberside partnership scheme;

(2) what has been achieved to date by the Yorkshire and Humberside partnership scheme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The organisations represented are: CBI Yorkshire and Humberside, the Association of Yorkshire and Humberside Chambers of Commerce, TUC Yorkshire and Humberside, the Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association, and the Yorkshire and Humberside Regional Association. It is up to these organisations to decide which individual should represent them on any particular occasion. I would refer the hon. Member to the organisations involved for information on the achievements of the partnership.

Export Restrictions

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria are used to determine what constitutes a weapon, in respect of weapons export restrictions.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The definition of a weapon for this purpose is that contained in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 as amended.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what criteria the export of pipes and tubes were covered by the export control orders in 1988.

Mr. Ridley: The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987 (S.I. 1987, No. 2070) listed goods subject to control in 1988.

DEFENCE

Radar Transmitter, Pembrokeshire

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors dictated the location of the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The principal factors dictating the location of the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter were the need for it to be situated on broadly the same latitude as the receiver but separated by a substantial distance; and the need to ensure that, together with the safety exclusion zone that surrounds it, it could be comfortably accommodated within the boundary of an existing MOD site without affecting other activities at that site. After a survey of 166 possible sites throughout the United Kingdom, St. David's airfield was selected as the only suitable location for the transmitter, in conjunction with the only suitable location for the receiver at Blakehill radio station, Wiltshire.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will supply the transmission equipment for the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The equipment for the trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom will be supplied by the United States Government.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there will be any radioactive emissions from the proposed over-the-horizon radar transmitter on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the interference to the operation of the United States Air Force base at Robins air base, Georgia, by the installation of an early-warning radar station in the vicinity; and what steps he will take to ensure that his proposed installation of an over-the-horizon radar transmitter on the site of the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire will not similarly affect the operation of RAF Brawdy and the United States naval facility at Brawdy.

Mr. Alan Clark: The operation of the United States Air Force base at Robins air base, Georgia, is a matter for the United States Government. I understand, however, that the function and characteristics of radars situated in the vicinity of Robins air base are completely different from those of the planned over-the-horizon radar transmitter to be sited at St. David's airfield. The Ministry of Defence is satisfied that the installation of this radar will have no adverse effect on operations at RAF Brawdy.

Challenger 2 Tank

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth) of 5 April, Official Report, column 838, when he expects to announce the results of his assessment of the milestone 2 report received from Vickers Defence Systems on the Challenger 2 tank.

Mr. Alan Clark: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements exist to permit relatives of (a) Regular Army personnel and (b) Territorial Army personnel serving in the Falkland Islands on tours of (i) six months or less and (ii) more than six months to be flown on military flights when spare seats are available; and what charge is made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Spouses and dependants of Regular Army personnel serving married accompanied tours of 12 months' duration in the Falkland Islands are entitled to fly on indulgence terms to the United Kingdom and return, where seats are available on RAF flights.

In addition, spouses and dependants of Falkland islanders serving elsewhere are similarly entitled. The cost of an indulgence passage is £68 adult return, children under 12 travel at half fare, infants under two travel free.

In the unlikely event of a Territorial Army soldier serving a temporary engagement in a 12-month accompanied tour in the Falkland Islands, his family would be entitled to the same indulgence concessions as a Regular Army counterpart.

PRIME MINISTER

Local Government Finance

Q160. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the introduction of the community charge in England.

The Prime Minister: The vast majority of charging authorities in England have now sent out their bills net of both community charge benefit and transitional relief. I congratulate local authority chief finance officers on the work that they have done in meeting their billing deadlines. I deplore the decisions of those local authorities that have set excessive charges.

German Unification

Q175. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has recently held discussions with Chancellor Kohl and other NATO state leaders concerning the subject of membership of NATO for a unified German state.

The Prime Minister: When I met Chancellor Kohl on 30 March, we agreed it was very important that a united Germany should be a member of NATO. This matter will be further discussed at NATO meetings this summer.

Turkey (Visit)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what topics were discussed during her visit to Turkey on 25 April by her or her officials with Turkish Government Ministers or their officials.

The Prime Minister: I had wide-ranging discussions with President Ozal and Prime Minister Akbulut. The topics covered included east-west issues, the middle east, Cyprus, human rights and bilateral matters.

Expenditure

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will provide the final figures for 1989-90 and the estimates for 1990-91 for the total cost to public funds of all her offices, duties, accommodation and expenses.

The Prime Minister: The final figure for the cost of all my offices in 1989-90 is not yet available. The estimated total cost for 1989-90 is £7,291,493. The estimated total cost for 1990-91 is £7,442,364[1].

Note

[1] Salaries and wages, notional pension liability, administration costs, and the grant in aid to the Chequers Trust are included. My salary as a Cabinet Minister is also included. My pay and allowances as a Member of this House are excluded.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will provide the final figures for 1989-90 and the estimate for 1990-91 for (a) the cost of maintaining and running 10 Downing street and additional costs at Chequers, (b) the grant in aid to the Chequers Trust and (c) the costs on a consistent basis and expressed at constant 1984-85 prices.

The Prime Minister: Final figures for 1989-90 are not available. The latest estimates of the figures requested are:

(a) Costs of maintaining and running 10 Downing street and additional costs at Chequers[1 2 3]

1989-90	7,256,373
1990-91[5]	7,407,244

(b) Grant in aid to the Chequers Trust

1989-90	238,000
1990-91	238,000

(c) Costs at (a) and (b) in 1984-85 price terms[4]

1989-90	(a)	5,541,552
	(b)	181,756
1990-91[5]	(a)	5,311,497
	(b)	170,662

[1] The figures include costs at both 10 Downing street and Chequers; the information is not available by location.

[2] Salaries and wages, notional pension liability, administration costs, the costs of office services and the grant in aid to the Chequers Trust are included. The Prime Minister's salary is excluded.

[3] These totals are calculated on a consistent basis with the total for 1986-87 in sub-paragraph (a) of the reply to the hon. Member on 23 October 1987 at column 846. If office services costs are excluded (to produce a figure consistent with those at sub-paragraph (c) of that reply) the estimated totals are:

1989-90	6,752,798	5,156,982[6]
1990-91	6,810,675	4,883,717[6]

[4] Constant costs have been calculated using the Treasury's GDP deflator for 1988-89 rebased to 1984-85.

[5] Estimate.

[6] At 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how much was (a) spent on official hospitality in No. 10 Downing street during 1989-90 and (b) met by her office.

The Prime Minister: Final figures for 1989-90 are not yet available. The latest estimate of expenditure by my office on official hospitality at 10 Downing street and Chequers is £27,344.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost of her recent trip to Bermuda to meet President Bush; how many staff accompanied her; what were their functions; and who was the flight carrier.

The Prime Minister: The figures for the total cost of my meeting with President Bush in Bermuda are not yet available. I was accompanied by two officials and 17 support staff (mostly security and communications personnel). The flight was by an RAF VC10.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how many journalists accompanied her on her recent trip to Bermuda using official transport; and what was the charge per capita.

The Prime Minister: Twenty journalists travelled with me. Information on the charge per capita is not yet available.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total figure for travel costs for her and her staff in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of my travel and that of my staff in 1988-89 was £925,150. Final figures for 1989-90 are not yet available. The estimated cost is £896,103.

Staff

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the staff complement of No. 10 Downing street in 1989-90; and how many staff were registered disabled.

The Prime Minister: The total staff complement of 10 Downing street in 1989-90 was 68. None was registered disabled.

Engagements

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 May.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 May.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

European Council Meeting, Dublin

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South on 24 April, Official Report, column 132, she will seek the consent of the President of the European Council to place any papers relating to or for discussion at the 28 April meeting of Heads of State and Government in the Library.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 April 1990]: The Commission papers on German unification and on Community relations with central and eastern European countries, which were considered by the special Dublin meeting of Heads of State and Government, have been placed in the Library, together with the Presidency's conclusions.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Asthma

135. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what encouragement and support is being offered by the Government to research being undertaken in the United Kingdom into the causes, effects and treatment of asthma.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council, the Government's main agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research in this country, is always willing to consider soundly based proposals for research funding in competition with other applications. In 1988-89, the last financial year for which figures are available, the council spent £756,000 on research projects which are in whole or in part relevant to asthma. In addition to this, university departments and medical schools, with support from University Funding Council block grants and health authorities, may be undertaking relevant research but information on this is not collected centrally.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for each of the city technology colleges (a) the amount of private capital promised and (b) the amount of private capital so far received.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information that the hon. Member requests is listed in the table:

CTC	Amount of private sponsorship promised £ million	Amount of private sponsorship received £ million

School Trips (Charges)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the first year's experience of the new arrangements regarding charges for school visits or expeditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has commissioned a sample survey to take place during the current term, which will look at the pattern of relevant school activities since April 1989 and investigate the reasons for any changes. The results of this survey and other monitoring will be available later this year.

University Science Departments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to meet vice-chancellors to discuss the future of science departments in smaller universities.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. This is a matter for individual universities and the Universities Funding Council.

Schools (Local Management)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from Lancashire on local management of schools and its application in the county.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received no further representations from Lancashire LEA since the authority's scheme for local management of schools came into force on 1 April 1990.

Schools (Building and Repairs)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities for additional resources to deal with new school building and repair to existing schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters and other requests from local education authorities for additional resources to the annual capital guidelines he announced on 20 December 1989.

Education Standards

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to review the progress of the Education Reform Act in improving the standards of education delivered.

Mrs. Rumbold: The objective of the Education Reform Act, particularly chapter 1, is to raise standards in schools so that pupils are better fitted to meet the demands of adult life and work. Her Majesty's inspectorate and local education authority inspectors and advisers have already begun to monitor the quality of teaching and learning within the new statutory framework. In due course, as the national curriculum assessment arrangements become established, it will also be possible to monitor trends in the results achieved by pupils at each stage.

Education Spending

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding expenditure on education in Avon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received in the last month or so a small number of representations about expenditure on education in Avon.

TRANSPORT

"Financial Times" Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representation his Department had at the Financial Times conference on industry and the environment held in London on 23 and 24 April.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Horne Report

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's intention in respect of the Horne report recommendations.

Mr. Atkins: The Government intend to bring forward a Bill at a suitable opportunity to implement those recommendations of the Horne report which require primary legislation, as outlined in the consultation document issued by the Department of Transport in May 1989.

Merchant Navy Training

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in furthering training for the Merchant Navy under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act; to what extent financial assistance has been made available for such training; and to what extent available finance has not been taken up.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since the launch in November 1988, 773 new recruits have joined the Government assistance for training scheme. Up to £2·5 million was made available during the first year and £3·5 million has been earmarked for the scheme in a full year. The actual spend during the first year was £900,000 and the spend last year was £1·6 million. Expenditure levels are expected to rise as more trainees come into the scheme.

Industrial Development Grants

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the grants made by his Department under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 showing the value of the grant as a percentage of the whole project cost.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 April 1990]: Section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 enables Ministers to make grants towards improvements to "basic services" in assisted areas which will facilitate developments that will create new jobs for local people.

In my Department, this is mainly used to make grants towards the cost of access and distributor roads for new industrial estates, but other developments may also be considered for grant assistance. Grant is usually paid at a rate of 30 per cent. of eligible expenditure. If a project is partly funded by a grant from the European regional development fund, Industrial Development Act grant is payable only on the balance of the cost.

The following table names the schemes which were formally approved for grant in 1989, gives the total cost of the road works, the amount of IDA grant awarded and the grant as a percentage of the total cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what adjustments to the arrangements for statutory sick pay he is considering following the determination of the discrimination case in the West German labour court.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None. I assume that the hon. Member's question refers to a recent finding relating to part-time workers under German sick pay schemes. Part-time workers in the United Kingdom qualify for statutory sick pay under the same rules as full-time workers.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of his Department's local offices in the midlands region spent less than their full social fund allocation for grants in the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: Details of annual social fund budget allocations and expenditure for grants in respect of each social security region and local office are placed in the Library.

Community Charge Rebate

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much it would cost to assess wives separately from husbands for the purpose of community charge rebate;

(2) how much it would cost to provide separate assessment for the community charge rebate for those wives with one or more children under the age of five.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of changing the deemed interest rate on savings to 12 per cent. for the purposes of calculating community charge rebate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cost of changing the tariff income from £1 per week for every £250 of savings over £3,000 to £1 per week for every £433·33 of savings over £3,000 would be £50 million for community charge benefit in 1990-91.

National Insurance

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much extra money would be raised if the upper earnings limit on employees' national insurance contributions were to be abolished.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 18 April at column 894.

Leaflets

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the new leaflet for 16 and 17-year-olds, announced in November, will be available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A new leaflet for 16 and 17-year-olds (leaflet IS26) has been launched today.

The new leaflet will give up-to-date and clear information on the benefit provisions for this age group. It will be issued to all DSS local offices, unemployment benefit offices, jobcentres and careers offices. In addition, the leaflet will be sent to various other groups involved with young people, for example voluntary bodies, the probation service and secondary schools.

In developing the leaflet we have consulted a number of outside organisations including NACAB, Barnardo's, National Council of Voluntary Child Care Organisations, National Children's Home, the Scottish Council for the Single Homeless and the Children's Society. I am grateful for the help and advice that these bodies have provided. I am confident that this new leaflet will give 16 and 17-year-olds the information they need in deciding whether they should claim income support.

I have placed a copy of the leaflet in the Library.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the increase in the number of persons living in families with incomes below supplementary benefit level, on supplementary benefit and up to 110 per cent., 120 per cent. and 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit level between 1979 and 1985 can be attributed to real increases in the level of supplementary benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 February 1990]: The available estimates are as follows:

Persons in families:	Percentage of 1979-1985 increase attributable to increases in the rate of Supplementary benefit scale rates:
on Supplementary Benefit (SB)	30
on SB or with incomes below:
100 per cent. of SB level:	50
110 per cent. of SB level:	45
120 per cent. of SB level:	50
140 per cent. of SB level:	60

It is not possible to identify to any reliable degree the extent to which any group of non-recipients flowed on to supplementary benefit as a result of the real increases in the scale rates. Reliable estimates cannot therefore be provided to show the corresponding percentages for the number below each threshold unless combined with all those in receipt of supplementary benefit. Nevertheless, for each of these categories of non-recipients increases in scale rates appear to more than fully account for the whole of the increase in numbers between 1979 and 1985.

WALES

Peat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ban all use of peat by his Department; whether he will formulate a national peatlands conservation policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: Peat is used to only a very limited extent by the Department. Alternatives will continue to be considered whenever appropriate but there are no plans at present to introduce a total ban. On the wider issue, I have nothing to add to the answer given by the hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 27 April 1990.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the level of community charge set by each Welsh county and district council in 1990-91; what is the standard spending assessment; and which political party holds the most seats on each authority.

Mr. Grist: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 3 April, which indicated the community charges set by Welsh local authorities and the standard spending assessments attributed to them. The detailed political composition of Welsh councils is given on page 704 of the "Municipal Yearbook 1990".

Second Homes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the policy of each Welsh district council with regard to the level of multiplier for the standard community charge in respect of second homes.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is not yet available. I intend shortly to collect information about the use made by charging authorities of their discretion to specify property classes and maximum multipliers for the standard charge. This will include information about second homes.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount of debt incurred by each Welsh county and district council for the lastest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: Information on total debt incurred by each local authority in any one particular financial year is not held centrally. Information on outstanding loan debt at 31 March of each year is, however, available and figures relating to 31 March 1989 are set out in the table:

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the main achievements of his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: Unemployment in Wales has fallen for 46 consecutive months (to March 1990), currently standing at 83,900 (6·4 per cent.), compared to 152,700 (12·3 per cent.) in May 1987—a drop of 68,800 (5·9 percentage points). The current rate of 6·4 per cent. is lower than the EC average and many of the UK's main European competitors. It is also the lowest rate since May 1980. The current total of 83,900 is the lowest since July 1980. At December 1989, the civilian work force in employment in Wales stood at 1,215,000, the highest ever.

Over 50,622 people have started training on employment training since the programme was launched in September 1988. A total of 53,972 young people have entered YTS since May 1987. We continue to provide a YTS place for every young person who seeks one.

The White Paper, "Training for Employment", published in December 1988 set out a framework for modernising and developing our training system. To assist me in meeting this challenge I set up the training, enterprise and education advisory group. One of its main tasks has been to advise on the establishment of training and enterprise councils in Wales. TECs are an exciting development which offer the prospect of a move to a locally planned and delivered training strategy. We now have a complete network of TECs in development covering the whole of Wales and I expect these to be operational by the end of the year.

Development funding has been awarded to compacts in south Glamorgan, mid and west Glamorgan and Clwyd.

Since 1 June 1987, a total of 295 inward investment projects have been secured for Wales promising some 25,000 new jobs and involving a capital investment of some £1·75 billion. Among the largest projects are those announced by Ford, Bosch, TSB and National Provident Institution. As part of the inward investment effort, I and the Minister of State have between us undertaken 11 visits overseas.

Since my appointment in June 1987, nearly 3,500 offers of grant assistance have been made to businesses in Wales. Payments of nearly £97 million have been made with related additional/safeguarded employment of over 20,000. It is expected that over 72,000 jobs will actually be created or safeguarded by projects which have been grant-aided under regional incentive schemes.

In recent weeks a co-operation agreement has been signed with Baden-Wurttemberg, Germany's most dynamic region. This will enable a great deal of activity to take place in the fields of company collaboration, inward investment and joint research which will bring considerable benefit to Wales in the years to come.

Since I became Secretary of State, the Welsh Office has greatly increased its emphasis on helping business in Wales to export. This initiative has been highlighted by three successful export missions led by myself and by the Minister of State to the Soviet Union (1988), Spain and Portugal (1989) and Saudi Arabia (1990). The last of these alone netted orders worth £7·5 million for the Welsh companies participating.

At £150 million the Welsh Development Agency's budget for 1990-91 is the highest ever in both cash and real terms and is over 50 per cent. above the 1987 level.

Nearly £99 million at today's prices has been committed to the land reclamation programme in Wales over the past three years. The programme is one of the largest and most sustained in Europe and will see the eradication of almost all visually intrusive dereliction in Wales by the mid-1990s.

Expenditure on the Welsh Development Agency's property development activities has also more than doubled since 1987 to £72 million in 1990-91. Over 1 million sq ft of new factory floor space has been provided in each of the last three years capable of accommodating up to 9,000 jobs. Factory lettings have also been at record levels with over 2 million sq ft let each year. Over the same period the private sector has also provided 715,000 sq ft of development on agency sites.

Welsh businesses have responded extremely well to Enterprise Wales, since its launch in January 1988. The consultancy grants available under the initiative have proved particularly popular with nearly 1,800 projects commissioned so far.

In addition, a number of other initiatives have been taken to strengthen Welsh industry. These include the craft initiative and the "Wales Land of Quality" emblem to promote a coherent image of Wales and its products at home and abroad. To date more than 100 companies have adopted the emblem.

Since Cardiff Bay development corporation was established in 1987 to regenerate the former commercial centre of the city the Government have made available, or have announced, over £150 million of grant in aid to enable the corporation to achieve its task. To date the corporation has acquired over 500 acres of land; completed detailed area planning briefs for key locations; commissioned detailed design of the barrage across the harbour mouth; made available a prestigious 120 acre site for business, industrial and leisure-related development and undertaken a large number of environmental, infrastructure and community schemes.

In June 1988 I launched a massive three-year programme of action designed to improve economic, environmental and social conditions in the south Wales valleys. Expenditure in key activities involving the promotion of investment, the creation of jobs and environmental improvement in the valleys is expected to total some £500 million over the first three years of the programme. This is expected to stimulate private sector investment of up to £1 billion. I can confirm that unemployment in the valleys fell by some 10,600 between June 1988 and March 1990, at a faster rate than in Wales or the United Kingdom as a whole. In June 1989 I announced the extension of the valleys programme for a further two years until the end of 1992-93.

As work progresses in completing the £550 million project to dual the A55 from Bangor to Chester, major opportunities for growth and development are emerging. I highlighted this in the document "A55—The Road of Opportunity", published in December 1989, which set out the framework for a whole range of policies and proposals that will further benefit north Wales. The Government will continue to encourage a positive response from the public and private sectors to ensure that the development opportunities are taken to enhance economic, social and cultural life in north Wales.

Since 1987-88 there have been 34 approvals totalling £14·123 million of urban development grant throughout Wales. This represents some £66·309 million of private investment and is expected to create a total of 2,300 permanent and 1,180 temporary jobs. In addition, around 448 residential units will be provided.

Since April 1989 there have been 14 urban investment grant approvals totalling £7·631 million of grant. This represents some £24·065 million of private investment and is expected to create 935 new permanent jobs together with 455 temporary construction jobs. Some 200 residential units will also be provided.

The £29·187 million allocated under the urban programme for the current financial year represents a 26 per cent. increase over that allocated in 1987-88 (£23·1 million) and 19 per cent. above the £24·5 million allocated in 1988-89.

A £33 million European regional development fund (ERDF) programme for mid-Glamorgan has been successfully completed and another worth £108 million for Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys is well under way. Two further integrated development operation programmes (ERDF and European social fund) for Clwyd and industrial south Wales worth £23 million and £59 million respectively have recently been approved by the Commission and are now being implemented.

Recently, 11 areas in south Wales were accepted by the European Commission as eligible for the RECHAR initiative, which is to provide £225 million across the Community over four years to aid areas with recent large numbers of job losses in coal mining. The list of eligible areas, which was announced on 19 April, includes the majority of the Welsh candidate areas the Department initially proposed.

Grants totalling some £1·4 million have been awarded to firms in Wales for the marketing and processing of agricultural produce under European Community regulations 355/77.

On 1 January 1988 the designated Cambrian mountains environmentally sensitive area (ESA) was extended by some 80,000 hectares and some 39,700 hectares of the Lleyn peninsula was designated as an ESA. The scheme aims to promote the co-existence of conservation and efficient farming in areas of national environmental significance perceived to be at risk from increasingly intensive methods of production.

The reform of the sheepmeat regime agreed at the July 1989 Agricultural Council represented a good deal for Welsh sheep producers. The new regime provides them with a clear basis for the future and improves their competitive position with their continental counterparts and prospects for exporting.

In 1989 we took full advantage of devaluation of the green pound and paid the suckler cow premium at the highest permissible rate, including the maximum top-up from national funds. As a result, the rate was increased from £33·40 to £47·43 per cow (42 per cent.). This was worth £7·7 million to producers in Wales in the 1989-90 scheme year.

Over 50,300 home improvement grant schemes for private sector dwellings have been completed since June 1987 with a value of £160 million. In the same period £246 million has been spent on the renovation of local authority housing stock.

Since June 1987 more than 7,800 dwellings in Wales have been improved under enveloping schemes at a cost in excess of £62 million.

Since the valleys action programme was launched in June 1988 targets for the number of homes in enveloping and block schemes have been exceeded—2,656 in 1988-89 against a target of 2,000 and 2,749 in 1989-90 against a target of 2,500.

The new renovation grant regime arrangements which I have introduced will ensure that assistance goes to those in greatest need. To get the new system off to a good start I have already announced that £75 million has been allocated and that additional resources will be made available to district councils in Wales should that be necessary.

I have now incorporated our very successful priority estates programme in our new housing options Wales (HOW) programme which was announced in January. It is a package of measures designed to support improvements in local authority housing management, to focus upon service improvement and customer care, and to provide new opportunities for tenants' groups. It includes a new small grants scheme to fund people and projects developing better service delivery; a training and information service, and, prospectively, the re-establishment, with a new remit and better support, of the housing management advisory panel for Wales.

At the end of last year I launched, through the Development Board for Rural Wales, an experimental flexi-ownership scheme, which enables the board's tenants to buy their homes at a weekly outlay broadly the same as their existing rent. On 11 April the first two families in Wales bought their homes under this scheme.

Tenants' choice is now in force in Wales, providing an important new right for council tenants. Housing for Wales will work to ensure that those who wish to exercise this right have every opportunity to do so.

The National Health Service in Wales is treating more patients than ever before. The successful introduction of general management into the National Health Service in Wales has now been completed and effective mechanisms for manpower resource planning, education, training and management have been established.

In 1988 a corporate management programme for the National Health Service in Wales was produced and published and the Welsh health planning forum was set up. The forum has produced a "Statement of Strategic Intent and Direction for the National Health Service in Wales".

Two treatment centres have been established to shorten hospital waiting times; one at Bridgend for hernias and varicose veins, and one near Cardiff for hip and knee replacements.

The new Prince Philip hospital, Llanelli, has been completed along with major development schemes at the Llandough, Morriston, and Royal Gwent hospitals, at a capital cost of £55 million (cash prices).

Improvements in regional services have included a new bone marrow tissue typing laboratory in Cardiff; a new paediatric cardiac unit at the University Hospital of Wales (to be completed this year); two new subsidiary renal units at Cardiff and Merthyr Tydfil; and the provision of computerised tomography scanners in various locations throughout Wales.

Substantial progress has been made under the all-Wales strategy for the development of services for people with a mental handicap, supported by significant increases in funding.

In June 1989 the mental illness strategy was launched to promote a more responsive, locally and community-based service for treating and supporting mental illness sufferers.

Significant progress has also been made under the initiative on the care of the elderly in Wales in stimulating service providers to review their methods. Approval has been given for the funding of 60 demonstration projects, a number of which involve partnership between the statutory and voluntary sectors.

Current expenditure on education, excluding school meals and milk, was 13·6 per cent. more in real terms in 1987-88 than in 1979-80. In the same period pupil numbers fell by 14·6 per cent. and the pupil:teacher ratio improved by 5·7 per cent.

Expenditure per pupil thus rose overall from £910 to £1,216—34 per cent. Local authority capital expenditure on education has increased in real terms by 18·9 per cent. This is a significant increase at a time when pupil numbers have been falling and thus the basic need for new schools has been at a very low level.

I have strengthened financial support for the Welsh language. Direct Government financial support has increased by 75 per cent. since 1987 to £5·9 million. In 1988 I established the Welsh Language Board to find practical solutions to the everyday problems facing Welsh speakers.

The Welsh language now has, for the first time, a firm statutory place in the school curriculum for pupils from five to 16 in Wales within the national curriculum. I believe that the decision to include Welsh as part of the national curriculum will have a significant impact on the language for many years to come.

The national curriculum is being introduced progressively into the schools of Wales. Mathematics, science and English have already begun. Welsh and technology will be introduced from September 1990; other subjects in 1991 and 1992.

I have undertaken that the national curriculum should be responsive to the distinctive history and culture of Wales. All national curriculum documentation is being provided in Welsh and English. Separate orders will be made to ensure that children in Wales study Welsh as well as British history.

I have developed an initiative to introduce the teaching of the Japanese language into secondary schools in Wales.

I have had meetings with local education authorities in the valleys programme area to discuss ways of improving links between schools and industry, to ensure that pupils learn about the wide range of employment opportunities available to them.

Schemes for the local management of schools have been formally approved for each of the LEAs in Wales.

The number of students on courses of higher education in the Welsh public sector institutions has risen by 5 per cent. from 14,700 in 1987 to 15,500 today. During the same period the number of students on courses of initial teacher training in Wales rose by 20 per cent. from 2,621 in 1987 to 3,140 today.

I have initiated measures to simplify and improve the planning system and to speed up its operation, while ensuring that it continues to protect and enhance the environment. These have brought about reductions in the time taken for handling inspectors' appeals of nine weeks (inquiries) and five weeks (written representations).

Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments has increased revenue by 41 per cent. and attendance by 8·5 per cent. at ancient monuments in my care during the three-year period ending March 1990.

"Roads in Wales 1989—Progress and Plans for the 1990s", which I published in April, demonstrates that a high level of investment is continuing in roads in Wales. Thirteen trunk road schemes have been completed since June 1987, totalling over 28 miles. Work is in progress on a further 11 schemes comprising about 25 miles. Work has started on four new schemes under transport grant arrangements; three new schemes, all in west Glamorgan, were accepted for start in 1989-90 and the Newbridge/Maesycymmer improvement in Gwent has been approved for start in 1990-91.

Agricultural Diversification

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to revise the planning powers of the national park authorities in Wales to help farmers to diversify; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment and I are reviewing planning policy guidance note No. 7, which describes the contribution that the planning system can make to the rural environment by providing a mechanism for balancing the requirements of development—including fostering the diversification of the rural economy—and the continuing need to protect the countryside in the national parks and elsewhere.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the fact that empty properties lent to charities for short periods without charge result in the owner of the property being assessed for the full uniform business rate for the financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I have received no such representations.

The owners of unoccupied property are, unless the property is exempt, required to pay rates at 50 per cent. of the liability that would apply if the property were occupied. If a property subject to empty property rates is temporarily occupied for fewer than six weeks, and then again becomes unoccupied, the owners' liability at the concessionary empty property rate continues to apply.

Pembroke Dock

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the financial assistance provided to Pembroke dock by the Welsh Office since 1979.

Mr. Roberts [holding answer 24 April 1990]: The total financial assistance provided by the Welsh Office and non-departmental public bodies funded by the Department is £19,325,203 made up as follows:

Welsh Office:
Urban Development Grant	725,000
Urban Programme	254,594
Coast Protection Act Grants	35,155
Industrial Development Act:
(i) provision of sewage	7,529
(ii) roadworks	41,546
Regional Selective Assistance—offers accepted	396,000
Regional Development Grant (II)—offers made	4,135,000
Regional Enterprise Grants:
Investment Grants—offers made	66,000
Innovation Grants—offers made	15,000
Payments made to South Pembrokeshire District Council for lost rate revenue foregone in the Pembroke Dock sites of the Milford Haven Enterprise Zone	1,737,490
European Regional Development Fund	3,025,080
Funding for Projects of Regional or National Importance	2,450,000
Sports Council for Wales	50,065
Housing Corporation/Housing for Wales/Tai Cymru	1,857,744
Wales Tourist Board	25,000
Welsh Development Agency:
Land Reclamation Schemes—Public Sector	1,336,000
Land Reclamation Schemes—Private Sector	721,000
Environmental Improvement	30,000
Urban Renewal	40,000
Rural Conversion Grant	46,000
Factory construction	1,953,000
Investments	378,000
Total	19,325,203

ENVIRONMENT

Short Outfalls

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 April, Official Report, column 565, if he will list the 344 short outfalls which discharge to coastal or estuarial waters, together with the local authority environmental health department responsible for each.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Detailed information on the 344 outfalls referred to in my answer of 3 April to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell), Official Report, column 565, is not held centrally.

EC Environment Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters were discussed at the meeting of European Community Environment Ministers at Ashford castle on 20 to 21 April.

Mr. Trippier: I represented the United Kingdom at this informal conference.

Ministers discussed the implications for the environment of the completion of the internal market and related issues. These included the implications of economic growth, the avoidance of trade barriers, the integration of environmental considerations into other areas of Community policy, and the scope for using economic and fiscal measures as instruments of environmental policy.

Community relations with eastern European countries and with EFTA were also discussed. Ministers considered information from the European Commission about the state of the environment in eastern and central Europe, and identified a number of areas for discussion at a meeting with their counterparts from those countries to be held in Dublin on 16 June.

Industrial Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will be represented at the conference on industrial waste water treatment, to be held in London on 7 to 8 June.

Mr. Trippier: Yes.

Hazardous Substances

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the European Commission proposal for a Council directive amending directive 76/464/EFC on pollution caused by certain dangerous substances discharged into the aquatic environment of the Community (COM[909], final) issued on 8 February.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's response was set out in an explanatory memorandum which was placed in the Vote Office on 19 March.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further plans he has to introduce local government legislation in this Session; what that legislation will cover; how much of it will be retrospective in effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment of 30 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field), Official Report, Vol. 170, column 346.

UN Youth Forum on the Environment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what involvement his Department will have in the special youth forum on the environment at the United Nations in New York on 11 May.

Mr. Trippier: The Department of the Environment is not involved in the special youth forum. However, this is a United Nations environment programme event and therefore my Department fully supports it.

Environment Conference, York

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he, or any Ministers or officials of his Department, attended the conference on the state of the environment in Yorkshire and Humberside held at York university on 2 April.

Mr. Trippier: The conference was in fact held on 20 April. The Department was not represented. However, my officials are being kept informed of developments by the conference organisers.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the practice of local authorities charging a double standard community charge for owners of second homes; and whether he will consider extending transitional relief to these charge payers who would have been eligible had they been paying a personal community charge.

Mr. David Hunt: Charging authorities are required to set a multiplier for the standard charge of either 0, 0·5, 1, 1·5 or 2 times the personal community charge for the area. We have prescribed nine classes of property where no standard charge is payable and two classes of property where the multiplier may not exceed one times the personal charge. In addition local authorities have wide discretion to specify further classes of property in respect of which a different multiplier from the one generally applied may be set. Many authorities have made good use of this discretion. I am concerned, however, that other authorities have not and, if necessary, we will consider further central prescription for 1991-92. I do not think it necessary to extend transitional relief to standard charge properties. However, individuals who are subject to the standard charge may be eligible to receive transitional relief on their personal community charge by virtue of their sole or main residence.

Atmospheric Conditions (Monitoring)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for each region's estimated methane emissions in 1988 by emission source consistent with the United Kingdom figures given in table 2·12 of the latest "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics."

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give figures for nitrogen dioxide concentrations recorded at each of Warren Spring laboratory's 11 sites in the latest available year;

(2) if he will give the number of occasions hourly average tropospheric ozone concentrations in excess of 60ppb were recorded by each of his Department's 19 sites in the latest available year;

(3) if he will give figures on the acidity of rain recorded at each of his Department's 32 sites for the latest available year.

Mr. Trippier: United Kingdom monitoring network data for 1989 are given in tables A (NO_2), B (ozone) and C (acidity of rain). Of the NO_2 sites, all except Cromwell road and Stevenage are in the EC NO_2 directive monitoring network set up to meet the requirements of EC directive 85/203/EEC.

WSL also operates three rural NO_2 monitoring sites. Results for a full year are not yet available. Measurements made so far indicate concentrations are of the order of 10 to 15 parts per billion by volume (ppb) annual average and 30 to 50 ppb 98th percentile of hourly averages.

The locations of the sites are described in the digest of environmental protection statistics, No. 12, 1989 and in the second report of the United Kingdom review group on acid rain, 1987, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for each region's estimated carbon dioxide emissions in 1988 by emission source consistent with the United Kingdom figures given in table 2.11 of the latest "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics".

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for sulphur dioxide concentrations in each region in the latest available year.

Mr. Trippier: The basic urban monitoring network data, for April 1988 to March 1989, analysed by region, are given in the table:

Region	Number of sites with valid results	Concentration—micrograms per standard cubic metre of air

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for each region's estimated nitrogen oxides emissions in 1988 by emission source consistent with the United Kingdom figures given in table 2.6 of the latest "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics."

Mr. Trippier: Estimates of emissions of nitrogen oxides are not made by region.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for each region's estimated sulphur dioxide emissions in 1988 by emission source consistent with the United Kingdom figures given in table 2.3 of the latest "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics."

Mr. Trippier: Estimates of emissions of sulphur dioxide are not made by region.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for each region and each county for the estimated (a) acidity of rain and (b) wet deposited acidity in 1988, consistent with figures given in tables 2.5 and 2.6 of the latest "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics."

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to monitor the impact in the United Kingdom of the CITES ban on ivory trade.

Mr. Trippier: Records of trade in ivory are being maintained by the Department in accordance with article VIII.6 of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the amount of tradeable ivory currently in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The Department does not have comprehensive details of tradeable ivory currently in the United Kingdom. Such information as we have is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 11, if he will make it his policy to establish the total amount of ivory currently held at United Kingdom ports of entry and which is not accompanied by CITES documentation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. Enforcement of CITES controls at ports of entry is primarily the responsibility of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the current controls relating to internal trade in ivory among EEC countries.

Mr. Trippier: Internal trade in ivory among EC countries is controlled under EC regulations 3626/82 and 3418/83. Ivory which has been legally imported into one Community country may be moved to other Community countries provided that it is accompanied by a copy of the original import permit, or an EC CITES certificate granted by the Community country from which it is being moved.

Nature Conservancy

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made for designating the United Kingdom's scientific authority for animals under the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora resulting from his proposals to reorganise the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier: All the functions and responsibilities of the existing Nature Conservancy Council will continue under the new organisational arrangements. Those with a clear international and Great Britain dimension, including that of acting as the scientific authority for animals under the convention on the international trade in endangered species, will be exercised under the auspices of the joint committee of the councils, within the terms of clause 109 of the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Nature Conservancy Council has estimated the additional funding which will be required as a result of the Government's reorganisation proposals in order to maintain its existing functions and work programmes.

Mr. Trippier: We are discussing with the Nature Conservancy Council the resources needed by the successor bodies to the existing Nature Conservancy Council to carry forward the work of nature conservation and this work will continue throughout the summer. The Government expect to announce the grant in aid to be made available to each of the three new councils within the normal timetable for the public expenditure survey.

CITES

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to grant any exemptions under article 6 paragraph 1*(a)* of Council regulations (EEC) No. 3626/82 on the implications in the Community of CITES; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Applications for exemptions under article 6.1*(a)* of EC regulation 3626/82 are considered on their individual merits at the time they are made, having regard to the objectives of CITES, and any other relevant considerations.

Sellafield

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what factors he ascribes the substantial increases in discharges of Krypton-85 to the air from Sellafield in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 30 April 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the British Nuclear Fuels annual report on radioactive discharges and monitoring of the environment 1986, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets his Department has identified as desirable in respect of cuts in the supply of (a) CFCs, (b) halons, (c) carbon tetrachloride and (d) methyl chloroform.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 30 April 1990]: We must reduce production and consumption of all ozone-depleting substances as quickly as possible. In international negotiations we are pressing for: CFCs and carbon tetrachloride to be cut by 85 per cent. by 1995-96, and 100 per cent. by 2000; halons to be cut by 50 per cent. by 1995, and 100 per cent. by 2000 with exceptions for some essential uses; and methyl chloroform to be cut by 25 per cent. by 1994 with decisions to be made then on further cuts. We are considering whether we can go further and faster on methyl chloroform and carbon tetrachloride.

Ministerial Visit, Leeds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps were taken by the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities to inform Leeds city council of his visit to the city on Wednesday 4 April.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 18 April 1990]: My visit to Leeds on 4 April was on party business.

Storm Damage

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the special financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme to be given to those local authorities whose coasts suffered damage as a result of the severe storms during 25 and 26 February.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his reply, 20 April 1990, c. 1034]: I am pleased to announce that the Bellwin scheme for special financial assistance to local authorities in emergencies has been activated for the severe flooding in the Maidenhead area in early February 1990, and the storms of the period 26 to 28 February in England. My officials will be writing to local authorities shortly with the details.

Grant under the scheme will be given to those authorities whose eligible expenditure in coping with the

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wheelchair Access

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what facilities are currently available, or will be made available in future for hon. Members who are confined to wheelchairs to take their place and to speak in the Chamber.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No special facilities are available in the Chamber, but I am confident that hon. Members and staff of the House would give every assistance to a Member unfortunate enough to be confined to a wheelchair in order that he or she might take a full part in our proceedings.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the current disproportionate cost threshold for answering a parliamentary question; who determines the level; why it was introduced; and if there are any proposals to change it in line with inflation.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The disproportionate cost threshold currently stands at £250. The figure is calculated by the Treasury and is set at a level to identify and draw to ministerial attention those questions which are likely to be particularly expensive to answer. This does not alter the discretion of individual Ministers to decide that a particular question should be answered, partially or in full, regardless of cost.

The threshold figure is kept under regular review and a further increase will be proposed when thought necessary.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce further concessions to the community charge legislation to allow local authorities to waive payment where there is clear evidence of poverty.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The collection of the community charge is the responsibility of local authorities. The community charge benefit scheme is available to assist people on low incomes with their community charge payments. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to make changes to the present collection arrangements.

Quality Assurance (Surveying)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what evidence he has with reference to the issuing of quality assurance certification within the surveying profession of the effect of certification charges on incentives to secure quality assurance certification;

(2) what analysis he has made of the impact of the level of certification charges across Scotland on the willingness of smaller size surveying businesses to seek certification; and if he will make a statement,

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of professional firms on the Department of Trade and Industry quality assurance register is currently very small and no specific monitoring has so far been carried out. However, based on experience with the many manufacturers now registered, steps to help small firms are being taken. More certifying bodies are being approved, and this will increase competition and reduce costs to those seeking quality assurance certification.

Miss Gail Sutherland

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress in the handling of the claim of Miss Gail Sutherland, Rosshire about which he last wrote to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye on 5 January; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since I last wrote to the hon. Member regarding Miss Gail Sutherland's damages claim, the Office of the Solicitor for the Secretary of State has been pursuing the information required to enable an assessment of liability to be made. The claimant will be advised of the decision shortly and, indeed, as soon as possible.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets, born in Scotland in 1989; and what was the total number of maternities in that year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Multiple births, (live and still) and maternities leading to live or stillbirths, Scotland 1989, provisional figures

	Number
Twins	677
Triplets	13
Quadruplets	2
Quintuplets	0
Sextuplets	0
Total maternities	63,090

Hip Replacements

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operations for the insertion of an artificial hip are carried out on United Kingdom citizens in (a) National Health Service hospitals, and (b) private hospitals in Scotland annually.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is available centrally only for National Health Service hospitals. The numbers of United Kingdom patients receiving total or partial hip replacement in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland in each of the last three years are as follows:

Year	Total hip replacement	Other arthroplasty of hip	Total
1986	3,236	1,630	4,866
1987	3,485	1,709	5,194
1988	3,798	1,786	5,584

Nursing Staff

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of nursing staff employed in private hospitals in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total number of nursing staff employed in private nursing homes and hospitals subject to the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 or the Mental Health Acts 1960 and 1984 in Scotland at 31 March 1989 was 8,435 (3,189 whole-time and 5,246 part-time).

Health Boards

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the amount of money which health boards were required to find from their own resources to meet centrally agreed pay awards from 1979 to 1989, by health board, on an annual basis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The amounts included in health board revenue allocations to meet the cost of pay and salaries are not separately identified. However additional resources have been made available towards the cost of pay review body awards.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the amount of money which has accrued to individual health boards from the sale of hospital land and buildings; and if he will make a statement on how this money is treated for the hospital board's capital allocation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details of the receipts for NHS property sales retained by health boards are as follows:

Health Board	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £
Argyll and Clyde	749,664	1,352,562	3,079,594

Total receipts retained by boards	6,414,359	9,924,788	20,898,639

Since November 1988, boards have retained the total proceeds from the disposal of land and property and will continue to do so until March 1991. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 11 November 1988 at column 345. These arrangements replaced the previous rules allowing boards to retain only the first £250,000 proceeds of a single sale; the remainder was distributed to all the health boards.

Capital allocations to boards have regard to their expected income from capital receipts.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current total of psychogeriatric beds available in each Scottish health board area; and what are the relevant Scottish health authorities revenue equalisation targets.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 April 1990]: The average numbers of available staffed beds in the psychogeriatric specialty in NHS hospitals in Scotland are set out in the table. Targets are a matter for individual health boards; the service has top priority among the SHARPEN recommendations which the Government have accepted.

Health board	Average available staffed beds[1]

[1] Year ending 30 September 1989.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total amount of development funds allocated to each Scottish health board for the next financial year; and if he will detail allowances made for the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 April 1990]: The percentage increase in the 1990-91 gross revenue allocation over the 1989-90 gross revenue allocation for each health board in Scotland was as follows:

Health board	Percentage Increase
Argyll and Clyde	8·10
Ayrshire and Arran	8·88
Borders	10·13
Dumfries and Galloway	9·72
Fife	8·97
Forth Valley	8·24
Grampian	8·09

Highland	8·40
Lanarkshire	8·21
Lothian	7·94
Orkney	9·73
Shetland	9·66
Tayside	7·75
Western Isles	7·46

Further sums totalling 1·54 per cent. of the all Scotland 1989-90 allocations mainly representing resources for systems implementation, and breast cancer screening, will be allocated in the course of the year.

Resources released by cost improvement programmes are expected to release an average of a further 1 per cent. in the current financial year.

Boards receive an overall cash allocation and are expected to manage their expenditure within that amount. Allocations contain no specific allowance for inflation.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current waiting list for psychogeriatric beds in each of the Scottish health board areas; and what is the current average length of time between application for a full-time bed and allocation of beds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 April 1990]: Information on waiting lists for psychogeriatric beds as at 30 September 1989 (the latest data available) is set out in the table. Information on average length of time between application and allocation of psychogeriatric beds is not held centrally.

Radioactive Substances Act

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many firms or organisations have been successfully prosecuted in each year since 1979 under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960; and what penalty was incurred in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been successful prosecutions under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 in Scotland on two charges in each of the years 1982 and 1989 and on one charge in 1990. The convictions in 1982 led to fines of £50 and £300, those in 1989 to fines of £200 and £500 and that in 1990 to a fine of £250.

Firearms

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number of firearms licensed, by category, held in Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of firearm and shotgun certificates in force in Scotland at 31 December is shown in the following table:

Year	Firearm	Shotgun
1980	38,752	85,126
1981	38,548	84,847
1982	38,115	84,183
1983	37,825	84,306
1984	37,750	84,606
1985	38,165	86,198
1986	38,295	87,528
1987	38,465	89,104
1988	38,341	89,493
1989	33,540	87,049

Note: A certificate may authorise the holding of more than one firearm or shotgun. Figures for the total number of firearms and shotguns authorised to be held are not available.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals to further restrict the availability of shotguns.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 introduced stricter controls on the acquisition and possession of shotguns. There are no present plans to introduce further legislation, but the matter is kept under continuing review.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by area, the number of reported offences involving the use of firearms, by category, in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the table. Data for 1989 are not yet available.

[1] The rise in the "Other" category of firearm type in 1985 probably reflects the introduction in that year of a new firearm type category, "Unidentified", in the data collection procedures. Previously, unidentified types of firearm would have been forced into one of the specific categories.

[2] Variations in police recording practice can occur between areas and over time. It is known that the introduction of computerised crime logging systems has resulted in improved recording procedures and as such systems come to be more used minor corrections to recorded figures will continue to occur.

Salmon Poaching

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to revert to the position, as described in Scottish records office document AF 62/1161, that salmon poaching prosecutions should not be taken by procurators fiscal as part of their official duties.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland since when, and under what statute, it has been the policy of the Scottish Office that prosecutions for salmon poaching should be instigated by procurators fiscal rather than privately.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Acts 1862 to 1868 prosecutions were usually raised by clerks of district salmon fishery boards. Procurators fiscal were also entitled to prosecute these offences and did so in appropriate cases according to the practice in the particular district. The Salmon Act 1986 made fresh provision for the administration of salmon fisheries in Scotland and repealed the 19th century legislation. The relevant part of that Act came into effect in January 1987 since when the clerks have had no right to prosecute. Offences under the relevant salmon fisheries legislation—like nearly all other offences—are now prosecuted by procurators fiscal.

Police

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde on the number of officers on each relief in (a) Linwood, (b) Erskine and Inchinnan, (c) Bishopton, (d) Bridge of Weir, (e) Houston, (f) Lochwinnoch, (g) Johnstone, (h) Paisley, (i) Howood and (j) Renfrew.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 April 1990]: I understand from the chief constable of Strathclyde that all these areas lie within the boundaries of K division, the total uniformed strength of which is 399 officers. The number of officers on duty in particular areas at particular times varies according to the policing requirements.

HEALTH

Residential Homes

14. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to bring forward legislation requiring the registration of homes with fewer than four residents.

24. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to bring forward legislation requiring the registration of homes with fewer than four residents.

87. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to bring forward legislation requiring the registration of homes with fewer than four residents.

133. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to bring forward legislation requiring the registration of homes with fewer than four residents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As I said on Report of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, we will seek a legislative opportunity to bring homes with fewer than four residents under control. I cannot at present say when that opportunity may occur.

25. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals requiring the disclosure of criminal convictions by persons who are, or intend to become, proprietors, managers or care staff in private residential or nursing homes.

62. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals requiring the disclosure of criminal convictions by persons who are, or intend to become, proprietors, managers or care staff in private residential or nursing homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner) and for Wigan (Mr. Stott) earlier today.

36. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to extend the powers of health authorities to allow them to make top-up payments to residents of private and voluntary nursing homes over retirement age.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no such plans. Topping up would be contrary to a basic principle of the National Health Service to meet the full cost of a patient's care unless there is a specific power to charge, for example for prescriptions.

The White Paper "Caring for People" published in November last year proposes the introduction of a new funding structure for those seeking help from public funds for the cost of care. From 1 April 1991 there will be a single budget to cover the cost of such care, whether in a person's own home or in a residential or nursing home. We propose that local authorities should, subject to qualification, assume responsibility for meeting the cost of care, making the best use of those funds available in the light of an assessment of an individual's needs.

Internal Contracts

16. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any assessments have been made of how internal contracts in the National Health Service would work.

131. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any pilot schemes have been carried out in the National Health Service on internal contracts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave my hon. Friends the Members for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway) and for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) earlier today.

Health Service (Collaboration)

17. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on collaboration between the National Health Service and the private sector.

Mr. Freeman: Our policy is to encourage collaboration between the National Health Service and the independent sector. We expect all district health authorities to consider the opportunity for co-operative ventures as part of their regular reviews of performance.

27. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how collaboration between the National Health Service and the private sector affects services to patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Cost-effective collaboration releases National Health Service resources for further improvement to health services for all. We expect district health authorities to consider the opportunity for co-operative ventures as part of their regular reviews of performance.

Private Hospitals

19. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to require private hospitals and clinics to ensure that patients are in a position to pay for treatment before such treatment is given.

100. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to require private hospitals and clinics to ensure that patients are in a position to pay for treatment before such treatment is given.

107. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to require private hospitals and clinics to ensure that patients are in a position to pay for treatment before such treatment is given.

124. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to require private hospitals and clinics to ensure that patients are in a position to pay for treatment before such treatment is given.

Mr. Freeman: No. Payment for private medical treatment is a matter for the parties concerned. The National Health Service continues to provide a high quality comprehensive service, available to all regardless of means.

General Practitioners

20. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the operation of the new general practitioner contracts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The GPs' new contract was introduced on 1 April 1990. The new contract will raise standards of care, extend services and promote greater choice for patients in the family doctor services. First indications are that GPs are responding positively to the new arrangements.

Laboratories are already reporting a significant increase in the number of cervical smear tests as GPs aim to meet the targets. More GPs are applying to attend training courses in order to qualify for the new postgraduate education allowance. Some FPCs are also reporting that well over half of all GPs in their areas are applying for a place on the child health surveillance and minor surgery lists, demonstrating their wish to take advantage of the new opportunities offered by the contract.

We are supporting the changes being made by the new contract with very substantial additional sums to enable GPs to recruit more practice staff and to improve their premises. Between 1988-89 and 1990-91 expenditure on staff and practice premises has increased from £232 million to £359 million, an increase of 36 per cent. in real terms. I also expect to add to the £359 million for 1990-91 in the summer in order to meet the cost of commitments entered into before the start of this financial year and which are not yet fully reflected in the current allocation.

23. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the operation of the new general practitioner contracts.

58. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the operation of the new general practitioner contracts.

72. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the operation of the new general practitioner contracts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The GPs' new contract came into operation on 1 April. The changes that have been introduced will raise standards of care, extend services and offer greater consumer choice in the family doctor services.

44. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effect the new general practitioners' contract will have on general practitioner list sizes.

98. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the new general practitioner contract will affect doctors' lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Average list size has fallen steadily over the past decade. This should continue as the population is almost static and the number of GPs is increasing each year. There are no grounds for supposing that the GPs' new contract will affect this trend.

52. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average list size of a family doctor in 1979 and 1989.

112. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people on average a general practitioner currently has on his or her list; and what was the equivalent figure in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) on 20 February at column 717.

56. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect of the new general practitioner contract on services to patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friends the Members for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) and for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on 20 March at column 549.

59. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the general budget-holding scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Progress on the general practice scheme remains very encouraging. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced on 14 March at column 280, over 850 practices in England have expressed an interest in the scheme. These practices are now in discussion with regional health authorities to determine whether they are likely to meet the eligibility criteria for participation in the scheme from 1 April 1991, subject to parliamentary approval of the relevant provisions of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

64. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any extra assistance will be available to general practioners' practices which choose to become fund-holding.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation, practices which volunteer to join the general practice funding scheme will be able to claim an annual management allowance of up to £32,000 to meet expenses legitimately incurred in running a fund. In 1990-91 an allowance of half that level will be available in recognition of the preparatory work which practices will need to undertake before entering the scheme. Furthermore, practices which commit themselves formally to participating in the scheme will be able to claim an additional 25 per cent, over and above the 50 per cent. which all GPs can claim, of their computer purchasing, leasing and upgrading costs according to a scale to be published in the statement of fees and allowances.

84. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources are being allocated for 1990-91 to family practitioner committees in England to enable them to fund the direct reimbursement to general practitioners for the cost of employing a wider range of practice and support staff.

Mr. Freeman: Family practitioner committees (FPCs) in England have been given a preliminary allocation of £359 million to fund the direct reimbursement of general medical practitioners' practice staff and premises improvement costs in 1990-91. Within this total, FPCs have been allocated £256 million to reimburse the costs of practice staff, including new types of staff. Within their overall cash limit, FPCs are free to reapportion funds between practice staff and premises improvement costs in the light of local priorities. FPC allocations for 1990-91 will not be finalised until FPCs have reported their actual level of commitments for practice staff reimbursement and premises improvements as at 31 March 1990. A further allocation will be made in June or July to meet any difference between the preliminary allocation for 1990-91 to fund existing commitments, and the actual level of commitments.

86. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of practice staff in the average general practitioner's practice now; and what was the number in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The average number of practice staff per partnership employed under the direct reimbursement scheme increased by 66 per cent. from 3·8 (2·3 whole-time equivalents) in 1979 to 6·3 (3·7 whole-time equivalents) in 1988.

92. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners' practices have expressed an interest in becoming fund-holding practices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 14 March at column 280.

94. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners' practices in England and Wales have now registered their interest in becoming fund-holding practices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Over 850 practices in England have registered their interest in the practice funding scheme. Fund-holding practices in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, but I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 20 April at column 1056. While not all of these practices are likely to meet the full eligibility criteria and opt to take part in the scheme, we are clearly on course to meet our target of a few hundred practices choosing to participate from April 1991.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 20 April, at column 1048, what factors were taken into consideration in determining to make a modification to the operation of screening targets after the commencement of the new contract for general medical practitioners; what steps have been taken to minimise any disruption resulting from this change; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The change made to the target payment system followed representations from the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association. The Government have accepted the GMSC's argument and new arrangements are being implemented. There should be no associated disruptive effects. The first target payments will not be made until the end of September giving sufficient time to implement the change and to ensure payments are made on time.

National Health Service Trusts

21. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what benefits there are for hospitals which choose to become National Health Service hospital trusts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: National Health Service trusts will have substantial freedom to manage their own affairs. In particular, they will be free to determine the terms and conditions of service of the staff they employ, to acquire, own and dispose of assets, to borrow money and to retain surpluses. These freedoms will enable trusts to improve the quality of the health care services which they provide and to respond flexibly and effectively to the needs of National Health Service patients.

68. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how services to patients will be affected in those hospitals which choose to become National Health Service hospital trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National Health Service trusts will remain fully part of the National Health Service, but will be given substantial freedom to manage their own affairs. We intend that they should use their powers to improve the quality of the health care which they provide and to respond flexibly and effectively to the needs of general practitioners and National Health Service patients.

Patient Care

26. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to promote the quality of care for patients.

53. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives are being taken to promote a better quality of care for patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The White Paper reforms aim to provide a better National Health Service with more attention to quality of care and customer service flowing from greater devolution, the separation of purchaser and provider functions and the introduction of contracts, wider choice and the extension of medical and clinical audit. These proposals are being reinforced by a £10 million programme of project-based initiatives to make the consumers' interest more central to the management and delivery of health care. The Government have also initiated talks with the royal colleges and other statutory bodies with an interest on assessing clinical standards in the National Health Service after implementation of the reforms. A first meeting took place on 4 April, when broad agreement was reached on the need to adopt a multi-professional approach by setting up a national clinical standards advisory group.

Junior Doctors

22. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals he has to reduce the hours worked by junior doctors.

28. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends to take to limit and to progressively reduce the hours of junior hospital doctors (a) in National Health Service hospitals and (b) in trust hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I recently met with representatives of all the key parties including the profession to discuss this matter.

The talks were both productive and encouraging. A working group has been established to explore the main issues. It has been asked to make an initial report by the early summer.

Self-governing hospitals will be expected to comply with Government policy relating to the number of hours for which junior doctors may be employed.

NHS and Community Care Bill

29. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any pilot studies are being undertaken on proposals in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Although no specific "pilot studies" are being undertaken, the Health Service, frequently supported and funded by the Department of Health, is undertaking a wide range of projects designed to inform the future implementation of the proposals contained in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

66. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role he envisages for the voluntary sector in implementing the community care proposals in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We envisage a substantial and significant role for the voluntary sector in implementing proposals on community care and as set out in the White Paper "Caring for People". The voluntary sector will continue directly to provide services, represent user and carer interests, be active consultees in the care planning process and continue to respond to new and changed needs through innovative service developments. The precise role in each area will, of course, depend upon local expertise and needs.

75. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how quality of care for patients will be affected by the proposals in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

126. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the National Health Service and Community Care Bill will affect the quality of service to patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our proposals aim to raise the level of services in all parts of the Health Service closer to the standards already achieved by the best and so produce an improved quality of care for patients. District health authorities will have the specific responsibility of ensuring the availability of a full range of services for all people living within their boundaries. They will use contracts to specify both the nature and quality of the services to be provided. Hospitals will have much more freedom to manage their own affairs and will be able to respond more effectively to the needs of patients. The service on admission to hospital will improve by providing:

—more reliable appointment times;
—better facilities for waiting and counselling;
—more information about the services which are available and on clinical matters; and —a wide range of optional extras and amenities.

The introduction of the GP practice fund scheme will give family doctors the opportunity to decide for themselves which hospital will offer the best quality treatment for their patients.

The effect of these, and of our other proposals, will be to make the NHS more patient conscious and better able to provide high quality care.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on steps being taken to implement the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

93. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Implementation of the Bill itself will follow from the completion of its parliamentary passage. Regional and district health authorities are well advanced in planning for implementation to ensure the delivery of improved services to patients. The Bill has been considered in detail for 147 hours in this House and is now being considered by a Committee of the House of Lords.

For a detailed explanation of all the progress we have made in putting into action the changes outlined in the White Paper "Working for Patients" I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 20 March at column 546.

Regional Health Authorities

30. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on funding for regional health authorities in 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: Cash allocations for regional health authorities were announced on 14 December 1989. Total planned revenue spending on hospital and community health services in England for 1990-91 rose by £1·3 billion to £15·4 billion gross.

NHS Staff

31. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much the number of front-line doctors, dentists, nurses and professional and technical staff has changed since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information required is shown in the table:

NHS Staff in post at 30 September of each year
Whole-time equivalent[1]

	1979	1988	WTE Change
Medical and Dental Staff[2]	39,000	44,700	5,800
Nursing and Midwifery Staff[3]	358,400	403,900	45,400
Professional and Technical Staff	60,100	79,800	19,600

Source: Department of Health (SM13) Annual Censuses of NHS Medical and Non-Medical Manpower.
[1] All figures independently rounded to the nearest one hundred (100) whole-time equivalent.
[2] Includes all permanent paid, honorary and locum staff in hospitals and primary health care services, hospital practitioners and part-time medical/dental officers.
[3] Includes agency staff. Not adjusted for the reduction in nurses working hours during 1980-81 from 40 to 37·5 hours per week.

NHS Chief Executive

32. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the chief executive of the National Health Service; and what matters are to be discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 20 March at columns 998-99.

District Health Authorities

33. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities were in deficit at the end of the last financial year.

35. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities were in deficit at the end of the last financial year.

111. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities were in deficit at the end of the last financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information about the income and expenditure position of district health authorities in 1989-90 will be available when their accounts are submitted later in the year.

43. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the hospitalisation rate currently achieved by the Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: My hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) raised the subject of hospitalisation rates in Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde health authority in his Adjournment debate on 22 November 1989 about funding of that authority.

Hospital Building

34. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital building schemes worth over £1 million are planned or under construction.

Mr. Freeman: From information held centrally, in the National Health Service in England there are currently 527 schemes each costing over £1 million at various stages of planning, design and construction; this represents the largest sustained building programme ever. Of these schemes, 149 are currently under construction.

Day Care and Domiciliary Services

37. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to require the inspection and registration of day care and domiciliary services.

88. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to require the inspection and registration of day care and domiciliary services.

123. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to require the inspection and registration of day care and domiciliary services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to introduce legislation for the registration and inspection of day care and domiciliary services for elderly and other dependent people.

In-patients

38. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patient cases were treated per available bed in 1978 and in 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1978 and 1988-89, the number of in-patient cases treated per available bed rose from 14·5 to 23·3; an increase of 61 per cent.

Leicestershire Health Authority

39. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the financial problems of Leicestershire health authority.

Mr. Freeman: My ministerial colleagues and I have had a number of conversations with my hon. Friend. We have received a number of letters from members of the public also.

Eye Tests

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest estimate of the reduction in the number of eye tests since the introduction of charges.

40. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest estimate of the reduction in the number of eye tests since the introduction of charges.

114. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest estimate of the reduction in the number of eye tests since the introduction of charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 20 April at column 1048.

109. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to base the proposed survey of the number of people having sight tests over the last 12 months on records kept by ophthalmic opticians and ophthalmic medical practitioners rather than on the recollections of patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The survey recently commissioned by the Government is of the number of sight tests during the first quarter of 1990. It is being carried out by a market research company and is based on information obtained from patients, in order to ensure that the results are clearly independent.

121. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to assist housebound people in need of eye tests.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce that regulations are to be laid before Parliament shortly, introducing a free domiciliary visiting service for housebound patients requiring an NHS sight test. The scheme will be available for those patients who are entitled to an NHS sight test but because of illness or disability are unable to travel to an optician. In future, such patients will be eligible to receive an NHS sight test in their own home. The service will benefit many housebound people, particularly the elderly for whom good eye care is so important. Opticians will receive a fee from the family practitioner committee for providing this service. It will be in addition to the NHS sight test fee. The service will come into force in June 1990.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce free eye tests for all.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to introduce universal entitlement to a free NHS sight test. It is right that those who can afford to do so should pay for their optical care. Provision exists for the more vulnerable in the community who continue to receive free NHS sight tests.

Plans have been announced to lay regulations for a free domiciliary visiting scheme for housebound patients requiring an NHS sight test.

Private Patients

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is owing to the Durham, Sunderland and Hartlepool health authorities from private patients; and how much debt has been written off over the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The annual accounts for the four-year period 1985-86 to 1988-89 (inclusive) of the Hartlepool, Durham and Sunderland health authorities record sums written off in respect of private patients' debts totalling £2,493, £334 and £1,852 respectively. The amounts written off in each year (which may include sums due for earlier years) were in general significantly less than 1 per cent. of the relevant annual income. Prior to 1985-86 the annual accounts of health authorities did not provide for the separate identification of these sums.

Information on the total amounts due to health authorities from private patients is not specifically identified in their annual accounts or otherwise collected centrally. For the health authorities concerned, I would refer the hon. Member to the chairman of the Northern regional health authority who may be able to assist.

Mental Handicap

41. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve the availability and quality of day care services for the mentally handicapped.

96. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve the availability and quality of day care services for the mentally handicapped.

108. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve the availability and quality of day care services for the mentally handicapped.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) earlier today.

Hospital Doctors

42. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the pay and conditions of hospital doctors in the National Health Service have changed since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 20 April at column 1047.

101. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital doctors there are in the National Health Service; and how many there were in 1979.

102. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the number of hospital doctors in the National Health Service since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of hospital doctors has risen from 39,859 at 30 September 1979 to 45,574 at 30 September 1988, an increase of 5,715 (14 per cent). These figures include permanent paid and honorary staff.

Capital Expenditure

45. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to revise his Department's capital expenditure plans for the 1990-91 financial year.

48. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to revise his Department's capital expenditure plans for the 1990-91 financial year.

61. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to revise his Department's capital expenditure plans for the 1990-91 financial year.

70. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to revise his Department's capital expenditure plans for the 1990-91 financial year.

Mr. Freeman: They remain as set out in this year's public expenditure White Paper.

Food Poisoning

46. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has recently received representations regarding the causes of food poisoning.

Mr. Freeman: We have received a number of questions and comments about food safety and related matters. If my hon. Friend can be more specific, I will endeavour to reply further.

NHS Reform

47. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in favour of pilot schemes before implementing his National Health Service proposals in full.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Some of those commenting on the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" and the National Health Service and Community Care Bill have proposed "pilot studies" though it is seldom clear what is meant by that or whether this novel approach to management change would be practicable. The Government approach to implementation is one of determined but considered progress, learning and sharing the practical lessons of experience and assisted by enthusiastic volunteers. This approach has the merit of speed and sensitivity without damage to morale and the blight on development that would be the inevitable result of "piloting".

Maternity Services

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the National Audit Office report on maternity services.

49. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the National Audit Office report on maternity services.

110. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the National Audit Office report on maternity services.

117. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the National Audit Office report on maternity services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Public Accounts Committee took evidence from the chief executive of the National Health Service management executive on 25 April. In due course we expect the Committee to publish a report on its findings to which the Government will in the usual way publish a response.

Community Care

50. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now bring forward proposals for users of community care services to be consulted regarding local authority care plans.

60. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now bring forward proposals for users of community care services to be consulted regarding local authority care plans.

77. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now bring forward proposals for users of community care services to be consulted regarding local authority care plans.

104. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now bring forward proposals for users of community care services to be consulted regarding local authority care plans.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The White Paper "Caring for People" lays stress on both users of services and those who care for them being consulted and involved in the care plans process. The guidance which the Department is preparing to assist local authorities and other agencies will reinforce the responsibility to consult.

79. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the funding arrangements for local authority community care.

83. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the funding arrangements for local authority community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) earlier today.

122. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is being done to improve financial management information systems for the implementation of community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is predominantly for local authorities to determine the financial information systems they need to develop in order to implement community care policies in the way best suited to local needs and circumstances. Many authorities are working with the Audit Commission, and other advisers to develop their strategies and systems to support them. In addition, the Department of Health is supporting a joint project between the Association of Directors of Social Services and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy with the objective of producing guidance on financial management.

NHS Management

51. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to streamline management in the National Health Service.

99. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in the streamlining of management within the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NHS management executive, whose central role was proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients", has now been set up. The management executive is in close contact with regional health authorities as they take forward proposals for the delegation of functions and other management aspects of the White Paper.

Copies of the report, "Developing Districts", which was published yesterday and which provides advice to district health authorities to help them adapt to their new role, have been placed in the Library.

Progress overall is good and we remain confident that management arrangements will be in place to enable the reforms contained in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill to be implemented next year.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received regarding balloting prior to any hospital coming out of the existing National Health Service management structure.

106. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the need for balloting before hospitals opt out of the existing National Health Service management structure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received representations on this subject from a number of hon. Members, representative organisations and from individual members of the public since the beginning of the year. Regions will make arrangements for consulting on any proposals which are brought forward for the establishment of NHS trusts.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much nurses' pay has increased in the last four years.

54. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the pay and conditions of nurses and midwives employed by the National Health Service since 1979.

132. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the pay and conditions of nurses and midwives in the National Health Service have changed since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Pay for nursing and midwifery staff has risen by more than 43 per cent. on average in real terms since 1979, and over 22 per cent. since 1985. Pay levels are higher in real terms than those recommended in the Halsbury report (1974) and the Clegg report (1979).

In 1983 the Government established an independent pay review body to recommend levels of pay for nursing and midwifery staff. All seven review body reports have been implemented in full, with staging in three cases.

Hours of work were reduced from 40 to 37·5 a week during 1980-81 without loss of pay. This was equivalent to a 6·5 per cent. increase in pay.

New clinical and education grading structures were introduced in 1988 and 1989 respectively, which provide better and more flexible career opportunities for those staff engaged in clinical and teaching practice. A new pay structure for senior nurse managers is currently being discussed in the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council.

71. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the midwifery profession to discuss their grading.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ministerial colleagues and I have met representatives of midwives on a number of occasions to discuss a range of matters. The issue of grading was specifically raised most recently when the Royal College of Midwives met my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State in December 1988.

90. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the current levels of nurse staffing.

103. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the current levels of nurse staffing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 18 April at column 875.

Indicative Budgets

55. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in response to his recently published further working paper on indicative prescribing budgets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We expect to publish this month a further working paper on indicative prescribing which reflects the outcome of extensive consultation on the original working paper.

Asthma

57. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to take to assist asthmatics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for district health authorities to ensure that a comprehensive range of services is provided for their resident populations, including asthmatics. As announced on 21 March, we intend to make peak flow meters available on prescription by general practitioners. Suppliers of these meters are being consulted and the date from which they will become available from general practitioners will depend upon the discussions between the Department and interested parties, including suppliers. A further announcement will be made as soon as a firm date can be established.

Medway Health Authority

63. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the date by which Medway health authority will achieve 100 per cent. of its funding entitlement from the South East Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Freeman: South East Thames regional health authority's funding policy currently proposes that all districts should be within 98 per cent.-102 per cent. of their weighted capitation target by 1996-97.

Heart Attacks

65. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has issued any guidelines to local health authorities about the resuscitation of elderly heart attack victims.

Mr. Freeman: No. The treatment of an individual patient is a matter for the clinician responsible for his or her care.

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research

67. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

89. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

115. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 19 April at column 990.

HIV

69. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he anticipates making financial support available to those individuals who contracted the HIV virus through blood supplied by the National Health Service during surgery.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to do so.

Royal College of Nursing

73. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the general secretary of the Royal College of Nursing; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met the general secretary of the Royal College of Nursing on 4 April at a meeting of the royal colleges and other statutory bodies to discuss the NHS review and clinical standards.

Hospital Performance

74. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment is made by his Department of the (a) financial performance and (b) clinical success of hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not carry out assessments centrally of the financial performance or clinical success of individual hospitals. It is for health authorities to make such assessments as they consider necessary within the framework of their processes for planning, monitoring and review of hospital performance.

Abortion Drugs

76. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on the licensing of RU486 in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the past six months we have received 41 representations about the licensing of the drug RU486 in Britain.

Out-patients

78. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to improve services for out-patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Specific measures taken to improve services for out-patients include—

(i) issue of a report to health authorities in December 1989 on "Reducing Waiting Time in Out-Patients"; this work is being followed up by development of a visual simulation package for use in improving out-patient appointment systems;

(ii) issue to health authorities in March 1990 of a departmental study report on "The Role of Nurses and Other Non-Medical Staff in Out-patient Departments"; this report contains advice on changing the skill mix of qualified and non-qualified staff better to reflect the tasks required and to make best use of available resources;

(iii) a series of six demonstration projects has been initiated by the Department at a cost of £750,000 to encourage improvements to the quality of services including upgrading of the physical environment, to complement improvement in services for patients including more efficient appointment systems. The results will be disseminated as good practice advice to the Health Service later this year. A further series of projects are being planned in 1990-91.

British Medical Association

80. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the British Medical Association; and what matters were discussed.

95. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the British Medical Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State met with members of the general medical services committee on 14 February when the report of the doctors and dentists review body and the pay of doctors and dentists were discussed.

I met representatives of the joint consultants committee, which includes the royal colleges, the British Medical Association and NHS management, on 10 April to discuss the way forward on junior doctors' hours of work.

129. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the president of the British Medical Association; and what he intends to discuss.

130. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the president of the British Medical Association; and what he intends to discuss.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no present plans to meet the president of the British Medical Association.

Children (Illegal Employment)

81. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest official estimate of the number of children illegally employed in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

82. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest official estimate of the number of children illegally employed in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

113. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest official estimate of the number of children illegally employed in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

120. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish official statistics on the number of children illegally employed in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) and for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 9 March at columns 893-94.

Family Practitioner Services

85. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in expenditure on family practitioner services in the past 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The change in net expenditure on the family practitioner services in England, excluding administration, between 1978-79 and 1988-89 is shown in the table:

	Expenditure (£ million)
1988-89	4,293
1978-79	1,329
[1]1978-79	2,922

[1]expenditure adjusted to 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator

Expenditure between 1978-79 and 1988-89 increased by 223 per cent. in cash terms, and by 47 per cent. in real terms.

Family Welfare Association

91. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further support he proposes to give to the Family Welfare Association.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce that I have agreed a renewal of the grant made by the Department under the section 64 scheme to the Family Welfare Association of £106,000 a year for the next three years. This represents a 10 per cent. increase in funding. In addition, I have agreed a capital grant of £30,000 for the current year.

Waiting Lists, West Norfolk

97. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received in respect of waiting lists in west Norfolk.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My hon. Friend wrote in January of this year to which I replied in February.

Royal Colleges

105. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the presidents of the royal colleges; and what subjects will be discussed.

118. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next intends to meet representatives of the royal colleges; and what matters will be discussed.

128. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the presidents of the royal colleges; and what subjects will be discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) and for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg) on 18 April at column 874.

Speech Therapy

116. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from local health authorities about problems in recruiting speech therapists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Staff-Patient Ratios

119. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on nurse/patient and doctor/patient ratios.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no such recent representations.

Patient Choice

125. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways the National Health Service reforms will affect patient choice.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A fundamental aim of the Government's proposals to improve the Health Service is to put patients first by providing choice and responding sensitively to individual needs. The proposals will stimulate better services and greater choice by delegating responsibility to local level, by encouraging competent and willing hospitals to seek NHS trust status and by making it easier for patients to obtain early and effective treatment. The new GP practice fund scheme will offer participating doctors greater ability to decide with their patients which hospital will offer the best treatment with the least waiting time for their particular illness.

Mental Patients

127. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking in the move to care in the community for mental patients to give recognition to the role and skills of nurses qualified to care for them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 23 January at column 664. The key functions and responsibilities of Health Service staff remain essentially unaltered by the proposals in "Caring for People". There are two key health care initiatives in which psychiatric nurses will be involved—continuing health care flowing from the requirement which will be placed on health authorities to ensure that discharge of patients into the community is more effective; and the production of a multi-disciplinary document following the recently produced report by the Royal College of Psychiatrists on "Discharge and After-Care Procedures for Patients Discharged from In-Patient Psychiatric Treatment".

Deprivation

134. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the recent recommendations by Professor Jarman about relevant deprivation of health authority areas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Professor Jarman wrote to the Department of Health on 9 March 1990 suggesting that the trigger point on his index for deprivation payments to GPs should be reduced from 30 to 16 or 20 points. A trigger point of 16 would extend coverage to some 25 per cent. of the population. We have considered this proposal carefully and the issue has since been debated in the House on 4 April at columns 1313-20. The Government's view remains that our policy objective of targeting payments on practices that serve areas of highest deprivation is best achieved at the present level of 30 points or more. By this means 9 per cent. of the population will attract a deprivation payment for their GPs in some 5 per cent. of the wards. The introduction of this payment is an important primary health care initiative and recognises for the first time the additional work that GPs working in areas of deprivation undertake.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to conclude the negotiations with Ordnance Survey concerning the terms on which general practitioners will be able to reproduce Ordnance Survey maps in their practice leaflets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department expects to conclude its discussions with Ordnance Survey shortly.

Computerised Tomography Scans

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for patients of Durham district health authority to have CAT scans.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that patients of the Durham district health authority needing this service are scanned in Newcastle.

Prostate Gland Removals and Hysterectomies

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average time spent in hospital in each year since 1980 for (a) prostate gland removals and (b) hysterectomies.

Mr. Freeman: The information available centrally is shown in the table:

Mean duration of stay (days)

Year	Prostatectomies	Hysterectomies
1980	14	12
1981	13	11
1982	13	11
1983	13	11
1984	12	10
1985	11	10

Source: Hospital in-patient inquiries 1980-85.

Information is not available for 1986 or 1987 because the NHS was introducing a new data coding system. Data for 1988-89 should be available shortly.

Hospital Re-admissions

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each year since 1980 have been re-admitted to hospital in the following month to receive treatment for their original illness.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Dental Estimates Board

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance he gives to the Dental Estimates Board regarding the choice between suggesting short-term financially cheaper treatment or long-term slightly more expensive treatment;

(2) what guidance he gives to the Dental Estimates Board regarding due notice that it should take of the treatment plan submitted by the patient's dentist;

(3) what representations he has received about the distress and discomfort caused to many patients by the length of time taken by the Dental Estimates Board to give decisions on dental treatment plans;

(4) what is the average time taken by the Dental Estimates Board to give a decision on a dental treatment plan; and if he will make a statement;

(5) how many complaints he received in each of the years (a) 1983, (b) 1984, (c) 1985, (d) 1986, (e) 1987, (f) 1988 and (g) 1989 regarding the length of time taken by the Dental Estimates Board to give decisions on treatment plans;

(6) how often procedures are reviewed by the Dental Estimates Board with regard to the length of time taken to reach decisions on dental treatment plans;

(7) how often the Dental Estimates Board reviews its procedures for the filing and retrieval of dental treatment plans.

Mr. Freeman: The Dental Practice Board (its name was changed from Dental Estimates Board with effect from 1 April 1989) is a statutory body, independent of the Department of Health. The board is required to consider all dental estimate forms submitted to it for approval of treatment or for approval of payment and may give or withhold approval as it thinks fit. Guidance of the type referred to by my hon. Friend is, therefore, not appropriate.

The board keeps all of its internal operating procedures under routine review. For the last complete quarter to 31 March 1990 it responded to requests for approval of treatment in an average time of 14 calendar days. For the same quarter, in 98 per cent. of cases dentists were notified of the decision about payment by the first payment schedule following the request. The average time to notify dentists of a decision about payment was 26 calendar days, which reflects the fact that schedules are issued once each month.

Information concerning representations and complaints about the time taken by the board to give decisions on treatment plans is not readily available. In particular, yearly statistics are not kept. Complaints are, however, very few in number and I am not aware of any specific representations concerning distress or discomfort to patients.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 42, if he will make it his policy to collect centrally and report to Parliament the figures in respect of the ambulance dispute referred to, for each regional health authority; and what is his policy on the collection and publication of such figures relating to London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to collect this information centrally. Each health authority was responsible for making its own arrangements for emergency cover during the recent dispute and for ensuring that costs could be met from within existing resources including savings resulting from suspension of normal NHS services.

The costs of military assistance, amounting to £4·8 million to the end of February 1990, which in part resulted from the need to bring services to a state of national preparedness, are being shared between all regional health authorities.

Deaf Children

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers local health authorities have to require parents of deaf children to take out insurance on commercial hearing aids loaned to them under the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities have no power to require any patient to insure a hearing aid, whether this be a commercial model or a model from the NHS standard range.

NHS Trade Unions

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent meetings he has had with representatives of the National Health Service trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State replied to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 20 March at columns 996-98 I have had one further such meeting.

ENVIRONMENT

Hedgerows

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will place in the Library copies of the two hedgerow surveys he mentioned in his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 13 March at columns 185-86.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Both reports are already in the Library. The survey carried out by Hunting Surveys and Consultants Ltd. was published in 1986 under the title "Monitoring Landscape Change". The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food "Survey of Environmental Topics on Farms, England and Wales, 1985" was published under that title as a MAFF statistics release (reference number 244/85) on 30 September 1985.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all sites of special scientific interest currently the subject of (a) appeals and (b) inquiries.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer) on 21 March 1990, Official Report, column 679.

"Financial Times" Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representatives his Department had at the Financial Times conference on industry and the environment, held in London on 23 and 24 April.

Mr. Trippier: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), gave the keynote speech at the conference on 23 April. He was accompanied by two officials.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the definition of (a) a married couple, (b) an unmarried couple and (c) persons who do not fall into either category (a) or (b) but who live together, for the purposes of community charge classification; and how many couples of each category there are in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) England, (iii) Norfolk and (iv) North Norfolk district council areas.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 April 1990]: The definition of people who are married to each other for the purposes of the community charge is set out in section 16(9) of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 which states that they are those who are married, or those who are not married but living together as husband and wife. The figures requested are not available.

Houses of Parliament (Static Electricity)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to instigate a monitoring programme in respect of static electricity levels within the House.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 April 1990]: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has to enable a comparison to be made between static electricity levels within the House and those in comparable circumstances elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 April 1990]: There are no figures available.

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what (a) reviews his Department is carrying out and (b) legislation he is planning to introduce to reduce environmental pollution from heavy lorries.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 7 February at columns 653-54. Local highway authorities already have wide-ranging powers in respect of heavy lorries using unsuitable roads.

THE ARTS

Natural History Museum

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the ending of research on fossil birds and plants at the natural history museum in London; and if he has proposals to increase funding to the natural history museum.

Mr. Luce: The day-to-day running of the natural history museum, and decisions on the museum's research programme, are matters for the director and trustees of the museum.

With regard to funding, I announced in November 1989 that the Government were increasing the museum's grant-in-aid for 1990-91 by 16·5 per cent. over 1989-90. Future funding for the national history museum will be considered in conjunction with the funding bids from other national museums and galleries, details of which are contained in their 1990-95 corporate plans which are being submitted to me.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Business Expansion Schemes

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what compensation is available from the Inland Revenue to an applicant company in the event of excessive delay resulting in the loss of potential business expansion scheme investments and other improvements to finance.

Mr. Lilley: As a general policy, the Inland Revenue will consider reimbursing expenditure which has arisen unnecessarily and is directly attributable to a serious error on the part of its staff. Serious error is defined as something which no responsible person, acting in good faith and with proper care, would reasonably do. Each case is considered on its merits.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to amend section 294 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 to make explicit that bridges, equipment and track of private railways are to be regarded as plant and machinery.

Mr. Lilley: I have no plans to do so.

Flights (VAT)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) which rate of value added tax applies to the carriage of passengers on non scheduled flights, including scenic, pleasure and special passenger transport services in aircraft capable of carrying not fewer than 12 passengers, including pilot and crew; and if he will make a statement;

(2) which rate of value added tax applies to the carriage of passengers by hot air balloons capable of carrying not fewer than 12 passengers, including pilot and crew, on non scheduled scenic, pleasure and special passenger transport flights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The VAT Act 1983 provides zero-rating for the transport of passengers in aircraft designed or adapted to carry not less than 12 passengers, but, in applying that relief, a distinction has been made between conventional aircraft and hot air balloons. Conventional aircraft are capable of performing the function of conveying passengers with certainty between specified places—the essential characteristic of a supply of transport. However hot air balloons, which are not capable of powered flight, are largely at the mercy of the elements and do not satisfy that criterion. They are, therefore, excluded from the benefit of the relief and flights in them are thus liable to VAT at the standard rate.

Retail Sales

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the annual rate of growth for retail sales for the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 1 May 1990]: The volume of retail sales increased by 6·9 per cent. between 1987 and 1988 and by 2·2 per cent. between 1988 and 1989. Retail sales growth has clearly slowed sharply in response to monetary policy.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide details for each YTS in the Birmingham and Solihull and Sandwell and Dudley areas, for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date, of the number of YTS trainees (a) in total and (b) with disabilities.

Mr. Nicholls: The information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details for Great Britain and for the west midlands region for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date, of the total number and percentage of YTS trainees (a) who did not complete their full entitlement to YTS and (b) with disabilities who did not complete their full entitlement to YTS.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is set out in the table.

	All trainees		Disabled status trainees
	Early leavers	Per cent. all leavers	Early leavers	Per cent. all disabled leavers

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details for Great Britain and for the west midlands region, for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date, of the number of YTS leavers entering part-time employment (a) in total and (b) with disabilities.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of YTS leavers for Great Britain and for the west midlands region for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date entering part-time employment (a) in total and (b) with disabilities are as follows:

	All Leavers		Disabled Leavers

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details for Great Britain and for the west midlands region, for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date, of the number and percentage of YTS leavers gaining a qualification (a) in total and (b) with a disability.

Mr. Nicholls: The number and percentage of YTS leavers for Great Britain and for the west midlands region for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date gaining a qualification (a) in total and (b) with a disability in Great Britain and the west midlands are as follows:

	All Leavers		Disabled Leavers

Government Training Programmes

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons on work-related Government training programmes in 1989 were nationals of other countries, showing European Community countries separately.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available.

Staff Qualifications

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 7 who have each (a) arts, (b) science and (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants, (e) have postgraduate qualifications in management and (f) who were educated in (i) local authority and (ii) private schools.

Mr. Eggar: There are 817 grades 1 to 7 and equivalents who hold one or more degree-level qualifications. This equates to 50 per cent. of total staff in post for these grades. A detailed breakdown by subject of qualifications held and type of education cannot be provided other than at disproportionate cost.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a further statement about the sale of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar: The sale of the majority of the businesses to Astra Training Services Limited was completed on 30 April. As a result 42 skill centre businesses, the STA head office, mobile training service, sales teams, and colleges, and the staff employed in them, have transferred to the private sector. The sale of the gas and water safety training business at Letchworth skill centre to Mr. James was also completed on 30 April. The sales to Astra of the businesses of four other centres, and the sales to other successful bidders, are planned for completion shortly.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he is financing any expenditure in connection with the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Howard: The full expenses will be covered by receipts from the sale. Some of the payments by the Government to training business purchasers need to be made before the arrival of receipts from the sale of assets not included in the business packages. Parliamentary approval for this new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency (class VI, vote 5). Pending the necessary approval, urgent expenditure estimated at up to £16·324 million is being met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Employment Service

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which unemployment benefit offices and jobcentres (a) are to be closed and (b) have been closed following the announcement of the reorganisation of the employment service in December 1989.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 30 April 1990]: The employment service, which is responsible for jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

CIVIL SERVICE

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what information he has on the number and percentage of present permanent secretaries in the civil service who were educated at (a) public schools, (b) Oxford university and (c) Cambridge university.

Mr. Luce: The number and percentage of present permanent secretaries in the home civil service who were educated at (a) public schools, (b) Oxford university and (c) Cambridge university are:

		Per cent.
(a)	17	49
(b)	13	37
(c)	9	26

HEALTH

Hip Replacements

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations for the insertion of an artificial hip are carried out on United Kingdom citizens in (a) National Health Service hospitals, and (b) private hospitals in England annually.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities in England reported 45,600 hip replacement operations in 1988-89.

Information is not collected centrally on surgical operations carried out in private hospitals. However, a report "The Role of the Private Sector in Elective Surgery in England and Wales in 1986" by J. P. Nicholl, M. R. Beeby and B. T. Williams, published in the 28 January 1989 issue of the British Medical Journal, copies of which are available in the Library, showed that 7,066 total hip replacement operations were performed in private hospitals in 1986.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations his Department is (a) funding and (b) co-operating on in respect of (i) the sexual abuse of children and (ii) the ritual abuse of children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department funds a programme of research into child sexual abuse. An interdepartmental group on child abuse meets regularly to discuss a number of cross-sector policy issues in relation to child protection. The Department also regularly meets those voluntary organisations that it funds. On the issue of ritual abuse, the Department is aware of a number of child sexual abuse networks that have been investigated by social services departments and the police. The Department arranged a meeting in November 1989 with representatives from the NSPCC, Childline, the Children's Society and the Association of Directors of Social Services. A further meeting is to be arranged. The social services inspectorate is continuing to monitor the situation in order to assess the scale and nature of child abuse networks and ritual abuse.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring arrangements he has in place to ensure that all guidelines issued to those social workers involved in cases of alleged child abuse incorporate the recommendations of the Butler-Sloss report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Guidance issued by the Department in relation to child protection takes account of the recommendations of the Butler-Sloss report. The Department's social services inspectorate provide advice and support to local authorities, and as part of their inspection work look at practice in the light of local guidance issued to social workers.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what directives he has given to directors of social services arising from the recommendations of the report of the inquiry into child abuse in Cleveland in 1987.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Simultaneously with the publication of the report of the inquiry into child abuse in Cleveland in 1987 the Department of Health issued copies of the document "Working Together: a guide to arrangements for inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children from abuse", under cover of circular LAC(88)10/HC(88)38, copies of which are available in the Library, to statutory agencies in England with responsibilities for child protection. The Home Office and the Department of Education and Science issued complementary ciculars to the police and school service respectively. The guidance document and the circulars took account of the recommendations in the inquiry report.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from local authorities about the need for additional funding required for the purpose of training social workers involved in cases of alleged child abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department's training support programme has, since 1989-90, included an element for training local authority staff who provide social services for children and their families, including staff who deal with cases of alleged child abuse. All local authority social services departments receive grant aid under the programme in response to bids made to the Department.

Airborne Emissions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year for the last five years, the percentage of people who have suffered health problems from airborne emissions of (a) lead, (b) carbon monoxide and (c) particulates.

Mr. Freeman: Except for instances of massive accidental exposure or deliberate self-exposure to carbon monoxide the informaton is not available. The effects of airborne emissions of lead, carbon monoxide or particulates currently experienced cannot be isolated from many other factors unrelated to air contaminants but contributing to health problems. Concentrations of these pollutants in the air are monitored at critical sites and, in general, they fall within the limit values prescribed under EC directives or the guidelines proposed by the World Health Organisation. Where these limit values or guidelines are exceeded occasionally, the measured levels have been within the recognised safety margins.

Recycling

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussion Ministers had with suppliers of disposable equipment for hospitals, in drawing up the guide lines for the campaign, towards a greener NHS, to assess the degree to which materials used would be recycled, or disposed of with minimum environmental damage.

Mr. Freeman: Departmental officials have been in touch with glass manufacturers and the Aluminium Can Recycling Association to assess the degree to which these materials, as used in hospitals, can be recycled or otherwise safely disposed of with minimum environmental damage. A review is in progress within the NHS procurement directorate on the potential costs and benefits of using recycled paper more widely in the NHS and this will involve discussions with industry representatives. A number of health authorities have also taken helpful initiatives in this area. The only safe way of disposing of much single use or otherwise disposable equipment after use in hospitals is via incineration. The Department's estates directorate is in regular touch with incinerator manufacturers to ensure that the best possible advice is always readily available to the NHS.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities currently exist to test for the effects of exposure to pesticides; whether he has any plans to improve diagnostic and treatment facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Doctors have access to the whole range of NHS testing facilities to assist them in diagnosis and treatment of people who may have been exposed to pesticides. They can seek advice from national poisons units and can arrange for special tests if necessary at pathology laboratories. There are no plans to make improvements specifically to pesticide testing facilities.

All doctors receive training in the diagnosis of acute poisoning, including that from exposure to pesticides. In addition, all general practitioners and hospital accident and emergency departments have been issued with a copy of the book "Pesticide Poisoning", a copy of which is available in the Library. This gives guidance on the diagnosis and treatment where acute poisoning from pesticides is suspected, but not on exposure to the very low levels of residues in food as these are within the accepted safety limits.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will be in a position to respond to the Social Services Committee's follow-up report on food poisoning, listeria and listeriosis.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have today published their response to this report. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Staff Qualifications

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 7 who have each (a) arts, (b) science and (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants, (e) have postgraduate qualifications in management and (f) who were educated in (i) local authority and (ii) private schools.

Mr. Freeman: Full details could be recovered fr0m personal files only at disproportionate cost. But the records held on computer for payroll purposes indicate that some 30 per cent. (164) of those in the relevant grades have arts degrees; 16 per cent. (88) have science and 4 per cent. (21) technical degrees; and there are on these records five qualified accountants and one person with a post graduate qualification in management. Type of school is not recorded, and the reliability of payroll data in respect of qualifications is sufficient only to illustrate orders of magnitude.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirements for the disclosure of interests exist for members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines follow a code of practice on the declaration of interests. Details of the code and of interests declared are published with the annual report of the Medicines Commission. A copy of the 1988 report is in the Library.

Depo-Provera

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the number of women receiving Depo-Provera injections in each of the district health areas of west Yorkshire in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may like to contact Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority for further information.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued to district health authorities with regard to the administration of Depo-Provera to women who have recently given birth.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about the use of Depo-Provera is set out in full in a product data sheet supplied to all doctors. The data sheet states that because of the risk of heavy or prolonged bleeding in some women, the drug should be used with caution [redacted] the puerperium and that if the puerperal woman will be breast feeding, the initial injection of Depo-Provera should be delayed until six weeks post-partum.

Guidance about Depo-Provera is also contained in the "British National Formulary" which is published by the British Medical Association and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain and issued twice yearly to all practising doctors.

TRANSPORT

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) reviews his Department is carrying out and (b) legislation he is planning to introduce to reduce environmental pollution from heavy lorries with particular reference to (i) minor and (ii) unclassified roads.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 7 February at columns 653-54. Local highway authorities already have wide-ranging powers in respect of heavy lorries using unsuitable roads.

Shipping

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the proportion of exports from and imports to the United Kingdom, excluding ferry operations, carried in British registered ships; and what approximate proportion of ships engaged in ferry services to and from the continent are registered in United Kingdom ports.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information is not available in the form requested. However the table shows, for 1989, the percentage, by value and by weight, of imports and exports carried in United Kingdom-registered vessels, distinguishing separately trade with Eurpean countries:

Percentage of trade carried in United Kingdom registered vessels: 1989

	European Countries	Rest of World	Total
By weight
Imports	21	20	21
Exports	26	9	21
By value
Imports	40	18	34
Exports	44	20	37

Information on the proportion of ships engaged in ferry services to and from the continent that are United Kingdom registered vessels is not available.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the approximate cost in sterling and other currencies, respectively, of carrying imports and exports of the United Kingdom in the years 1979 and 1989 at actual and weighted prices, together with the percentage of cost in sterling for both years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The actual costs of carrying imports to the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1989 were £2,349 million and £2,992 million respectively. No information is available for the carriage of United Kingdom exports. In 1979 freight costs accounted for 5 per cent. of the value of goods imported as declared to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. In 1989 the percentage was 2·5 per cent.

London Traffic Director

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to appoint the traffic co-ordinator for London; what will be his powers and terms of reference; what size of secretariat he will control; and where it will be located.

Mr. Atkins: The role of the Traffic Director was outlined in paras 7.34-7.38 of "Traffic in London" published following my right hon. Friend's statement on 14 December last. We shall be consulting the organisations concerned shortly on proposals for legislation. The appointment will depend on the timing of legislation. The director will have a small staff, but its size and location have not yet been decided.

Staff Qualifications

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 7 who have (a) arts, (b) science and (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants, (e) have postgraduate qualifications in management and (f) who were educated in (i) local authority and (ii) private schools.

Mr. Atkins: The information available from our computerised staff record is as follows:

(a), (b), (c)

115 staff in my Department in grades 1 to 7 have an arts degree, representing 12 per cent. of the total in these grades.

334 staff in these grades have a science or technical degree, representing 36 per cent. of the total.

(d) Nine staff in these grades are qualified accountants, 1 per cent. of the total.

(e) No staff in these grades have postgraduate qualifications in management.

(f) Information about types of school is not available.

King's Cross

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of the contractual agreement between British Rail and the developers of the King's Cross site for national transport requirements.

Mr. Parkinson: In its discussions about the development of the King's Cross railway lands, British Rail has sought to preserve the option of desirable improvements to the national and local rail systems.

Drink Driving

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the blood-alcohol limits enforced on drivers in each country of Europe, including eastern Europe.

Mr. Atkins: The most recent list of which we are aware relates to 1985. It is as follows:

	Blood-alcohol limits
Austria	80
Belgium	80
Bulgaria	0
Czechoslovakia	0
Denmark	80
Finland	50
France	80
East Germany	0
Greece	50
Hungary	0
Iceland	50
Ireland	120	now 100
Italy	not set	now 80
Luxembourg	80
Netherlands	50
Norway	50
Poland	25
Portugal	not set	now 50
Rumania	0
Sweden	50
Switzerland	80
Spain	80
United Kingdom	80
West Germany	80

PRIME MINISTER

Flooding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will receive a deputation from Clwyd county council concerning the impact upon people's property of the north Wales sea inundation;

(2) what plans she has to visit houses flooded by the sea inundation in March on the north Wales coast; and if she will make a statement;

(3) if she proposes to meet business men whose premises were flooded by the sea inundation in March on the north Wales coast.

The Prime Minister: As I told the hon. Member on 5 April at columns 735-36, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has already visited the area as has the Minister of State. Both Ministers and officials have held meetings with the local authorities most involved. These contacts continue and on 30 April the Secretary of State was able to announce that the Bellwin scheme at the rate of 85 per cent. would be extended to 31 July and that he would be ready to consider a further extension to the scheme in the light of circumstances nearer that date. I know that this continued close contact is the right approach to ensuring that the area returns to normal as soon as possible.

Armed Forces (Medical and Dental Officers)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces.

The Prime Minister: The armed forces pay review body has submitted to me a supplementary report on the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces which recommends increases of between 6 and 10·7 per cent. The Government have decided to accept the recommendations in full, though, in common with the pay awards announced for other review body groups in February, implementation will be staged, with 7 per cent. payable from 1 April 1990 and the balance of the award payable from 1 January 1991.

ENERGY

Local Authorities (Energy Production)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the local authorities that are actively producing energy from waste materials and show for each local authority from what source the material comes.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department is aware of the following:

Energy from the combustion of municipal solid waste (MSW)
North London waste disposal authority
Coventry city council
Nottinghamshire county council
Sheffield city council

Energy from land-fill gas
East London waste disposal authority
Merseyside waste disposal authority
Warwickshire county council
Lancashire county council
Cheshire county council

Production of refuse derived fuel from MSW
Isle of Wight county council
East Sussex county council
Birmingham city council
Newcastle city council
Glasgow city council

Offshore Oil Installations

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is considering any further proposals to enhance safety on offshore oil installations in advance of the report by Lord Cullen into the Piper Alpha disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We are continuously looking to improve offshore safety standards. Regulations requiring emergency shutdown valves on offshore installations were introduced in June 1989, as were regulations requiring the election of offshore safety representatives and safety committees. Regulations relating to revised arrangements for first aid offshore were made in September 1989. Further regulations relating to sub-sea isolation systems are being prepared. Discussion documents have been issued detailing proposals for a review of the requirements for life-saving appliances, work permit procedures and fire and explosion protection on offshore installations, together with proposals requiring formal safety assessments to be applied as a continuous process at all stages of an installation's life cycle. In addition, a number of safety notices have been issued drawing the attention of the industry to specific areas of concern. The Government have made it clear that any improvements to safety recommended by the Piper Alpha public inquiry will be acted upon.

Staff Qualifications

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 7 who have each (a) arts, (b) science and (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants, (e) have postgraduate qualifications in management and (f) who were educated in (i) local authority and (ii) private schools.

Mr. Wakeham: I regret the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Gas Imports

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what new imports of gas have been agreed within the last 12 months.

Mr. Wakeham: None. If a purchaser wished to construct a marine pipeline to carry imports, consent would be required under the Petroleum and Submarine Pipe-Lines Act 1975 and a treaty would have to be negotiated with the country from whose territory the pipeline crossed to the United Kingdom. In the case of the pipeline from the Frigg field, which is now in rapid decline, a new treaty or amendment of the existing treaty would be required to govern any new uses of the line. British Gas plc gave an undertakkng in 1986 that it would consult the Government regarding any import plans as these develop. In considering any import proposals, we shall weigh carefully the availability of competitive UKCS gas supplies and the market opportunities open.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a formal hearing will be held by the Fair Employment Commission into a complaint made by Mr. T. Barker in November 1988 against Sean Quinn Quarries Ltd., Derrylin.

Mr. Needham: Investigations into an individual complaint of discrimination under the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1976 are governed by schedule 5 to that Act. The investigation must be conducted in private and it is, therefore, not the commission's policy to confirm that a complaint has been made.

Water Service Properties

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether valuations have been completed in respect of residences occupied by employees of the Department of the Environment (NI) water service; and when occupiers will be offered the opportunity to purchase their homes;

(2) whether all tenants of Department of the Environment (NI) water service homes will have a right to purchase;

(3) what progress has been made to date in the valuation of Department of the Environment (NI) water service tenanted residential properties in the (a) Northern division, (b) Southern division, (c) Eastern division and (d) Western division.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All water service dwellings are being considered for possible disposal. The first group to be offered for sale comprises 35 dwellings, 31 of which have been valued, 10 being in Northern division, nine in Southern division, 11 in Eastern division and one in Western division. The occupants will shortly be offered the opportunity to purchase the dwellings in which they live.

Metric Measures (Spirits)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whom he will consult before he publishes his draft amending legislation on metric measures for spirits; and how long the consultation period will last.

Mr. Needham: As required by article 48(2) of the Weights and Measures (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 the Department of Economic Development will again consult with interested organisations, including those listed in my reply of 9 March, at columns 863-64 before making any order.

The period of consultation is normally between four and six weeks from publication of the proposal for the draft amending legislation.

Farm Dwellings

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases in 1988 where application for planning approval was made for an additional farm dwelling evidence was sought from the Department of Agriculture as to the viability of a farm unit and the need for a farm labourer's dwelling.

Mr. Needham: It is the policy of the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland to consult the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland on applications for planning permission for farm dwellings in areas where such permission is granted only when a need to live in the countryside can be demonstrated. Consultations with that Department are carried out occasionally on applications affecting sites in other areas. Information on the number of cases is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning approvals have been given for the building of dwellings for farm labourers in each of the last 10 years; what is the average size of such dwellings and the number of rooms provided; and how many are currently occupied by farm labourers.

Mr. Needham: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Language Courses

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will consider funding towards the cost of providing opportunities for secondary school children who are in attendance at grant-aided schools to improve their knowledge of French, German or Spanish by attendance at specially designed residential language courses.

Dr. Mawhinney: As part of its response to the challenge of 1992, the Government wish to encourage greater competence in a wider range of languages among pupils in Northern Ireland. The Department of Education for Northern Ireland has invited education and library boards to put forward proposals for support for programmes of European awareness drawn up by them. The enhancement of foreign language skills by various means, including residential courses provided by boards could form an appropriate part of such programmes.

Employment and Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the number of approved and filled action for community employment projects in each year since 1986, and how they have been distributed between (a) district councils; (b) other public bodies; (c) voluntary bodies and (d) the private sector.

Mr. Needham: Details of approved and filled ACE projects 1986-1990 are as follows:

	District councils	Other public bodies	Voluntary bodies	Private sector	Totals
March 1986
Approved	70	104	1,044	4	1,222

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the flexibilities recently introduced to apply to youth training in Great Britain will be extended to the youth training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The new flexibilities which are being introduced into youth training in Great Britain and which will be applied to the youth training programme (YTP) in Northern Ireland are:

a. an emphasis on outputs rather than training processes;
b. flexible design of individual schemes to achieve outputs;
c. all YTP entrants will have the opportunity to train for a national vocational qualification and the targets for level 2 and above are being increased over the next three years;
d. improved assessment and endorsement procedures for special training needs;
e. enhanced training opportunities to help unemployed trainees nearing the end of training to secure jobs;
f. extension of the guarantee to include certain groups whose entry into training has been unavoidably delayed.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the destinations of people leaving action for community employment and the job training programme; how many leavers got jobs, became unemployed or went on to further training, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: A recent survey showed that three months after leaving the action for community employment programme, 32·1 per cent. of participants had obtained jobs, 58·8 per cent. were unemployed and 0·2 per cent. were receiving further training. The most recent survey information available for the job training programme (JTP) reveals that between May and July 1989 a total of 52 per cent. of participants leaving JTP did not return to the unemployment register, with the destination of 48 per cent. not determined. For the period August to October 1989, a total of 47 per cent. of participants leaving JTP did not return to the unemployment register, with the destination of 53 per cent. not determined.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the eligibility conditions that a person has to satisfy if they are to take up a job or training place on (a) action for community employment, (b) job training programme, (c) youth training programme and (d) enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The eligibility conditions that a person has to satisfy if they are to take up a job or training are as follows:—

(a) Action For Community Employment

Applicants must meet three conditions:—

(1) be at least 18 and under 64 years of age;
(2) have been unemployed without a break for at least three months immediately before starting on ACE project;
(3) have been unemployed for at least 12 months out of the last 15 months.

There are exceptions to condition (3) in the case of disabled people, young people who have recently been on the youth training programme and adults who have recently been on the job training programme.

Unemployed 18 to 24-year-olds who are in receipt of unemployment benefit or income support need be unemployed for only six months in order to qualify.

(b) Job Training Programme

Adults between the ages of 18 and 60 who have been continuously registered as unemployed or who have been in receipt of invalidity benefit, sickness benefit or severe disablement allowance for at least six months are eligible for the Programme. Periods spent in prison on a custodial sentence or on remand may be counted in satisfying the six month qualification period. Certain other groups who have not been registered as unemployed are also eligible. These special groups include disabled people, ex-service personnel and lone parents whose youngest dependant child is in statutory full-time education and who have been in receipt of income support on an order book for at least 26 weeks.

(c) Youth Training Programme

Young people, whether employed or unemployed are eligible to join YTP at any time between the date on which they are first entitled to leave full-time education and their 18th birthday. Young people with disabilities are eligible to join the programme at any time between their minimum school leaving date and their 22nd birthday.

(d) Enterprise Allowance Scheme.

Applicants must meet eight conditions:—

(1) they must be receiving unemployment benefit or income support in lieu of unemployment benefit (either personally or through their spouse) on the date of their completed application;
(2) they must have been unemployed and actively seeking work for at least eight weeks prior to the receipt of their application. (Time spent under formal notice of redundancy, or Department of Economic Development training-rehabilitation schemes or in part-time employment for up to eight hours per week will count towards this eight-week period);
(3) they must be aged 18 (or over) but under state pension age;
(4) they must be able to show that they have at least £1,000 available to invest in the business during the first 12 months. (This can be in the form of personal savings, loan or overdraft);
(5) they must agree to work full-time (at least 36 hours per week) in the business;
(6) their proposed business must be approved by the Department of Economic Development;
(7) they must not have participated in the enterprise allowance scheme within the 12 months prior to any second application;
(8) they must have participated in approved enterprise training prior to making their application.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the destination of youth training programme leavers for each year since 1986-87; and of those who found employment, how many were with the employer who provided their training.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

	YTP leavers whose destination is known	To employment	Percentage of total
1986-87	10,271	5,686	55
1987-88	10,509	5,787	55
1988-89	10,232	6,428	63
1989-90	10,914	6,767	62

No figures are available for YTP leavers who found employment with the employer who provided their training.

	Full time education	Percentage of total	Unemployed	Percentage of total
1986-87	430	4	4,155	41
1987-88	503	5	4,129	40
1988-89	460	5	3,334	33
1989-90	649	6	3,498	32

No figures are available for YTP leavers who found employment with the employer who provided their training.

Unemployment Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unemployed claimants have, since 9 October 1989, (a) been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for not actually seeking work, (c) had their claims allowed or disallowed and (d) been referred to an adjudication officer for refusing suitable employment; how many of those in (d) have had their benefits disqualified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Up to 9 April 1990, just over 5,000 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland were interviewed specifically about their efforts to find work. As a result, 67 claims were referred to the adjudication officer and of these 25 were allowed and 42 disallowed. In addition, a further five claims were referred to the adjudication officer on grounds of refusing employment and of these two were disallowed. Given the difference in administrative arrangements as compared with those in Great Britain, the actively seeking work condition has been introduced in Northern Ireland in a sensible and sensitive manner.

Upper Bann

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to visit the constituency of Upper Bann before 17 May.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 April 1990]: It is not the custom to give details of ministerial programmes in advance.

Road Deaths

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number of road fatalities since 1 October 1989 and for each year from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 30 April 1990]: Royal Ulster Constabulary road traffic accident statistics show the following figures:

Month and year	Fatalities
October 1989	13
November 1989	12
December 1989	15
January 1990	18
February 1990	21
March 1990	12[1]
April 1990	8[1]
1980	229
1981	223
1982	216
1983	173
1984	189
1985	177
1986	236
1987	214
1988	178
1989	181

[1] Provisional.

Since the road casualty reduction campaign started on 1 November, the preliminary provincial number of deaths is 13 per cent. down on the same six months over the previous two years.

Exports

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the Industrial Development Board and the Local Enterprise Development unit are taking to monitor the export performance of their client companies.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 May 1990]: Companies in receipt of assistance from the Industrial Development Board (IDB) and the Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU) are required to submit annual accounts as a condition of this assistance. These accounts assist the agencies to monitor the performance of these companies including their overall sales performance both domestic and export. Both agencies are currently in the process of introducing new computing systems which will further facilitate the monitoring process.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge Benefit

52. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for community charge benefit have been received from individuals qualifying under the new capital limits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Arrangements have been made for the information to be collected by the housing benefit and community charge benefit management information system. The information will not be available until early 1991.

Benefits (Application Forms)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review or alter the provision of application forms for (a) family credit and (b) other Department of Social Services benefits at post offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no plans to alter the provision of the family credit application form, FC1, at post offices. FC1 is the only application form available at post offices.

The facilities offered by the Post Office are used to display leaflets which inform about the whole range of benefits available and advise how claims can be made. The eight leaflets currently displayed include FB2, "Which Benefit?", a general guide to benefits, as well as those concerned with community charge benefit, housing benefit and income support. The leaflet about the new capital limits will shortly be on display.

The leaflets and posters displayed are regularly reviewed to ensure best use of the facilities offered to inform the public.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in the latest year for which figures are available how many people previously in receipt of severe disablement allowance had their entitlement to that benefit reassessed following the completion of a YTS;

(2) in the latest year for which figures are available how many people previously in receipt of severe disablement allowance have had their entitlement to that benefit reassessed having left a YTS before completing the course.

Mr. Scott: A record is not kept of the number of previous recipients of severe disablement allowance who claim the benefit again after leaving a YTS.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in the latest year for which figures are available how many people previously in receipt of severe disablement allowance lost their entitlement to that benefit having completed a YTS;

(2) in the latest year for which figures are available how many people previously in receipt of severe disablement allowance lost their entitlement to that benefit having left a YTS before completing the course.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available. Trainees who were receiving severe disablement allowance immediately before starting YTS can have it reinstated as a linked claim when they leave the course if they are incapable of work and make the fresh claim within eight weeks of leaving the YTS.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in the latest year for which figures are available how many people previously in receipt of severe disablement allowance had their entitlement to that benefit reassessed following a short period of employment;

(2) in the latest year for which figures are available how many people previously in receipt of severe disablement allowance lost their entitlement to that benefit as a result of a reassessment following a short period of employment.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available. If a break in entitlement to severe disablement allowance lasts no longer than eight weeks, benefit can be reinstated as a linked claim if the person again becomes incapable of work.

EC Pensions

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the value, converted into £ sterling, of the basic pension per age paid in each European Community country, including any relevant major supplements.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the Department's publication "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities (Position at 1 January 1989)," a copy of which is in the Library. These tables set out the level of pension in the national currencies together with the sterling equivalent converted according to the OECD's purchasing power parity figures as explained in the introduction to the tables.

War Widows

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the steps that have been taken by his Department to assist war widows since May 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have honoured their pledge to maintain the value of war widows pensions. Since 1979 these pensions have been uprated annually in line with the retail prices index. In 1979 the basic pension was £30·20 a week. It is now £60·95.

In 1979 the Government freed war widows pensions from income tax.

In 1984 the Government introduced a new tier of age allowance for war widows aged 80 or over. Age allowances are paid in addition to the basic war widows pension. These age allowances were increased by more than the retail prices index in April 1990; from £6.10 to £7.00 a week for war widows aged 65-69, from £12.20 to £13.50 a week for those aged 70-79 and from £15.30 to £20.00 a week for those 80 or over.

In 1987 the Government significantly improved the help with funeral costs for war pensioners whose death was due to service.

In 1988 the Government increased from £4 to £5 a week the amount of war widows pension which is disregarded for the assessment of entitlement to income related benefits. From April 1990 the disregard was further increased to £10 a week and arrangements were also made to disregard completely the new special payments of £40 a week to pre-1973 war widows.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of cases settled under the criminal injuries compensation scheme in the calendar years 1987, 1988 and 1989 together with the average length of time taken to settle such cases; if he will provide a separate similar analysis for cases involving police staff and pensioners settled in those years; and if he will give similar figures for the Northern region.

Mr. John Patten: The number of applications resolved by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in the calendar years 1987, 1988 and 1989 were 26,619, 38,016 and 38,484 respectively. Information about the average time taken to resolve applications is not available in the form requested, but the percentage of cases submitted to a single member of the board within certain periods from registration is shown in paragraph 6.1 of the board's 25th annual report (Cm. 900), a copy of which is in the Library. The relevant figures are:

	1989 (per cent.)	1988 (per cent.)	1987 (per cent.)
Up to 3 months	1·0	1·5	1·5
3 to 6 months	2·1	2·6	5·1
6 to 9 months	4·8	6·7	16·4
9 to 12 months	19·0	20·0	26·8
Over 12 months	73·1	69·2	50·2
	100·0	100·0	100·0

The board does not keep separate statistics for applications from police and pensioners; nor are records maintained for separate regions.

Child Abuse

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what directive he has given to police forces arising from the recommendations of the report of the inquiry into child abuse in Cleveland in 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Two circulars of guidance to the police have been issued to date. Home Office circular 52/1988, which was issued to coincide with the publication of Lord Justice Butler-Sloss's report into child sexual abuse in Cleveland, establishes the principle that the needs of the child should come first and recommends the joint interviewing of alleged child victims by police officers, social workers and, where necessary, doctors; interviewing in comfortable surroundings; and the video-recording of interviews with child victims.

Home Office circular 67/1989 gives guidance to chief officers about specialist training for police officers who take part in joint interviews with social workers of alleged child victims.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what training is being made available to the police to enable the video taping of first disclosures by allegedly abused children for presentation in court;

(2) what training is being made available to police surgeons in the physical examination of children suspected of being the victims of sexual abuse.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for training rests with the chief officer of the force concerned. Home Office circular 67/1989, which gives guidance about the content of joint training courses for police officers and social workers responsible for investigating child sexual abuse, lists training in the video-recording of interviews as one of the essential components of a training course. There is no specific guidance about training for police surgeons.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional funds he has made available to police forces to enable the early implementation of the recommendations of the report of the inquiry into child abuse in Cleveland in 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Chief officers have not sought additional funds specifically to deal with child abuse. It is up to them to decide on operational priorities and to allocate funds accordingly. Total police expenditure since the publication of the Cleveland report has risen from £3,643 million in 1988-89 to a projected £4,384 million in 1990-91.

Drink Driving

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines on sentencing he gives to magistrates about drink-drive offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Sentencing is a matter for the courts within their overall powers as laid down by legislation and in accordance with the guidance given by the Court of Appeal. I understand that the Magistrates Association is revising the guidelines on road traffic sentencing that it issues to its members.

Council of Europe

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the British Government's response to the decision of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on the case involving the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) and Ms. Patricia Hewitt.

Mr. Waddington: The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe has yet to adopt a resolution in this case. Until it does so, its decision remains confidential and I am unable to comment.

Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the report of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The advisory council's report "Problem Drug Use: A Review of Training" was published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. The Government welcome this report and are grateful to the council for its comprehensive study of training. If the Government's strategy for tackling drug misuse is to have the most impact, it is clearly important that all those whose work brings them into contact with problem drug users are properly trained. The training needs of teachers and others involved in prevention programmes must also be considered. The threat of the transmission of HIV infection, which gives rise to AIDS, through the sharing of injecting equipment, highlights the importance of ensuring that all who deal with the treatment or prevention of drug misuse have developed the right skills to deal with the problems.

The council's recommendations are directed at central and local government, health authorities, academic and professional bodies, the police and probation services and other health agencies including non-statutory drug services. The report will, therefore, be widely distributed. The Government will be responding to the report when it has had an opportunity to consider the recommendations fully.

Teletext

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters and other representations he has received concerning the continued provision of a teletext service.

Mr. Mellor: We have received a considerable number of representations on this subject. As my hon. Friend will be aware, I announced on 15 March that we intend to amend the Broadcasting Bill to guarantee the continuation of a commercial teletext service.

Green Goddess Vehicles (Maintenance)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of his Department's staff are involved in monitoring and checking the quality of servicing and maintenance carried out by TNT on Green Goddess vehicles;

(2) how many quality assurance and budgetary officers have been recruited to supervise the servicing and maintenance of the Green Goddess fleet by TNT;

(3) if he is satisfied with the quality and level of servicing and maintenance presently being carried out by TNT on the Green Goddess fleet.

Mr. John Patten: Arrangements are currently in hand for recruiting two quality assurance and budgetary officers. In the meantime, the servicing and maintenance of the Green Goddess fleet by TNT is being overseen by a Home Office official on site to ensure that the work is being carried out to an acceptable level.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is (a) the current cost of the TNT contract for servicing the Green Goddess fire appliances and (b) the original agreed contract price;

(2) what is the value of contracts entered into by his Department with (a) TNT plc and (b) C. Walton Ltd. of Bruntingthorpe airfield.

Mr. John Patten: Formal contracts are still under negotiation and it is unlikely that they will be signed until planning permission has been received for the construction of a purpose-built storage facility at Bruntingthorpe airfield. In the meantime, interim arrangements entered into with TNT plc and C. Walton Ltd. for storing and servicing the Green Goddess fire appliances have been given effect through restricted instructions which are limited in both time and value. The details of these arrangements must, necessarily, remain commercially confidential.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long he intends to retain the present level of servicing and maintenance of the fleet of emergency fire service vehicles and equipment.

Mr. John Patten: The current level for servicing and maintaining the fleet of emergency fire service vehicles and equipment will continue for as long as is considered necessary. The proposed contract, which will ensure the maintenance of the fleet to current in-house standards, will be for an initial period of five years with an option for a further period of five years to run consecutively.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the in-house tender price for the contract to service the Green Goddess fire appliance fleet.

Mr. John Patten: In accordance with Treasury guidelines the in-house organisation did not tender for the contract to service the Green Goddess fire appliance fleet, but provided estimates of costs and service levels as the base line against which the commercial tenders were to be compared and contrasted.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the extra cost in building, land and plant incurred by his Department as a result of putting the servicing of Green Goddess fire appliances out to private tender;

(2) what extra facilities his Department is supplying in terms of land, buildings and plant to TNT to enable it to carry out the servicing of the Green Goddess fire appliance fleet.

Mr. John Patten: Under the proposed contracts for servicing the Green Goddess fire appliances all necessary buildings and land are to be supplied by the contractors. Minor items of plant, which formed part of the Green Goddess fleet and were used to service the appliances, have been made available to TNT.

Drugs

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department following the introduction of confiscation of assets following conviction of drug offences, what is the total amount so far confiscated, and what this money has been used for.

Mr. John Patten: The latest figures, which are in respect of confiscation orders made in 1987 and 1988, are given in table 7.25 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales, 1988," a copy of which is in the Library. These show that over £9 million were ordered to be confiscated in those two years. The current estimate by the national drugs intelligence unit of the cumulative total of confiscation orders made since the Drug Trafficking Offences Act came into force in January 1987 is in excess of £16 million.

Under present public accounting arrangements confiscated money is treated in the same way as fine revenue, and paid directly into the Consolidated Fund from which Government expenditure generally—including substantial support for drug-related work—is financed. Ministers are considering the detailed arrangements whereby a proportion of the sums confiscated from drug traffickers as a result of international agreements might be used directly to strengthen the United Kingdom's enforcement and other efforts to curb drug misuse.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the costs of national emergency planning provision in Great Britain; and what information he has on comparable costs in (a) France, (b) Germany, (c) Italy, (d) Holland, (e) Belgium and (f) Denmark;

(2) what is the total annual cost of national emergency planning in Great Britain excluding provision for military nuclear disaster;

(3) what is the total annual cost of national emergency planning provision in Great Britain;

(4) what are the costs per head of population of national emergency planning provision in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on comparable costs per head of population in other EEC states.

Mr. John Patten: Expenditure on civil preparedness in the United Kingdom in 1990-91 is estimated at £128,837,000. No figure for total expenditure by central and local Government on emergencies in peacetime is available. Nor are comparable figures for other EC countries.

Assuming a population of 57 million, the cost per head of the civil preparedness programme in 1990-91 is estimated as £2·26.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total cost of emergency planning in the Greater London area excluding provision for military nuclear disaster;

(2) what is the total cost of emergency planning provision in the Greater London area.

Mr. John Patten: Civil Defence approved expenditure for the London fire and civil defence authority in the financial year 1990-91 is £2·45 million. Planning for all emergencies in peacetime may be carried out by London boroughs at their own discretion under section 138 of the Local Government Act 1972.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage of black police officers currently serving in British police forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The most recent figures relate to January 1990 when 1,312 officers from ethnic minority communities were serving in police forces in England and Wales. This represents 1·04 per cent. of total strength compared, for example, to 273 officers or 0·24 per cent. of total strength in March 1980.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of probation officers are black.

Mr. John Patten: The results of a survey of probation officers carried out on 31 December 1987 were as follows:

	Per cent.
White	83·7
Afro-Caribbean	1·0
Asian	0·4
Other Black	0·6
Not recorded	14·4
	100

The proportion of ethnic minority recruits to the service is higher than the proportion in post: 13 per cent. of those sponsored by the Home Office in 1988 and 1989 to train as probation officers were from ethnic minority groups. We propose to introduce routine ethnic monitoring of all probation staff and caseloads shortly.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Equal Opportunities Commission letter suggesting amendments to the Sex Discrimination Act was received; and when he intends to reply to it.

Mr. John Patten: The EOC's formal proposals for amending the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 were received in March 1988. The Government are considering the commission's proposals, but we shall not be in a position to reply until we have been able to consider the results of the commission's review of the Equal Pay Act 1970 which we await in due course.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would the increase in the grant in aid to the Equal Opportunities Commission over the last six years have needed to be to have kept in line with inflation.

Mr. John Patten: The table sets out the information requested for the last six years and also gives details of the grant in aid the Equal Opportunities Commission will receive in 1990-91, subject to approval by Parliament.

Year	Equal opportunities commission's grain-in-aid (£)	Increase in EOC's grant-in-aid over the previous year (£)	Increase needed to keep pace with inflation[1] (£)
1984-85	3,387,000	219,000	157,450
1985-86	3,434,000	47,000	181,543
1986-87	3,538,000	104,000	116,756
1987-88	3,716,000	178,000	189,637
1988-89	3,810,000	94,000	264,580
1989-90	3,894,000	84,000	247,650
1990-91[2]	4,579,000	685,000	253,110

[1] Calculated using the GDP inflators.
[2] Subject to approval by Parliament.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lawyers the law and enforcement divisions of the Equal Opportunities Commission have.

Mr. John Patten: The Equal Opportunities Commission has four lawyers who provide a service to the commission as a whole.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers the Equal Opportunities Commission has to take cases to court directly; and how many they took last year.

Mr. John Patten: The Equal Opportunities Commission has powers to take cases to court directly under sections 71, 72 and 73 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975. In addition the commission is recognised as having locus to seek judicial review through its duty to work towards the elimination of discrimination.

In the 12 months from January to December 1989 the commission took proceedings in three cases under section 73 and one under section 72. It also applied for judicial review in one case.

International Crime Survey

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the telephone survey undertaken by his Department into crime levels in 14 countries; and if he will make a statement on the benefit which has been obtained from this survey.

Mr. John Patten: The cost to the Home Office of taking part in the international telephone survey in which 14 countries took part was about £33,000, of which one-third was for staff resources from the research and planning unit. Each country paid their own contribution to the survey.

The benefit of the survey is that it gives a comparable measure of the level of a number of offences across different countries—a measure which is independent of offences recorded by the police. It also offers information on other topics such as fear of crime, crime prevention habits, opinions about the police, and attitudes to sentencing.

Cocaine and Crack

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of seizures of cocaine, in the most recent years for which figures are available, was of cocaine entering the United Kingdom from member states of the European Community.

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of seizures of cocaine, in the most recent years for which figures are available, was of cocaine entering the United Kingdom from member states of the European Community.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 25 January 1990, c. 868-69]: I regret that incorrect information was provided for the percentage of seizures of cocaine by Customs in 1988 which were known to have originated from or arrived in the United Kingdom via other EC countries. The correct figures for that year are 31·5 per cent. by numbers of seizures (35·8 per cent. by weight), corresponding to 102 kg.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Serjeant at Arms Department

Ms. Walley: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many of the Officers of the House employed in the Serjeant at Arms Department are women; what measures are in hand to increase these numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The only Officers of the House in the Serjeant at Arms Department are the Serjeant at Arms, the Deputy Serjeant at Arms, the Assistant Serjeant at Arms, and the two Deputy Assistant Serjeant at Arms, all of whom are men. The House of Commons Commission is, however, an equal opportunities employer and women are encouraged to apply for vacancies when they occur, on the same basis as men.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to reduce the level of the poll tax in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The community charge is set by local authorities and not by the Government. The generous revenue settlement I provided for 1990-91 gave councils a realistic opportunity to budget for an average charge of £173. They chose instead to budget for expenditure increases which have resulted in an average charge of £232. Community charge payers, and particularly those on low and fixed incomes will expect local authorities in 1991-92 to budget in line with my plans and to achieve community charge levels commensurate with those plans.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what plans he has to introduce new legislation concerning the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government will review the operation of the community charge system. It is too early to say what changes might be made or whether legislation will be needed.

Afforestation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what area was approved for afforestation by (a) coniferous planting and (b) broadleaved planting for each county of Wales for each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Manor Lane Industrial Estate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to visit residents in Manor lane, Hawarden, to discuss plans concerning changes in the Manor lane industrial estate.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Eastern Europe

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to increase consular and commercial representation in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 5 March 1990 to a question on the same subject.

Since then, an additional three commercial posts have been created at embassies in eastern Europe. Consular and visa staffing levels are being monitored continuously. Reinforcement will be provided where necessary.

Staff Qualifications

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 7 who have each (a) arts, (b) science and (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants, (e) have post graduate qualifications in management and (f) who were educated in (i) local authority and (ii) private schools.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Paul Ashwell

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations are being made to the Greek authorities regarding the detention of Mr. Paul Ashwell.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have made a number of representations to the Greek authorities on Mr. Ashwell's behalf. The Prime Minister spoke to the Greek Prime Minister about this in Dublin on 28 April. Her Majesty's Ambassador at Athens has an appointment to see the Greek Minister of Justice on 2 May 1990. We shall continue to follow the case closely and keep under review the possibility of making further representations.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maude: The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 7 and 8 May. The Council will discuss follow up to the special meeting of the European Council in Dublin on 28 April, and prepare for the meeting which member states will hold later in May with the European Parliament on the IGC. The Commission is expected to present views on the institutional aspects of EMU. The Council will discuss the Commission's communication on audiovisual policy, and their proposal for measures to encourage the development of the audiovisual industries (MEDIA) 1990-95. Ministers will discuss a draft negotiating mandate for a trade and co-operation agreement with Romania, and the Tempus programme for eastern Europe and the European training foundation both called for by the Strasbourg European Council. Ministers will also discuss visas for East and Central Europe, and may receive a Commission Statement on Asia and Latin America. Ministers may also discuss preparations for the negotiations with EFTA on a comprehensive EC/EFTA agreement to complete the European Economic Space. The Council will endorse the Community's position for the thirteenth meeting of the EC/Cyprus Association Council, which will take place in the margins. Also in the margins, Ministers will sign trade and cooperation agreements with Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and the GDR.

At the Internal Market Council on 14-15 May Ministers will discuss a number of measures relevant to completion of the single market, including the motor vehicle insurance directive, computer software, European company statute, pharmaceutical patents and the Third Motor Vehicle Liability Directive which contains further provisions on the level and content of compulsory insurance cover and on procedures for claiming from member states guarantee funds. Barriers to takeovers may also be discussed.

The Health Council will meet on 17 May. Ministers will consider maximum tar yields, the implementation of the Cancer programme and advertising of tobacco products. The Council will also discuss youth and health issues, the fight against AIDS and the use of medicinal products.

At the Culture Council on 18 May Ministers will discuss the circulation of national art treasures, training, the European City of Culture, and co-operation between Libraries on information. The Council is also expected to have a first discussion of cultural aspects of the Commission's communication on audiovisual policy and on the MEDIA programme 1991-95, and may discuss European artists residence.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 21 and 22 May and may discuss non-food uses of agricultural products, organic farming, beef balance sheets, foot and mouth disease, the veterinary fund, trade in live animals, poultry and hatching, and the trade in horses.

The Energy Council will meet on 21 May. Ministers are expected to adopt the resolution on transparency of prices and to reach agreement on gas and electricity transit. The Council will also discuss notification of investments, energy and the environment, Thermie, and the registration of crude oil imports.

At the Industry Council on 28 May the Commission will submit proposals for a replacement for the Council Directive of 28 January 1987 on aid to shipbuilding which expires at the end of this year. Ministers will discuss the impact of developments in eastern Europe on the shipbuilding industry in the EEC. There is general concern about the effect that the state-owned eastern European shipyards could have on the Community market and the work in the OECD to eliminate subsidies. German unification and the absorption of an industry the size of the United Kingdom's into the Community have implications for the new directive. Ministers will be asked to consider a Commission communication on the Community's semi-conductors industry, which is expected to address the economic importance of the industry, as well as the respective roles of producers and users of semi-conductors. The Council is expected to endorse the recommendation for administrative simplification of SME's which has been amended to take into account some of the changes suggested by the European Parliament, in particular a number of issues concerning member states' domestic arrangements for assessing and minimalising the impact of regulations on business, especially SME's. Ministers may also hold a first discussion on industrial aspects of the Commission's communications on audiovisual policy.

The Social Affairs Council will meet on 29 May. In the field of health and safety the Council will discuss draft directives on exposure to biological agents, the manual handling of heavy loads, and visual display units. The Council is expected to consider resolutions on long-term unemployment, racism and xenophobia, and on the protection of the dignity of women and men at work. Action programmes on continuing training and on the elderly are also likely to be discussed.

The Development Council will meet on 29 May when Ministers will adopt conclusions arising from a Commission paper on environment and development and conclusions on the development aspects of the conservation of tropical forests. The Council may consider a Commission paper on cooperation with the developing countries of Asia and Latin America in the 1990's, and will adopt conclusions on the integration of food aid with other forms of development assistance and multiannual programming, and conclusions on a Commission work programme for the integration of women into the development process. Ministers will also approve conclusions arising from a Commission paper on evaluation of development cooperation.

At the Education Council on 31 May Ministers will be invited to adopt a draft resolution on the integration of children and young people with disabilities into mainstream educational institutions. They will also be invited to agree conclusions on equality of educational opportunity in the initial and in-service training of teachers; meetings of senior officials in the education sector; and on the preparation of a new convention for European schools. There will be discussions about distance education and training and education for enterprise.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role was played by the trade section of the British embassy in Baghdad in securing the contract cover for the seized equipment, destined for Iraq.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 25 April]: In the light of the arrest of an individual on 25 April, and in the light of the continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be wrong to comment further on these matters.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Office of Technology Assessment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what contacts his Department has had with the Netherlands Office of Technology Assessment in the Hague.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has not had any official contact with the Netherlands Office of Technology Assessment.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have now been given grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has so far approved 37 of the 48 proposals for grant-maintained status which have reached him for decision.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the provision of education for those with special needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Representations have been received recently on a range of subjects relating to the provision of education for those with special educational needs. In particular, representations continue to be received in respect of the Department's draft circular "Staffing for pupils with special educational needs" and on in-service training for teachers specialising in special needs subject areas. The closing date for comments on the circular is 27 July 1990. My right hon. Friend set out in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire South-East (Mr. Paice) on 18 April, Official Report, column 850 the funds available for the training of teachers in special needs areas.

School Discipline

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a further statement on the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools.

Mr. MacGregor: When the committee's report was published in March last year, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced immediately his acceptance in principle of a number of its recommendations. I am now able to report the following developments:

1. The management of pupil behaviour has been designated a national priority area under the local education authority training grants scheme with £1·7 million of expenditure being supported in 1990-91.
2. Two new education support grant categories, to improve support services in respect of difficult pupils and to raise attendance levels in designated schools, were introduced on 1 April. In both categories, expenditure of around £2·5 million is being supported in 1990-91.
3. My Department has introduced a national exclusions reporting system for a two-year period from the beginning of the summer term this year. Heads, governors and local education authorities, as appropriate, are being asked to provide information on the background to cases of permanent exclusion from LEA-maintained primary, secondary and special schools and from grant-maintained schools. Individual pupils will not be identified. In the light of the information provided we shall be deciding on the future of the existing statutory provisions on exclusion.
4. The criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training which I published last November give practical effect to the committee's recommendations that such courses include specific training in group management, and that lecturers providing training in teaching skills should regularly update their classroom experience.

The Government have also considered, as the committee recommended, whether legislation should be introduced in respect of the legal basis of teachers' authority and of parental liability for their children's civil wrongs committed while in school. We have concluded, after very careful examination of the issues, that legislative action would not be appropriate in either case.

The Government have now completed their consideration of the report. Its publication, and its circulation by my Department to local education authorities and all maintained schools, have a most useful and important impact on discussion and action by the education service in a difficult area. For its part, and apart from the specific measures my predecessor and I have announced, the Government will continue to take careful account of the committee's advice and recommendations as they develop their education policies, particularly in respect of the implementation of the national curriculum.

SCOTLAND

COSLA

16. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the president of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Rifkind: With my hon. Friend the Minister for Home Affairs and the Environment, I met the president and other senior office-bearers of the convention on 6 April. This was the first of this year's meetings to discuss Government support for local authority current expenditure in 1991-92.

Local Government Finance

17. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people he expects to qualify for ex-gratia poll tax rebates covering the year 1989-90 under his recently announced scheme for such payments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I expect between 15,000 and 20,000 people to qualify for special payments under the scheme.

18. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has had on the subject of the community charge in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend continues to receive a number of representations on different aspects of the community charge.

25. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to bring forward any changes to the poll tax legislation in the present Session.

29. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to bring forward any changes to the poll tax legislation in the present Session.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend keeps all aspects of the community charge arrangements under review. He has made it clear that he is prepared to make changes if they are required.

41. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the highest and lowest community charge in Scotland in 1990-91; and what were the comparable charges for 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The highest and lowest community charges in Scotland in 1990-91, at taxpayer level, excluding the community water charge, are £419 and £87·26. Corresponding figures for 1989-90 are £374 and £100·60.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a list of numbers of Statutory Instruments issued under the Abolition of Domestic Rates (Scotland) Act 1987, the dates on which these came into force and the dates on which any Statutory Instrument referred to above ceased to be in force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Homelessness

19. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current estimates of homelessness in Scotland; what steps he proposes to take to reduce homelessness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: During 1988-89 local authorities assessed 9,300 households as being homeless and 5,850 as being threatened with homelessness. Local authorities have a good record in finding accommodation for homeless applicants.

EC Regional Fund

20. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he takes to ensure that in regard to European Community regional fund projects in Scotland the additionality rule is applied.

Mr. Lang: The Government ensure compliance with requirements on additionality in the relevant European structural fund regulation throughout the United Kingdom.

Lothian Council Staff (Self-defence Courses)

21. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was his advice to Lothian regional council before that council introduced the offer of self-defence courses in certain martial arts for council employees who have to deal directly with the public in matters affecting the poll-tax; if he will specify which forms of karate were considered; what payments he will offer the council; what lists he has received of cases in which officials have been threatened with violence; what consultation he has had with relevant trade unions on the matter; and what figures of poll-tax-related assault he has received from Sir William Sutherland QPM.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is entirely a matter for Lothian regional council and my right hon. and learned Friend has neither offered advice nor sought consultation with the trade unions. I understand, however, that the question of self-defence training for certain staff is still under consideration by the council and is not confined to staff dealing with the community charge. Any costs involved would need to be met in the normal way from the resources available to the authority. We have received no lists of cases where officials in Lothian region have been threatened with violence nor have we received from Sir William Sutherland any figures relating to the kind of assault described.

Scottish TUC

23. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he received an invitation to address the annual conference of the Scottish Trades Union Congress.

Mr. Lang: No, Sir.

36. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish Trades Union Congress: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 20 December 1989.

Councillors (Allowances)

24. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in determining a new scheme for local authority councillors' allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In a paper issued on 19 December 1989, the Government put proposals for a revised scheme of councillors' allowances to the local authority associations for comment. My right hon. and learned Friend subsequently met COSLA on 9 February when he stressed his willingness to be flexible on the distribution of the Scottish quantum and to consider alternatives for the definition of approved duties. Comments and views have been received from a number of interested parties. These are being carefully considered and my right hon. and learned Friend expects to announce his decisions shortly. The intention is that the revised scheme should operate from 1 July 1990.

Speech Impediments

26. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy for the provision of educational facilities for children with speech impediments.

Mr. Lang: Education authorities are statutorily required to make appropriate educational provision for all children of school age in their area. This will include provision for special educational needs, such as those of children who have difficulties with speech.

National Health Service Trusts

27. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from hospitals in the Ayrshire and Arran area regarding opting out.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An expression of interest in self-governing status has recently been made on behalf of the South Ayrshire unit comprising the hospitals at Ayr and Ballochmyle.

A1

28. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in setting up arrangements between his Department and highway authorities to discuss the future of the A1 beyond the proposals in the roads south of Edinburgh study.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Representatives from the roads departments of Lothian and Borders regional councils, and of Northumberland county council, will be invited to join with officials from my Department and the Department of Transport to form the A1 steering group described in our "Routes South of Edinburgh: Report on Public Consultation and the Government's Decisions", copies of which are in the Library. Detailed terms of reference for the group are currently being drafted by my Department in liaison with the Department of Transport.

Primary Schools (Testing)

30. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to review his plans to introduce testing in Scottish primary schools.

Mr. Lang: No, Sir. It remains the intention to test performance in English and mathematics at P4 and P7, and information about piloting will be issued shortly.

Offensive Weapons

31. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to make it an offence to sell or supply knives and other offensive weapons to young persons under 16 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The sale or hire of flick knives and gravity knives is an offence under the Restriction of Offensive Weapons Act 1959. The sale or hire of a further range of spiked, bladed and other offensive weapons specified in the Offensive Weapons Order 1988 is an offence under the Criminal Justice Act 1988. These provisions apply irrespective of the age of the buyer, and my right hon. and learned Friend sees no need for further legislation.

Steel Industry

32. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to meet trade union representatives of the work force in the Scottish steel industry.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of the Ravenscraig work force last November. I met representatives of the Clydesdale work force in January and will be meeting representatives of the Dalzell work force in the near future.

50. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet British Steel to discuss investment in Scottish steel plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to meet the chairman of British Steel in the relatively near future to discuss matters of current interest concerning the Scottish steel plants, including the company's investment strategy. At the end of the day, investment decisions are a matter for the commercial judgment of British Steel, in the light of their assessment of market conditions. However, it is clearly important that the company should be in a position to consider carefully all the options, including that of investment in Scotland, before reaching their decisions.

Childhood Immunisation

33. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for improving the uptake of childhood immunisations against infectious diseases.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I announced on 26 April an accelerated schedule for childhood immunisation against diphtheria, tetanus, whooping cough and poliomyelitis. The new schedule, which will be introduced on 1 October 1990, provides for the course of immunisation against these diseases to be carried out between two months and six months of age as compared with three months and 11 months at present. The shortened programme, to which appropriate publicity will be given, is expected to lead to higher uptake levels.

Violent Crime

34. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of violent crimes reported in Scotland each year since 1979 where firearms were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 5 April.

Nirex

35. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the nuclear industry radioactive waste executive; and what matters were discussed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and the Secretary of State for the Environment met the then chairman and senior officials of the Executive on 15 March 1989 to discuss its report on sites for investigation for the deep disposal of low and intermediate level radioactive wastes.

Fishing Industry

37. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding the fishing industry on the west coast of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government issued a consultation document on 28 March which discussed a range of additional conservation measures that might be taken in the waters off the west coast of Scotland. Some replies have been received and others are awaited. In addition, my noble Friend the Minister of State met a delegation on 24 April to discuss these issues.

44. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the current situation facing the Scottish fishing fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A variety of representations have been received. In addition my right hon. and learned Friend met the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on 7 February and will be doing so again very soon. We are continuing to monitor the situation of the industry very carefully. It remains the case that reductions in landings are being substantially offset by increases in prices. Up to the end of March landings by United Kingdom vessels into Scotland of cod, haddock, whiting and saithe have declined by 28 per cent. compared with the same period in 1989, but the value of these landings in that period has declined by only 3 per cent. in cash terms. The total value of all landings into Scotland in the first three months of this year has declined by only 1 per cent. in cash terms compared with the same period last year.

51. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representation he has received on the proposals for the fishing industry for aggregation of capacity and for transferable quotas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The consultation paper on capacity aggregation, which was issued last November, elicited a wide range of responses from the industry. The Government recently announced their intention to proceed with the capacity aggregation proposals. We will, of course, monitor their operation carefully.

The Government are interested in considering individual transferable quotas, but any proposals it may develop will be the subject of full consultation with the industry.

Private Landlords

38. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the proportion of landlords in the private sector in Scotland who reduced combined rent and rate bills in 1989-90 to take account of the abolition of domestic rates.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No information is available centrally.

Apprenticeships

39. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to find more apprenticeship places for young people in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The provision of apprenticeships is a matter for industry and in particular for industry lead training bodies such as the construction industry training board. In recent years the number of apprenticeships based on time serving has decreased as industry has moved towards flexible training systems for young people. Such schemes operate in conjunction with youth training and are based on the achievement of standards of competence. This shift of emphasis is welcome as it encourages the rapid attainment of skills by trainees.

Poverty (Church Report)

40. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the Moderator of the Church of Scotland to discuss the report from the church and nation committee of the Church of Scotland entitled, "Scotland's Poor—a challenge to Kirk"; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend at present has no plans to do so.

Greater Glasgow Health Board (Takare Contract)

42. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when Greater Glasgow health board will release details of the Takare contract to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that Greater Glasgow health board will provide further details to the hon. Member shortly.

Pre-school Education

43. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any fresh proposals to increase pre-five education in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: It is for education authorities themselves to determine the level of provision they wish to make in their area for the education of children under five, having regard to available resources, local circumstances and competing priorities.

Health Services (Glasgow)

45. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of Greater Glasgow health board to discuss health services in Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend met Greater Glasgow health board representatives in March 1989, when he opened a new 90-bed unit at Woodilee hospital. I regularly meet health board chairmen to discuss a variety of topics.

Health Spending

46. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated expenditure by each health board in Scotland in 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards are expected to contain their expenditure within the amounts allocated to them at the beginning of each financial year. The amounts allocated to each health board in Scotland in 1990-91 for gross revenue and capital expenditure are as follows:

Health board	£ million[1]
Argyll and Clyde	150·284
Ayrshire and Arran	135·563
Borders	34·965
Dumfries and Galloway	56·547
Fife	111·210
Forth Valley	103·695
Grampian	198·975
Greater Glasgow	535·870
Highland	83·173
Lanarkshire	178·255
Lothian	341·482
Orkney	6·528
Shetland	8·788
Tayside	198·227
Western Isles	19·153

[1] These figures do not include allocations for systems implementation, computers and breast cancer screening services totalling £29·376 million which have still to be notified to Boards.

Ayr Road Route

47. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the timetable for the construction of the Ayr road route (A77).

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Ayr road route is divided into two sections. That between the M77 and the City of Glasgow district boundary is a regional road scheme promoted by Strathclyde regional council. The remainder of the route to Malletsheugh is a trunk road and the responsibility of the Secretary of State.

A legal challenge has been made by Glasgow district council to the Secretary of State's decision on the regional road section. Prior to the challenge, that section was scheduled for a start during 1991 and it was hoped that the trunk road section would follow on in 1992 subject to the availability of funds and priorities at that time. Advance works for the regional road section, in areas not affected by the legal challenge, have already started.

Flood Damage

48. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he can give up-to-date details of assistance which has been given to landowners, farmers and householders whose property was damaged in the recent floods in north Tayside.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Twenty-six applications have been received from farmers in Tayside for special assistance for the repair of elevated floodbanks damaged in the recent floods. Engineering specifications have been drawn up for the 20 of these cases and returned to the applicants for them to obtain contractors' estimates. So far, only two applicants have submitted detailed costings.

As to other damage and losses sustained by landowners, farmers and householders, it has been the long-standing policy of successive Governments not to pay compensation for the effects of severe weather, particularly where risks are insurable.

Unemployment

49. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last discussed unemployment with the Scottish Trades Union Congress.

Mr. Rifkind: I met the general council of the Scottish Trades Union Congress on 10 November 1989 for a discussion of economic issues, including unemployment. I called attention to the sustained improvement in the Scottish economy in recent years which has seen unemployment fall to its lowest level since 1980.

Arts Provision

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to encourage other cities in Scotland to emulate Glasgow's emphasis on provision for the arts.

Mr. Lang: I am happy to acknowledge Glasgow's success in developing provision for the arts and in exploiting the valuable contribution made by the arts to the economic life in the city. Glasgow's achievement as this year's European city of culture shows what can be done when local authorities join forces with private and corporate sponsors.

Community Charge

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a Scottish university student registered for community charge at his or her parents home in Scotland, is also required to register and pay community charge during the period of attendance at university at the address of his or her accommodation in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A full-time student in Scotland is not required to pay the personal community charge at more than one address at the same time. He or she is regarded, for community charge purposes, as being resident, and therefore liable for the personal community charge at the reduced rate of 20 per cent. of the full charge, at his or her term-time address for the duration of his or her course, including vacations.

Forestry

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vehicles the Forestry Commission operates.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission is currently operating 1,859 of its own road vehicles and 230 leased road vehicles.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the area of forestry plantations in Scotland which has been killed by pine beauty moth or pine sawfly since 1986; and if he will list the names of the plantations affected, their size, their dates of planting and the dates of the attack leading to the plantation death in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Only two areas of forestry plantations of any size are known to have been killed by pine beauty moth or pine sawfly in Scotland since 1986. These were two hectares at Truderscaig which were planted in 1972-73 and attacked by pine beauty moth in 1987 and 1988, and 12 hectares at Poulary which were planted in 1967-68 and attacked by pine beauty moth in 1986. Both these areas are in Highland region.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names, locations and areas of any further forestry grant applications since his answer of 22 March 1989, Official Report, columns 660-61 in excess of 100 hectares for which the Forestry Commission has not requested an environmental assessment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the following table:

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the sites, locations and areas for which the Forestry Commission has requested environmental assessments under the Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988 since their introduction; and if he will state for each site whether an assessment has been presented, or is in progress, and whether the applications for forestry grant have been approved, withdrawn, refused or are still under consideration.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following table lists all those sites for which the Forestry Commission has requested an environmental statement.

[2] Only 242 hectares of this application were approved; the remainder was withdrawn.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names, locations and areas which are proposed by the Forestry Commission for aerial spraying with fenitrothion in 1990 to combat forest pests.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission is not expecting to carry out any aerial spraying with fenitrothion, or other insecticides, in 1990.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the current commissioners of the Forestry Commission was appointed to fulfil both the requirement under section two of the Forestry Act 1967 and section four of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Messrs Francis, Bradley, Foot, Woosnam and Strang-Steel fulfil the requirement under section 2 of the Forestry Act 1967 that at least three of the Forestry Commissioners must have special knowledge and experience of forestry; Messrs Francis, Bradley and Foot fulfil the requirement that at least one Commissioner must have scientific attainments and a technical knowledge of forestry, and Mr. Mallinson the requirement that at least one must have special knowledge and experience of the timber trade. Section 4 of the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985, which amended the Forestry Act 1967, places a duty on all the Commissioners to endeavour to achieve a reasonable balance between the needs of forestry and those of the environment.

Enterprise Companies (Complaints)

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the basis for his decision that complaints relating to Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise should not fall within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Mr. Lang: Bodies which operate in a predominantly commercial manner are excluded from the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. Both Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise fall into this category.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that people in Scotland who might be aggrieved at the manner in which a local enterprise company has dealt with its affairs will have the same avenues of redress available to them as people in England and Wales who have similar grievances in respect of alleged maladministration by training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Lang: Local enterprise companies will be obliged by the terms of their contracts to operate a complaints procedure, under which an individual with a complaint can be assured that his or her case will be considered by the chief executive of the local enterprise company, and if necessary by the chairman. This obligation is no less than that which will operate in England and Wales.

RENAVAL

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he expects the allocation of grants available to Strathclyde region under the European Community's RENAVAL programme to be fully utilised;

(2) if he will list the local authorities and other public bodies involved in submitting applications for financial assistance under the European Community's RENAVAL programme in Strathclyde region.

Mr. Lang: A decision is still awaited from the European Commission on the Government's bid to establish Strathclyde's eligibility under RENAVAL. There are therefore no Strathclyde authorities as yet involved in submitting applications for financial assistance under RENAVAL, and no grants available.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will bring forward legislation to allow crofters access to the farm woodland scheme through planting on common grazings.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is awaiting confirmation that legislation which would allow crofters to participate in the planting of commercial woodlands on common grazings would be acceptable to all crofting interests. It is not possible to say when such legislation might be introduced.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of hospitals closed in Scotland in the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 1980, 42 hospitals have been closed in Scotland. During the same period 62 major new hospital projects have been completed.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the way the mental health services are operating in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Mental health services in Scotland are designed to ensure that people with mental illness receive appropriate treatment either as in-patients or increasingly as out-patients or through a wide range of services in the community. The recommendations of the SHARPEN report, which the Government have endorsed, accord a high priority to care in the community whenever appropriate for people who are mentally ill. The proposals set out in the White Paper "Caring for People: Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond" will bring further improvements in community care services for people with mental illness.

Road Deaths

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of road fatalities since 1 October 1989 and for each year from 1980 to 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer Monday 30 April 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Number of road fatalities in Scotland

Year	Number
1980	700
1981	677
1982	701
1983	624
1984	599

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Kryptrons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what protective rules exist to cover the export from the United Kingdom of kryptrons.

Mr. Redwood: Kryptrons are subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989. A licence is required to export such goods to any destination if the performance parameters are within the scope of entry IL 1542 (b) of group 3 of the order.

Staff Qualifications

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the number and percentages of his staff in grades one to seven who have (a) arts and (b) science and technical degrees, who (c) are qualified accountants or (d) have post-graduate qualifications in management and who were educated in (e) local authority and (f) private schools.

Mr. Forth: The information is as follows:

The numbers and percentages of Department of Trade and Industry staff in grades 1 to 7 with either graduate or post-graduate level qualifications as shown on the Department's personnel computer system, and by the subject groups in which this information is recorded there, are as follows:

Only one member of Department of Trade and Industry staff in grades 1 to 7—a grade 7—is shown on the Department's personnel computer system as having a post-graduate qualification in management. This represents 0·10 per cent. of grade 7 staff.

The Department does not record details of the schools attended by its staff on its personnel computer system. Information on the types of schools attended by staff in grades 1 to 7 could, therefore, only be made available at disproportionate cost.

The numbers and percentages of Department of Trade and Industry staff in grades 1 to 7, who are shown on the Department's personnel computer system as being qualified accountants, are as follows:

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many firms have received grant assistance, and at what average percentage level, under the quality initiative of the enterprise initiative in Scotland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

As at 13 April 1990, 249 firms in Scotland had completed consultancy projects under the quality initiative, for which DTI assistance amounted to 65 per cent. of project costs on average.

Cars

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cars were exported to the European Economic Community and imported from the European Economic Community in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; what was the balance of trade figure; and what were the comparable figures in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 April 1990]: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom trade with EC: passenger cars (SITC 781)

DEFENCE

Nuclear Warhead Testing

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reasons underpinned the decision not to include United Kingdom—United States collaboration on nuclear warhead testing in Nevada in table 2, page 35, of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990, volume 1.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The table lists projects related to the joint development or procurement of equipment. British nuclear warheads are developed and manufactured nationally.

Ballistic Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence there is that any country outside the acknowledged nuclear weapons states has developed a nuclear capable re-entry vehicle for use with a ballistic missile system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Any country which acquires or develops a ballistic missile for military purposes will also require as part of the missile package a means of delivering its payload. Whether or not this comprises a re-entry vehicle capable of carrying a nuclear warhead will depend on its range and payload.

For an assessment of countries known or believed to have deployed ballistic missiles I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. MacDonald) on 22 January 1990. We cannot comment on the capabilities of all of these missiles.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Trident ballistic missile system falls within the remit of ballistic missiles covered by the missile technology control regime outlined on page 13 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990, volume 6.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Trident D5 missile system falls within the range and payload parameters covered by the missile technology control regime. However, as the United Kingdom is an existing nuclear weapon state, our acquisition of the Trident system is not inconsistent with the MTCR's aim of preventing ballistic missile proliferation.

Research and Development

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are currently employed, respectively, in the royal aerospace establishment's propulsion department, the Admiralty research department, the royal armament research and development establishment and the royal signals and radar establishment; and what changes in (a) total and (b) sectional employment is expected when the defence research agency replaces these establishments in 1991.

Mr. Neubert: As at 1 April 1990 the staff employed at the establishments named were as follows:

	Staff
Royal Aerospace Establishment	4,878
Admiralty Research Establishment	2,898
Royal Armament Research and Development Establishment	2,365
Royal Signals and Radar Establishment	1,593

It is not our policy to publish figures for individual departments.

Future staffing levels will depend on the development of the defence research agency's business.

Radiation

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on radiation dose exposures for refit workers involved in the United States nuclear propulsion programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Based on information available from the United States, the shipyard work force performing USN nuclear propulsion work during 1989 and involving occupational exposure to ionising radiation, consisted of 24,422 workers. These workers received a total occupational exposure of 29·41 sieverts.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what radiation dose records for submarine refit workers at royal dockyards were computerised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Radiation dose records for employees at the royal dockyards were computerised at the army pay and record centre, RAPC Worthy Down on 1 January 1979. On 1 November 1984 they were transferred to the defence radiological protection service at Gosport.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total occupational, whole body equivalent, radiation exposure of each individual worker employed in Royal Navy dockyards in the United Kingdom, in milliSieverts, for each year since the onset of the naval nuclear propulsion programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: It is not considered appropriate to present this detailed personal information to the House. Individual dose records are available to the individuals themselves on request.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women involved in submarine refit operations have received radiation dose exposures greater than 13 mSv in any consecutive three month interval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pregnant women employed at Royal Navy dockyards have received radiation doses of, or greater than, 10 mSv during their declared term of pregnancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy dockyard personnel involved in submarine refit and associated work involving exposure to ionising radiations are women of child-bearing age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: There are a total of 31 women, including contractors' personnel, employed in submarine refit and associated work involving exposure to ionising radiations. It is assumed that all women are of reproductive capacity as described in the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what register of pregnant women employed at the Royal Navy dockyards is kept in respect of ionising radiation dosage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: None. Legislation does not require such registers to be maintained. However, local administrative procedures at each royal dockyard are such as to ensure that women do not exceed the limits specified in parts IV and V to schedule 1 of the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown for Rosyth dockyard of annual individual radiation exposure for workers in the bands of (a) 0 to 10, (b) 10 to 20, (c) 20 to 30, (d) 30 to 40, (e) greater than 50, (f) greater than 70 and (g) greater than 100 milliSieverts for all years since the onset of nuclear work.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 26 April 1990]: A breakdown of annual individual radiation does for Rosyth dockyard workers for each of the years 1979-89 is given in the table. The figures shown in brackets are the number of additional employees monitored for exposure to ionising radiation by the local issue of direct reading dosimeters while employed under a written system of work. A more detailed or alternative breakdown of the figures and data for years earlier than 1979 can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Warsaw Pact

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the source for the figures for Warsaw pact main battle tank production produced in figure 3, page 11, of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990, volume 1.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures for Warsaw pact main battle tank production are provided by the defence intelligence staff whose responsibilities include the assessment of Warsaw pact arms production levels.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the source of his information on the Warsaw pact nuclear forces at the end of 1989, if figure 5, page 15, of the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1990, volume 1; and how he assesses the reliability of the data reproduced in figure 5.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the Warsaw pact countries do not publish comprehensive information on all the forces covered by the figure in question, it is compiled from a variety of material, ranging from published data to information supplied by the defence intelligence staff. The data are considered to be the most reliable that can be presented within existing constraints.

French Defence Minister

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what matters were discussed during his recent meeting with his counterpart in Paris.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A range of defence questions were discussed including future European security, arms control, and extended co-operation between the United Kingdom and France on procurement and wider defence activities.

War Widows

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the war cemeteries and the countries in which they are located, to which visits have been arranged for war widows under the war widows pilgrimages scheme since the scheme's inception.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the steps that have been taken by his Department to assist war widows since May 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In October 1984 a scheme was announced under which financial assistance would be provided to enable war widows to visit their deceased husband's grave overseas. The first visits under the scheme took place in April 1985, and the first main pilgrimage began on 8 May 1985.

In December 1989 it was announced that new special payments of £40 per week would be made to pre-1973 war widows. These payments began in April 1990.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of the Government's financial contribution to the war widows pilgrimages scheme since the scheme's inception.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal British Legion pilgrimages department administers the war widows pilgrimages scheme on our behalf and receives funding through an annual grant in aid paid in quarterly instalments. The annual grants in each year since the scheme's inception have been as follows:

1985-86	157,000
1986-87	187,000
1987-88	207,000
1988-89	167,000
1989-90	101,000

The amount to be paid during 1990-91 will total £196,000.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many war widows and members of their families have received financial help from the Government to visit war cemeteries under the war widows pilgrimages scheme in each year since the scheme's inception.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Government funding is provided only for war widows' visits. The following numbers of war widows have received assistance under the scheme:

	War widows
1985	376
1986	467
1987	396
1988	216
1989	205

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 25 April, Official Report, column 210, what was the general nature of the two telephone conversations that took place between Walter Somers Limited and a Ministry of Defence metallurgical expert in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the light of the charges laid against an individual recently and in the light of continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications have taken place between his Department and the firms (a) Matrix Churchill, (b) Technology and Development Group and (c) TMG Engineering regarding the sale of equipment to Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Space Research Corporation

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the activities of the Space Research Corporation that relate to the actual or possible export of non-lethal defence equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the light of the charges laid against an individual recently and in the light of continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate to give any further information.

Iraq (Long-range Gun)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied that no military equipment, munitions or materials supplied under any agreement with Jordan, other than the experimental propellant for Iraq's long-range gun programme dispatched as a consignment of chocolates for Jordan, has been dispatched to or reached Iraq under false documentation.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have no knowledge of false documentation in connection with the export of chocolates, or of anything else.

Iraq Defence Industry

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the state of development of the Iraqi defence industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Iraq is actively engaged in establishing a large industrial infrastructure to support the development of its arms industries. It is pursuing a wide-ranging missile and space programme; it also produces a range of ammunition and small arms and is developing the capacity to produce more sophisticated ground forces equipment.

Defence Equipment (Exports)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment his Department has made of the activities of the company TMG Engineering that relate to the actual or possible export of non-lethal defence equipment;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the activities of the company Matrix Churchill that relate to the actual or possible export of non-lethal defence equipment;

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the activities of the company Technology and Development Group that relate to the actual or possible export of non-lethal defence equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department plays its part in assisting checks on commercial firms as appropriate. It would not be right to go into any further specific detail.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his Department distinguishes between lethal and non-lethal defence equipment for policy purposes.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department interprets lethal equipment as covering military equipment designed to kill.

Jordan Defence Packages

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the credit made available under the Jordan defence packages of 1985 and 1986 was taken up by the Jordanian Government to buy British-manufactured equipment and material solely for Jordan's own defence needs.

Mr. Alan Clark: Virtually all the credit made available under the Jordan defence packages of 1986 and 1987 has been committed. All the contracts involved are on behalf of the Jordanian armed forces.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the protocol 3 deal between International Military Services Ltd. and the Government of Iraq to supply a military field hospital was not completed; and if he will give details of protocols 1 and 2.

Mr. Alan Clark: I understand the Iraqi Government decided not to proceed with an inquiry for equipment for military hospitals. The protocols referred to are between the Government of Iraq and Her Majesty's Government. They are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. However, I can confirm that financial protocols 1 and 2 involved the provision of credit facilities of £275 million and £300 million respectively.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, further to the supply of the propellant for the Iraqi long-range gun programme, Astra plc has been a supplier to foreign countries through International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Alan Clark: International Military Services Ltd. is a commercial company which is wholly owned by the Ministry of Defence. In its work with many foreign countries it uses the services of a large number of subcontractors including Astra Holdings plc. It is not the practice to comment upon specific defence sales.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chicken Breeders

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to alleviate the fears of small chicken breeders and hatcheries regarding the impact on their business of the fees levied under the Poultry Flocks, Hatcheries and Processed Animal Protein (Fees) Order 1990.

Mr. Maclean: I have agreed to delay the introduction of charges for the registration of poultry breeding flocks and hatcheries until 1 June 1990. Existing units registered before that date will, therefore, not be charged for their initial registration. I have also sought to minimise the impact on small units by relating the fees for the taking or supervision of taking of samples to the time spent. This will mean that the costs to the producer are generally proportionate to the size of the enterprise.

Pesticide Residues

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the level of pesticide residues on foodstuffs imported from Cyprus; and whether he has recently altered the level of monitoring of maximum residue levels on such imports.

Mr. Maclean: The Government continue to monitor Cypriot produce as a part of its regular surveillance programme for pesticide residues. The republic of Cyprus also provides us with the results of its own monitoring. Press reports earlier this year referred mainly to levels of residues on Cypriot strawberries, but none were imported by the United Kingdom in 1988 or 1989.

Veterinary Products Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what requirements exist for the disclosure of interests of members of the Veterinary Products Committee.

Mr. Maclean: Members of the Veterinary Products Committee comply with a code of conduct on the declaration of interests. The code and the interests declared in accordance with it are included in the VPC annual report which is published and laid before Parliament.

Meat and Livestock Commission

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the role of the Meat and Livestock Commission in giving guidance, advice and publicity to its produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Under the Agriculture Act 1967, the Meat and Livestock Commission has a general duty to promote greater efficiency in the livestock and livestock products industries in Great Britain. It raises a levy to fund its general expenses including generic marketing and promotion: a species promotion levy funds its promotion of the merits of individual meats. In addition, the commission increasingly provides advice and guidance on a commercial fee-paying basis. In particular, the commission offers advice to all sectors of the industry on the achievement and maintenance of a high-quality product and on the export of meat and meat products to other countries.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to bring forward the latest topping date on set-aside land to 1 August of each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are considering whether there is a case for any change in the set-aside rules, including those relating to the management of land set-aside to fallow. An announcement will be made shortly.

Foot and Mouth Disease

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available to him from international sources concerning the incidence of foot and mouth disease in each of the countries of Eastern Europe.

Mr. Maclean: According to the information available from the Food and Agricultural Organisation and the Office International des Epizooties the last recorded outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the countries of eastern Europe are as follows:

Yugoslavia 1978
USSR 1990[1]
Romania 1973
Poland 1971
Hungary 1973
German Democratic Republic 1982
Czechoslovakia 1975
Bulgaria 1973

Employment Opportunities

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department are taking to aid employment opportunities in the north-east of England.

Mr. Gummer: As announced yesterday, Ministers have approved in principle the intervention board's proposal that a third of the agency's functions, consisting of its external trade work and administrative support, should be relocated in Newcastle, in order to relieve its staff shortages in Reading. About 350 posts will be transferred. In deciding upon Newcastle, where the agency already has facilities, Ministers and the agency were satisfied that there are good recruitment and career prospects, and that satisfactory office accommodation, housing communications and other facilities are available. Subject to the necessary resources being available, the transfer of work will begin as soon as accommodation can be obtained and be made ready and essential data links installed. After a suitable period at this new site, the agency's experience there will be reviewed and further report made to Ministers.

Dimethoate

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the impact of dimethoate on wildlife; whether this pesticide has been reviewed; and whether he has any proposals to reduce its application.

Mr. Maclean: No formal representations have been received about dimethoate. However, the environmental panel of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides is aware of concern by the Game Conservancy Trust and beekeepers, and is keeping a close watch on the use of dimethoate on field crops.

The Government monitor incidents involving pesticides and honeybees; in 1988, 22 out of 60 such incidents were linked to dimethoate; in 1989 the figures were 15 out of 59.

Last year the ACP reviewed the use of dimethoate on protected lettuce. As a result, the conditions of approval were amended with effect from 1 April 1990 to restrict application to one per crop and to increase the minimum period between application and havest from seven days to four weeks.

TRANSPORT

Vehicles

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the number of private and commercial vehicles expected to be on the roads in 1990, 1995 and 1999.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's low and high forecasts of the number of privately and commercially owned cars on the road are:

	Million
[1]1990	19·9-20·0
1995	22·1-23·1
1999	23·7-25·5

[1] Average for year.

Forecasts are not made for other vehicle types.

Balloon Flights

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the carriage of passengers by hot air balloons is a recognised method of carriage as defined and regulated by the Civil Aviation Authority in schedule 1 to the Air Navigation Order 20, November 1989, pursuant to the Civil Aviation Act 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Hot air balloons are classified in schedule 1 to the Air Navigation Order as a sub-group of aircraft, so they may be registered in the United Kingdom and flown for purposes specified under the order, including the carriage of passengers.

To carry fare-paying passengers (other than in circumstances defined in the order as being private flights) a balloon must be certificated by the Civil Aviation Authority in the transport category (passenger) as set out in schedule 3 to the order, the operator must hold an air operator's certificate and the pilot must hold a valid professional balloon pilot's licence.

There are currently 43 hot air balloons certificated in the transport category (passenger) in the United Kingdom, and 27 air operator's certificates have been granted.

A6(M) Stockport Bypass

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consider using the money saved by providing fewer than eight lanes for the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass to lower the motorway alignment.

Mr. Atkins: The proposed motorway for much of its length would be significantly lower than the adjacent ground level. A further lowering of the alignment could not be justified. It would require more land, increase considerably the amount of surplus soil to be disposed of and cost some £6 million more.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 26 April, column 265, if he will estimate how many flights were carrying (a) medical isotopes, (b) reactor fuel and (c) radioactive material for military purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Of the approximately 8,000 flights per year which carry radioactive materials, I understand that over 99 per cent. carry isotopes for medical and industrial use. Radioactive materials transported for military purposes are a matter for the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Radioactive Substance (Carriage by Road) (Great Britain) Regulations apply to the transportation of radioactive material for military purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretary of State for Defence is the competent authority in his own right for the transport of radioactive materials for military purposes. The Ministry of Defence uses containers which are designed, manufactured and tested in complete conformity with the appropriate International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) transport regulations.

Shipping

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the proportion of exports from and imports to the United Kingdom, excluding ferry operations, carried in British registered ships; and what approximate proportion of ships engaged in ferry services to and from the continent are registered in United Kingdom ports.

Mr. McLoughlin [pursuant to his reply, 2 May 1990, c. 549]: About half the ships engaged in ferry services to and from the continent are United Kingdom-registered vessels.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Business Expansion Schemes

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will mount a full investigation into the delays by the Board of Inland Revenue relating to the Swan Valley Railway (Holdings) plc appraisal for a business expansion scheme.

Mr. Lilley: I shall write to my hon. Friend about the case.

DTI Statistics

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much warning was given to United Kingdom industry of the ending of the quarterly sales inquiry;

(2) what assessment he has made of the value of short-term production statistics to British industry;

(3) what representations he has received from British industry calling for comprehensive replacement of the quarterly sales inquiry statistics;

(4) what information he possesses on differences in the official collection of detailed short-term production statistics in the United Kingdom and in other Group of Seven countries;

(5) what account was taken of the policies developed by the statistical office of the European Community in the decision made on the future of the quarterly sales inquiry;

(6) whether he will now undertake (a) an assessment of the burden of form filling faced by British industry and (b) a review of the decision to curtail the quarterly sales inquiry.

Mr. Lilley: The outcome of the review of DTI statistics was announced by DTI Ministers on 10 May 1989. The main recommendations included a reduction in the volume of product sales statistics collected in official inquiries and released in the "Business Monitor" series. Most quarterly product inquiries were converted to an annual basis, and the number of headings for which information was collected was substantially reduced. The review also recommended a strengthening of the monthly sales inquiry used for compiling the index of production. Following enlargement of the Central Statistical Office in July 1989 to incorporate statistical inquiry work previously carried out by DTI, ministerial responsibility for implementing the review recommendations on product statistics fell to Treasury Ministers.

The last of the full quarterly sales inquiries related to the second quarter of 1989. Announcements explaining this change were included in the "Business Monitors" appearing during June and July 1989, and a detailed article on the impact of the review appeared in British Business on 14 July 1989. Subsequently, explanatory material was sent to 82 interested trade associations. Central Statistical Office staff are aware of 22 complaints relating to the loss of quarterly product statistics. Most of these concern the loss of data for particular industries or individual products.

The Government recognise the value of accurate and timely product statistics to both business men and official users. There is, however, a need to strike a balance between benefits to users of the information and the costs to business of completing statistical forms. The Government will ensure that statistical form filling is kept to a minimum, consistent with the information needs of government and business. Any unnecessary inquiries will be discontinued.

International comparisons are difficult to draw due to differences in institutional structures, roles played by trade bodies, periodicity of inquiries, and so on. The following estimates of product counts for which sales or production information is collected are based on work carried out by the West German Statistical Office in 1987: UK 4,500 (since reduced to 3,000), France 10,000, West Germany 6,400, Italy 1,000, US 11,000 and Canada 3,800.

When the review of DTI statistics was carried out, proposals for developments in EC product statistics, known as PRODCOM, were at an early stage. The first detailed statement of Eurostat proposals is expected in the form of a draft regulation later this year. Views of UK business men and trade bodies on the PRODCOM proposals are being sought to ensure that any resulting scheme takes account of UK industrial needs. Key features of the scheme, including periodicity, variables to be collected, panel sizes and so on, are not yet known. Meanwhile, it would be premature to launch further assessments in this area.

Real Take-home Pay

Ms. Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much average real take-home pay has increased for (i) a single person and (ii) a married couple since 1978-79.

Mr. Lilley: Real take-home pay this year for a single person on average male earnings is estimated to be 40 per cent. higher than in 1978-79. For a married couple with non-earning wife and the husband on average male earnings the increase is estimated to be 38 per cent.

Revaluation, Southwark

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a complete list of the rateable value, by property, of retail premises in Walworth road and Peckham road (a) before and (b) after the recent revaluation.

Mr. Lilley: No. Lists containing details of the 1973 and 1990 rateable values of all retail premises in Walworth road and Peckham road are available for inspection, free of charge, at the office of the London borough of Southwark and the Southwark valuation office.

Affinity Credit Cards

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from charitable organisations about the value added tax and corporation tax implications of affinity credit card schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend has received various representations, including a submission from the Charities' Tax Reform Group (CTRG), since the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 7 December 1989, at columns 308-09. Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue have also had discussions with the CTRG about the tax implications of charities' affinity card schemes. It has now been agreed that, with the appropriate contractual arrangements, VAT will be charged on the promotional and other services supplied by the charities, but will not apply to contributions made by the credit card companies for which the beneficiaries are not obliged to do anything in return. The corporation tax treatment of individual schemes will depend on the contractual arrangements, but schemes can be set up in such a way that the charity's income from them qualifies for exemption from corporation tax.

Finance Bill

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the notes on those clauses of the Finance Bill to be taken in Committee of the whole House will be made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes. The appropriate notes on clauses were placed in the Vote Office earlier today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Petrol Prices

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration he has given to introducing regulations compelling petrol forecourts to display their petrol prices in both gallons and litres; and what representations he has had concerning those presenting high prices per gallon displaying prices only in litres.

Mr. Forth: Following consultation with interested parties, I laid an order in 1988 relaxing the requirements to display the price per gallon in addition to the price per litre. Under the recently adopted EC units of measurements directive, the United Kingdom will be required to phase out the use of the gallon for trade after 31 December 1994 at the latest. Although the gallon continues in the interim to be permitted to be used for trade, I understand that the overwhelming majority of garages already sell petrol by the litre. Accordingly, I do not consider it is now necessary to require petrol forecourts to display petrol prices in both gallons and litres. In the last year I have received four letters of complaint about this matter.

Sea Food

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals for the introduction of new labelling laws requiring manufacturers to declare the net defrosted weight of packed sea food.

Mr. Forth: My Department issued a consultation letter earlier this year proposing that legislation be introduced requiring packages of frozen prawns, shrimps and scampi to be marked with the weight net of ice-glaze. There was no opposition to this proposal which has now been notified to the EC Commission under the terms of directive 83/189/EEC. Subject to satisfactory completion of the notification, I intend to lay an order in Parliament to be debated by both Houses under the affirmative resolution procedure.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Beaconsfield of 28 March, Official Report, column 209, which self-regulatory organisations have membership requirements that go further than the vetting of individuals of significance to the shareholdings or management of the business that is making application for authorisation under the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that the Securities Association and FIMBRA have membership requirements that go further than those mentioned in my previous reply.

Financial Times Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representation his Department had at the Financial Times conference on industry and the environment held in London on 23 and 24 April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department was not represented at this event, but representatives of the Department of the Environment did attend it.

Weights and Measures

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to make any changes to the previously announced arrangements for metricating the quantities in which whisky, gin, rum and vodka may be served for consumption on licensed premises; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I announced on 14 December that I intended to lay in draft an order which would permit these spirits to be served in a single round metric quantity of 25 ml from the middle of this year and to end the use of the existing imperial measures by 31 December 1994. Having considered representations on these proposals, it remains my intention to lay an order shortly along the lines previously announced. However, in addition I propose to consult interested parties about the possibility at a later stage of permitting one further round metric quantity of 35 ml and of extending the requirement to use prescribed measures to cover other spirits.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what expertise his Department has made available to eastern European countries in toxic waste landfill disposal.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 1 May 1990]: My Department has organised bilateral seminars on atmospheric and water pollution control with representatives from Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria respectively. The seminars, which included advice on landfill were designed to identify areas of industrial technology which show potential for bilateral commercial development. Assistance to certain eastern European countries on a range of matters, including environmental problems, is also available under the Government's know-how fund and the European Community's PHARE programme.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish data on urban development corporations showing both for 1988-89 and 1989-90, by individual urban development corporation (a) the area of land reclaimed, (b) the total area of land bought, (c) the area of land bought by compulsory purchase order, (d) the number of houses built or refurbished, (e) the area of industrial and commercial floorspace built or refurbished, (f) the miles of roads constructed or improved, (g) the value of public expenditure and (h) the value of private investment.

Mr. Moynihan: The latest available information is set out in the tables.

Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made by his Department to record the effects of pollution by aerial reconnaissance.

Mr. Trippier: Satellite and aircraft reconnaissance is used by my Department's contractors according to need. It has many applications but usually in conjunction with ground-based monitoring and surveillance techniques. Examples include surveys of vegetation cover change in the countryside, radiometry, tracking of air pollution plumes and trajectories, and detection of phytoplankton blooms in the seas around the United Kingdom. Applications to record the effects of pollution are more problematical although some experimental work on detection of environmental damage in forests due to air pollution and other stresses, for example, disease and drought, has been undertaken. Similar work is undertaken by other Departments and the Natural Environmental Research Council, according to need. The most notable example of the programme of aerial surveillance of marine oil pollution undertaken by the Department of Transport.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the minimum requirements for the National Rivers Authority to (a) record and (b) publish its investigation into pollution of (i) water and (ii) flood defences.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The duties of the National Rivers Authority in relation to both water pollution and flood defences are set out in the Water Act 1989. The NRA is required to prepare an annual report on its activities which must be laid before both Houses and published. The authority is also required to record information about its regular monitoring of water quality and related matters in public registers which are held in the authority's regional offices. The particulars which are to be contained in the registers are set out in the Control of Pollution (Registers) Regulations 1989.

In addition, the authority publishes, from time to time, reports and other information on matters for which it is responsible.

Rossall Point Sea Outfall

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has had any recent consultations with North West Water plc regarding the proposed Rossall Point long sea outfall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The applications for consent to discharge in connection with the proposed long sea outfall are still before my right hon. Friend, and it would not be proper for me to comment on them at this stage.

Nature Conservancy Council Joint Committee

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what number of staff he expects will be employed by the proposed joint committee for the Nature Conservancy Council for the purposes of carrying out the quinquennial review of protected animals and plants under section 24 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is currently discussing the staffing requirements of the proposed three new country councils—including those of their joint committee—with the chairmen-designate, the NCC and the Countryside Commission. Figures for the number of staff to be allocated to specific functions will not be available until these discussions are complete.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends the proposed joint committee for the Nature Conservancy Council to make a report under paragraph 17 of schedule 3 to the Nature Conservancy Council Act 1973 in respect of its functions under section 24 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Provision for the Secretary of State to publish the advice he receives on the quinquennial review is already proposed in paragraph 14(5)(c) of schedule 7 to the Environmental Protection Bill. Recommendation 4.19 of the second report of the Select Committee on Science and Technology of another place (HL Paper 33—I) is also germane to this point. The Government are currently considering that report, and will announce their response shortly.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the two assessors appointed to the Nature Conservancy Council's joint committee to represent Northern Ireland's interests will have voting powers in relation to matters of United Kingdom or international importance.

Mr. Trippier: We have always made clear the intention that the interests of nature conservation in Northern Ireland should be represented on the joint committee. There are legal and constitutional considerations which may make it appropriate for the Northern Ireland representatives to be non-voting.

Erasmus Centre

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has placed, or plans to place, any consultancy contract with the Erasmus centre for environmental studies in Rotterdam.

Mr. Trippier: The Department of the Environment has placed no contracts with the Erasmus centre for environmental studies and has no immediate plans to do so.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans substantially to amend the poll tax legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend will make a statement if and when there is something to announce.

Radiation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to instigate a national survey to establish those properties where radiation levels are above acceptable levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A representative national survey of radon in houses has been carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board; the results are given in the publication "Natural Radiation Exposure in UK Dwellings, NRPB—R190, May 1988", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. A further programme of radon surveys by the NRPB is being funded by my Department.

Rainham Marshes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from British Urban Development and Music Corporation of America in respect of the proposed theme park at Rainham marshes in the London borough of Havering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Among the numerous representations received either from or against the granting of planning consent for the proposed development my right hon. Friend received letters from both organisations.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why the decision was taken not to call in the application for a theme park and related matters at Rainham marshes in the London borough of Havering;

(2) if he will make a statement on the site of special scientific interest at Rainham marshes in the London borough of Havering.

Mr. Trippier: I can add nothing to what my right hon. Friend said in his announcement on 5 April. A copy of the press notice has been placed in the Library.

Orimulsion

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has undertaken regarding the environmental side-effects of burning Orimulsion and very heavy residual fuel oils in power stations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is in consultation with PowerGen plc concerning the use of Orimulsion and very heavy residual fuel oils in power stations. Trials are to be undertaken this summer to assess the environmental effects and what measures might be needed to minimise such effects.

Waste Paper

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals have been made for the disposal of surplus waste paper from Government Departments which has been collected during the current year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Each Government Department at present makes its own arrangements for the disposal of waste in the light of local circumstances and security and other considerations. We are currently reviewing the arrangements made across Departments both for the use of recycled materials and for the disposal of waste with a view to maximising recycling. In the case of Department of the Environment headquarters buildings in Westminister and Lambeth, waste paper and cardboard are collected for recycling by contractors. The Department is at the moment considering ways of separating out a higher proportion of office waste for recycling.

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be in a position to give a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Leeds, Central on 18 April about the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities' visit to Leeds on 4 April.

Mr. David Hunt: I answered the hon. Member's question on Tuesday 1 May at column 506.

ISS Servisystem

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, for how long cleaning services at Wellbar house, Gallowgate, Newcastle, have been provided by ISS Servisystem Ltd.; how many contract terms ISS Servisystem Ltd. has had; and what is the remaining period of the current contract.

Mr. Chope: Cleaning services at Wellbar house have been provided by ISS Servisystem Ltd. since March 1982; three contract terms have been awarded to it after competitive tender; and the current contract has two years to run, expiring in April 1992.

Nature Conservancy

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the proposed joint committee for the successors to the Nature Conservancy Council will have responsibility for providing advice to the Government on the conservation implications of trade in endangered species or their products.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 27 April 1990]: Yes.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to the future ownership and holding of Great Britain's national nature reserves currently owned by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 27 April 1990]: The Government have no plans to change the ownership of national nature reserves.

Local Government Revenue

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentages of English local government revenue for 1990-91 he has calculated will be received from (a) government grants, (b) the uniform business rate and (c) community charges.

Mr. Chope: The proportions of total local government revenue, including grants outside AEF and treating community charge rebates as central Government support, which are met from these three sources are as follows:

	Percentage
Government grants	48
Business rates	26
Community charges	26

American Forces

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Suffolk parish councils have indicated to him that they intend to cease providing certain local services on the grounds that the revenues they expect to receive from their British charge payers, following the cessation of rates from American service men, are insufficient.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his answer, 19 February 1990, c. 662.]: I now intend exceptionally to pay extra grant for 1990-91 only to parish councils which face particular difficulties as a result of the exemption from the community charge of United States service personnel living within their area. I understand that in some parishes where United States service men constitute a high proportion of the population, the parish council precept together with contributions to the area safety net has meant that some charge payers are bearing a heavy burden. I hope that this extra grant for 1990-91 will enable these parishes to continue to provide local services without an undue cost falling on charge payers in their area. This additional support will help those parishes most seriously affected by this problem in the first year of the new system.

The grant system provides full compensation at district level for the fact that overseas service men—including those from the United States—are exempt from the community charge. District councils have powers to assist parish councils in meeting the cost of any function which they both may provide. From 1991-92 onwards I would expect district councils to make use of that power to assist parishes with a reduced number of charge payers as a result of the exemption of United States service personnel.

ENERGY

Opencast Coal

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of United Kingdom opencast coal is washed.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. However, it is generally true that opencast coal is cleaner than deep mine output and so requires less washing.

Orimulsion

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will impose a condition on the burning of Orimulsion or very heavy residual fuel oil in electricity power stations, that flue gas desulphurisation scrubbers must be installed in that power station.

Mr. Baldry: Control of emissions from power stations is a matter for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what approaches he has received about the burning of Orimulsion in oil-burning power stations.

Mr. Baldry: PowerGen advised me earlier this year of its intention to burn Orimulsion at the Ince B power station on a trial basis.

Spent Nuclear Fuels (Imports)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what quantity of spent nuclear fuel has so far arrived at Sellafield from other countries for the purpose of reprocessing; in how many shipments this has arrived; from what country and on what dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Over the past 25 years British Nuclear Fuels plc and its predecessors have received some 4,000 tonnes of uranium as spent fuel from Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland. The origins, sizes and dates of arrival of individual consignments are matters for the company.

Fluidised Bed Combustion

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress on the research being carried out at Grimethorpe into the benefits of fluidised bed combustion technology; and when this system is likely to be implemented nationally.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Preparations for the experimental work at Grimethorpe, which forms part of British Coal's topping cycle project, commenced in October 1989 and I understand that design work is progressing. British Coal is seeking alternative industrial funding following Ahlstrom's recent withdrawal from the project and the Department's offer of 50 per cent. support up to a maximum of £8 million remains on the table. The financing of the project will be reviewed when the position on industrial participation is clearer.

Implementation of this technology would depend upon the success of its development programme. Exploitation of the topping cycle concept will also depend on sufficient confidence that it is economically competitive with other means of power generation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Criminal Evidence

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General if he will issue a code of practice to Government Departments on measures necessary to avoid prejudice to cases going through the courts; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

The Attorney-General: No. The circumstances which may arise are too diverse for it to be useful to issue more specific guidance than is already available from the general law.

Winchester Three

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Attorney-General what are the total costs of the trial of the Winchester Three.

The Attorney-General: The total amount expended on legal fees in the trial of this case was £215,287·81. To seek to quantify the administrative costs would involve disproportionate expense.

WALES

Caerphilly Castle (Catering)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review his policy in respect of the catering arrangements at Caerphilly castle in the light of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report in respect of monopoly services at exhibition halls.

Mr. Peter Walker: The document to which I believe the hon. Gentleman refers, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on electrical contracting at exhibition halls in London, concerns the monopoly that existed in favour of restricted practices by electrical contractors tied to the major exhibition halls.

The current catering contract at Caerphilly castle was awarded through open tender for a limited term up to 22 March 1991. Terms of a replacement contract are currently under review.

Engineering Apprenticeships

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of engineering apprenticeships in Wales in 1979, 1984 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not held by the Department.

East Europe (Investment)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to encourage Welsh companies to invest in east European countries.

Mr. Peter Walker: I welcome the emergence of market economies in eastern Europe, which will be to the great benefit of the people of those countries. These developments may also bring investment and exporting opportunities for Welsh companies. But there will inevitably also be risks and uncertainties and these are therefore commercial decisions for Welsh companies themselves to consider.

Deeside ITEC

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the future of Deeside ITEC.

Mr. Roberts: The future of the Deeside ITEC is a matter for the company itself. When the North East Wales training and enterprise council becomes operational the Deeside ITEC will be able to bid to the council to operate YT and ET schemes as it does with the Training Agency at present.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the employees of Deeside ITEC.

Mr. Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people have been trained in information technology by Deeside ITEC.

Mr. Roberts: This information is not held by the Department.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the premises of Deeside ITEC.

Mr. Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Health Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the number of nurses required and the number expected to be available in the years 1991 to 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The aggregation of manpower resource plans submitted by district health authorities in 1989 indicates projected planned staffing levels (PSL) and staff in post (SIP) levels at 30 September 1991 to 1993 at the all-Wales levels as follows:

	1991	1992	1993
General Nurses
PSL	9,832	9,829	9,846
SIP	9,744	9,740	9,749
Children's Nurses
PSL	156	157	157
SIP	137	138	138
Mental Illness Nurses
PSL	2,592	2,778	2,790
SIP	2,474	2,606	2,665
Mental Handicap Nurses
PSL	871	849	822
SIP	840	833	809
Midwives
PSL	1,421	1,475	1,482
SIP	1,339	1,411	1,440

Manpower resource planning is an ongoing management process. These projections may have been revised in the light of developments since the plans were submitted. Revised projections will be available in the manpower resource plans to be submitted by authorities this year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the funding of a paediatric orthopaedic consultant post in the area of South Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office has offered South Glamorgan health authority £170,000 a year to fund an additional orthopaedic consultant under the waiting times initiative. However, it is not currently envisaged that this post should be for a paediatric specialist.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to visit the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar, near Cardiff.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Laura Ashley Company

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of Government grant aid he has given annually to the Laura Ashley Company as expressed as a percentage of the moneys he has given to the Mid Wales Development Board for each of the years since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as the information is available and I will place a copy of my answer in the Library of the House.

Orimulsion

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the environmental side-effects of burning Orimulsion and very heavy residual fuel oil in Pembroke power station, with and without flue gas desulphurisation.

Mr. Grist: I understand that discussions have taken place betwen Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and National Power about the possibility of burning heavy residual fuel oil at Pembroke power station. I am told that no changes to the required standards of emissions for particulate matter (including smoke) or sulphur dioxide from those resulting from current fuel would be permitted by the inspectorate. The question of flue gas desulphurisation does not arise under these circumstances.

No proposals to burn Orimulsion have been made to date.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve health and safety in factories in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for maintaining and improving health and safety standards, and complying with legal obligations, rests with employers and others concerned at the workplace. The Government have increased financial provision for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive over previously agreed levels again in 1990-91. The additional provision is £7 million excluding money transferred from the Department of Energy for nuclear safety research.

The commission's priorities for improving health and safety at work throughout Great Britain will be set out in its plan of work for 1990-91 and beyond.

PRIME MINISTER

South Africa

Q43. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on her policies towards South Africa.

The Prime Minister: We want to see the end of apartheid by peaceful means, through negotiations. We shall continue to encourage all parties to take up the opportunity now presented to negotiate a new democratic constitution for South Africa. Meanwhile, we are stepping up our aid programme to help prepare for the time when all South Africans can play their full part in the political and economic life of their country.

Immigration

Q53. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the implications for immigration policy of European directives which permit citizens of the overseas territories of European Economic Community nations to settle in the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: No. The question of who are to be regarded as its nationals for the purposes of enjoyment of the rights of free movement given in the treaty of Rome, by reason of a connection either with its metropolitan or its overseas territories, is determined by each member of state in accordance with its nationality law.

President Gorbachev

Q97. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet President Gorbachev; and what subjects she expects to discuss with him on that occasion.

The Prime Minister: I expect to meet President Gorbachev when I visit the Soviet Union in June and to discuss with him the full range of international and bilateral issues.

Telecommunications

Q107. Mr. Hood: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give details of representations she has had from churches, community groups and individuals objecting to the provisions of sexual services via the public telecommunications systems; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations about premium-rate telephone services including a few from church organisations. This is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications who has already taken firm action to control these services including the closure of two services in the Manchester area. He is keeping the matter under close review.

Turkey (Human Rights)

146. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she had with members of the Turkish Government during her recent visit to Turkey in respect of their human rights abuses.

The Prime Minister: I discussed human rights with President Ozal when I saw him on 25 April. He stressed his Government's determination to eliminate abuses and told me that the Turkish Parliament was now in the process of setting up its own human rights commission.

Policy Unit Staff

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether, further to her reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 1 March, Official Report, column 277, she will provide a list showing the names and business connections of the individuals with accountancy backgrounds who have joined her policy unit since 1979.

The Prime Minister: Those who have accountancy qualifications are Mr. D. C. Hobson, who joined the policy unit from Coopers and Lybrand, Mr. P. T. Warry who joined from Aerospace Engineering plc and Mr. I. Whitehead who joined from the Bank of Montreal Capital Markets Ltd. London.

Mr. Nelson Mandela

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to meet Mr. Nelson Mandela in July.

The Prime Minister: I look forward to meeting Mr. Mandela on 4 July for talks on how the process of peaceful change in South Africa can be taken forward. Mr. Mandela will also meet my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

India

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), of 26 April, Official Report, column 279, concerning her meeting with the Indian Prime Minister, whether any consideration was given to nuclear-proliferation control measures in the Indian subcontinent in the course of the discussions to which she makes reference.

The Prime Minister: The reply referred to by the hon. Member concerned my meeting with the Indian President during his visit to London in April. The subject of nuclear non-proliferation was not discussed.

Lance Missile

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister whether she continues to advocate replacement of the Lance missile.

The Prime Minister: I continue to support the alliance's position that, where necessary, all NATO's weapons, nuclear and conventional, should be kept up to date.

Rainham Marshes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received from British Urban Development or the Music Corporation of America in respect of the proposed theme park at Rainham marshes in the London borough of Havering; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received recent representations on this subject. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has received numerous representations for and against the granting of planning consent for the proposed development.

Short-range Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister whether she continues to advocate modernisation of land-based short-range nuclear weapons on the mainland of Europe.

The Prime Minister: I continue to support the position of the alliance that we will continue to need an appropriate mix of adequate and effective conventional and nuclear forces which, where necessary, will need to be kept up to date.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Poland

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to (a) the nuclear non-proliferation treaty review conference in August and (b) the possibilities of environmental assistance to clean up polluted areas were raised during his recent visit to Poland.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Iraq

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during the meetings of the working group on nuclear non-proliferation of the European political co-operation committee held during 1990, the matter of the export of nuclear capable technology and technology and equipment usable in launching nuclear weapons to Iraq has been raised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We raised our concern about the incident on 28 March, when a consignment of capacitors bound for Iraq was intercepted at Heathrow, at the meeting of the working group on 3 and 4 April. In subsequent discussion, partners agreed that all possible steps should be taken to ensure that barriers against proliferation are strengthened, and that export controls are adequate. The working group has also discussed the expansion of the missle technology control regime.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's knowledge of commercial interest in the Lear Fan factory in Northern Ireland expressed by Iraq or Iraq-backed companies.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 2 May 1990]: In the light of the charges laid against individuals, and of the continuing investigations by Customs and Excise, it would be wrong for me to comment on these matters.

Antarctic Bases

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the proposed clear-up of abandoned Antarctic bases will be funded from the sale of British Antarctica stamps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no plans to finance the clean-up of abandoned British bases in the Antarctic from the sale of British Antarctic Territory stamps. I refer the hon. Member to a reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science on 18 April 1990.

South Georgia

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) why it has been decided to leave in situ the shells of the buildings of the old whaling station in South Georgia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps have been taken to remove wastes from the old whaling station on South Georgia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following discussions between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the leaseholders, Christian Salvesen plc, work is currently under way to clear up one of the stations. Further decisions will be taken following the completion of this year's work programme.

Antarctica

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his Department details of the Australian and French proposals to declare Antarctica a wilderness reserve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: A joint paper on the French and Australian proposals was delivered to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office at 10·15 am today.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will be represented at the forthcoming meeting of the Antarctic treaty parties to discuss measures to protect the Antarctic environment.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decision has yet been taken by the Government on the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the special consultative meeting of the Antarctic treaty parties to be held later this year in Chile.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

History Teaching

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the factual basis of history teaching.

Mrs. Rumbold: The study of history at school should be grounded on a thorough knowledge of the past. That is not at issue. The question is how to ensure that children acquire the necessary foundation of historical information. The national curriculum working group on history made its recommendations, and my right hon. Friend is consulting widely on its published report. In the light of responses he will make his proposals for attainment targets and programmes of study for school history, which will then be the subject of the statutory consultation conducted by the National Curriculum Council.

Public Relations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to appoint a public relations adviser.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no plans to do so. I already have a very satisfactory head of information at the Department of Education and Science. I have always consulted widely about education policy and presentation and shall continue to do so.

Brighton CTC

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, 30 April 1990, DES 87 and 92, when he was first informed of the discovery by the city technology college trust of the commission of £200,000 charged by Mr. Revere on the purchase of the site of the Brighton city technology college; what is the current valuation of the site; and what will now happen to the site.

Mr. MacGregor: The existence of the commission charged by Mr. Revere was first notified to my Department by the trust in a memorandum dated 8 December. The commission was repaid by Mr. Revere to the CTC trust on 12 December and forwarded to my Department on 13 December. The future of the site and its value are now under consideration.

Academic Research Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to take action on the report of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on academic research equipment; what representations he has received on the report and from whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from hon. Members and a petition organised jointly by the publication "Laboratory News", the Association of University Teachers and the British Laboratory Ware Association. My right hon. Friend announced on 15 November at columns 272-76 that an additional £61 million would be made available for the science budget in 1990-91, together with planning additions for the next two years of £58 million and £59 million. He announced the allocations to the five research councils on 10 January, Official Report columns 623-24. It is for the research councils to determine how to spend the additional funds made available to them. However, in their advice to the Secretary of State on the allocations, the Advisory Board for the Research Councils advised that a high proportion of these funds should be directed to preserving the quality of United Kingdom science. The ABRC also suggested that the research councils should deploy some of these additional funds to increase equipment provision through research grants, and that funding of new research programmes and interdisciplinary research centres would also include some provision for equipment.

University Research

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduction and Science what is the effect on university research and the conditions of employment of university technicians and support staff of the consultation paper prepared by his Department; what funding will be made available for these purposes; and if the loss of funding to the Universities Funding Council will be replaced.

Mr. Jackson: The Department is considering the responses to the consultative paper. The precise form of any new arrangements resulting from the consultation has yet to be decided. Whatever the decision, there will be no reduction in the total public funding of the dual support system.

HEALTH

Mental Health Tribunals

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mental health review tribunals have been held since the Mental Health Act 1983 came into force, up to the latest available date; and how much they have cost.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. Between 1 January 1984 and 31 December 1989 17,192 cases were considered by mental health review tribunals. The total cost of the service in the financial year 1989-90, during which period 3,894 cases were considered, was approximately £2,335,000.

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received regarding the privatisation of the centre for applied microbiology and research, Porton Down, Wiltshire;

(2) what consultations he has carried out with the staff of the centre for applied microbiology and research, Porton Down, Wiltshire, regarding the proposal to privatise it.

Mr. Freeman: I met representatives of the staff side when I visited the centre for applied microbiology and research (CAMR) on 22 January, and I subsequently met representatives of the Manufacturing Science and Finance union in London on 21 February. I have also seen the results of a ballot of staff on the question of privatisation.

Children's Spectacle Frames

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take steps to ensure that information regarding free and low-price children's spectacle frames is made more generally available.

(2) if opticians selling spectacles are under any form of obligation to (a) stock and (b) display free and low-price children's frames.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The sale of spectacles, including children's spectacles, is a private transaction and as a result no requirement is placed on opticians to stock, display or promote information on any particular brand of spectacle frame. In line with normal retail practice it is up to individual opticians to use their commercial judgment and provide a sufficiently wide range of products to meet all needs. Equally, individual patients can shop around for spectacles at the most competitive price which matches their optical prescription. All children under 16 are entitled to an optical voucher to help towards the cost of their spectacles. The voucher value varies depending upon the strength of the optical prescription.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department monitors what proportion of the cost of children's spectacle frames goes towards meeting the copyright dues for commercial logos which are featured on them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The sale of spectacles, including children's spectacles, is a private commercial transaction. The Department of Health does not therefore collect this type of information. All children under 16 are entitled to an optical voucher to help towards the cost of their spectacles. The voucher value varies depending upon the strength of the optical prescription.

Hospital Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 26 April, Official Report, column 295, he will take steps to require health authorities to record the levels of food wastage within hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: No. Food wastage in hospitals is a matter for health authorities.

Housing (Special Needs)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if, in the light of the recent High Court ruling in the case of C and G Homes v. Bath district health authority, he intends to issue guidance to health authorities and local authorities regarding the future use of private housing for the accommodation of mentally ill and mentally handicapped people;

(2) if, in the light of the recent High Court ruling in the case of C and G Homes v. Bath district health authority, he will introduce legislation to prevent discrimination against the mentally handicapped and mentally ill.

Mr. Freeman: We have noted the High Court's ruling, but it would be premature to come to any conclusion about its general effect before the health authority has decided whether or not to appeal.

Public Relations Advisor

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to appoint a public relations advisor.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. I shall continue to consult widely about health policy and its presentation.

Health Service Funding

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the (i) capital, (ii) revenue and (iii) total allocation made to the health authorities in England in each of the last five years and the last financial year.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows end-of-year permissible spends for health authorities in England from 1985-86 to 1989-90. These exclude revenue and capital receipts, including land sales.

£000s

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the (i) capital, (ii) revenue and (iii) total expenditure on the National Health Service in England in each of the last five years and the last financial year.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure information is available only for financial years; figures as requested for the past five years are set out in the table.

Product Licences

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what manner applications for product licences to the Medicine Control Agency submitted before the recent changes and regulations will be treated.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The level of fees for product licence applications are determined by the date of receipt of an application at the Medicines Control Agency. Any application, therefore, which was received before 5 March 1990 (the operative date of the Medicines (Fees Relating to Medicinal Products for Human Use) Amendment Regulations 1990 SI 1990 No. 210) would attract the rate of fee previously applicable.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps were taken to advise applicants to the Medicine Control Agency for product licences of the recent changes in regulations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 5 March 1990]: Licence holders are notified of changes in regulations by means of Medicines Act information letters (MAIL). The latest issue MAIL 62 was issued in March 1990 and gives details of the changes brought about by the Medicines (Fees Relating to Medicinal Products for Human Use) Amendment Regulations 1990 SI 1990 No. 210. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Companies are also notified of changes via their trade associations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sectarianism

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of the constitutional imperative of the Irish Government to work for a united Ireland on sectarianism in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The achievement of a united Ireland has been an acknowledged objective of successive Irish Governments. Article 1 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement formally records, however, the acceptance by the Irish Government that such unity would be achieved only with the consent of a majority of the people of Northern Ireland. That position has not been affected by the Irish Supreme Court's judgment in the McGimpsey case. Sectarianism remains as unacceptable after the judgment as before it.

Employment and Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the Government employment and training measures previously operated through the DED for young and long-term unemployed, the budget for each of the last three years, and the numbers who were helped each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Details of the Government employment and training measures previously operated through the DED for young and long-term unemployed are as follows:

Measure	Budget (£m)			Numbers helped
	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average wage paid to action for community employment participants, excluding supervisors; and what is the average allowance paid to jobs training programme participants.

Mr. Needham: Participants in the action for community employment scheme are paid the accepted rate for the job in the area where the work is carried out. Information on the average wage paid is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Peat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ban all use of peat by his Department; whether he will formulate a national peatlands conservation policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked for the use of peat by Northern Ireland Government Departments to be reduced or for some purposes even eliminated. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has a policy of declaring as areas of special scientific interest (ASSI) or of acquiring as nature reserves those peatland areas which are of highest nature conservation interest. To date, six raised bogs have been declared as ASSIs. A composite declaration including three further bogs will be made soon. Five sites are managed as national nature reserves. In Northern Ireland peat is used by domestic consumers, particularly in low-income rural areas, as a cheap fuel source. I shall promote research into alternative sources of material to fulfil some or all of the purposes to which irreplaceable peat is put.

Criminal Evidence

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration was given to the progress of the trial of John McCann, Finbarr Cullen and Martina Shanahan when deciding to lay the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order before the House on 20 October 1988.

Mr. Brooke: Ministers decided in the early autumn of 1988 that the law in Northern Ireland relating to the so-called right of silence be urgently amended and that the draft order to which the hon. Member refers should be laid before Parliament as soon as possible after the House of Commons returned from the summer recess. The House returned on Wednesday 19 October 1988 and the draft order was laid on 20 October. At that time it was not appreciated that the three defendants in the trial at Winchester had chosen to exercise their right of silence. It was not intended that the timing of the laying of the draft order before Parliament should be relevant to anything other than the timely introduction of that order into the law in Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Skye Bridge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what planning procedures he intends to adopt in respect of the proposed Skye bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As indicated in "New Roads by New Means" (Cmnd. 698), it is proposed to introduce new procedures for the authorisation of privately financed roads which would, if adopted, amend and supplement the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984. These proposals have been adjusted in the light of comments on the Green Paper which have been received from the private sector and from a wide range of organisations concerned with roads and transport. The adjustments are set out in the Government's response to the consultation. The new procedures will safeguard the environment and uphold the rights of individuals and local councils affected by such privately funded infrastructure developments.

Legal Aid

Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends bringing into force part V of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have at present no plans to do so.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the 15 national nature reserves in Scotland currently owned by the Nature Conservancy Council are to be owned by the proposed Scottish Natural Heritage Agency on behalf of the Crown; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes. The proposed natural heritage agency will take over responsibility for all national nature reserves in Scotland whether managed by or under an agreement with the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Nature Conservancy Council has estimated the proportion of land in the flow country of Sutherland and Caithness which is likely to meet the criterion for notification as a site of special scientific interest; what consideration has been given to limiting the area of land to be notified as a site of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no precise definition of the flow country but the Nature Conservancy Council has estimated that up to 40 per cent. of Sutherland and Caithness might meet one or more of the criteria for notification as a site of special scientific interest. This estimate includes land already notified. The council is now carrying out detailed ground surveys to identify precise boundaries for peatland sites. The framework for this programme of work is provided by the Highland regional council working party report on forestry in Caithness and Sutherland. The report was agreed by all members of the working party and endorsed by the Secretary of State on 21 March 1989.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last designated an area under the Ramsar convention on the conservation of wetlands of international importance; if he will indicate the area which is next to be designated and when he expects to designate it; how many sites meet the criteria for designation and protection under the European Community directive on the conservation of wild birds and how many sites are so designated; and what is the name of the site next to be designated and the date he expects to designate it.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given in another place by my noble Friend the Minister of State on 25 April announcing the designation of four sites under the Ramsar convention. One other site has been proposed for designation by NCC: the Upper Solway flats and marshes site of special scientific interest. Further consultations are taking place about this site and no date for possible designation can be given at present.

The NCC has identified 129 sites which potentially meet the criteria for designation as special protection areas under the European Community wild birds directive (79/409/EEC). Eighteen SPAs have been designated. Further consultations are taking place about our proposed SPAs, including the Upper Solway site also proposed as a Ramsar site. It is not possible to say which will be dealt with first or to give a date for possible designation.

Prison Staff (Medical Qualifications)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what different types of medical qualification exists for prison staff involved in the medical care of prisoners; and what is the minimum level of such personnel available at all times in each prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The vast majority of nursing staff in the Scottish prison service hold one or more of the following nursing qualifications: state enrolled nurse (SEN), registered mental nurse (RMN), registered general nurse (RGN), or the Scottish Council of Midwives (SCM). Prison medical officers all hold recognised degrees.

The table sets out the staff complements as regards medical-nursing staff at each establishment.

Sports Grounds

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will now give details of the rates concessions for Scottish sports grounds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has been informed by the Scottish Assessors Association that as result of the simultaneous revaluations which took effect on 1 April the rateable values of sports grounds in Scotland and in England and Wales have been brought into line with each other. I understand that differences still exist in the methods employed in valuing these subjects north and south of the border and we are considering whether, in order to ensure a common method of valuation in future, subordinate legislation is required.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many claimants in Scotland who have not paid their poll tax (i) have had their benefit deducted or (ii) are currently subject to procedures designed to reclaim poll tax arrears; and if he will provide whatever information is available to him for a breakdown by their (a) income level, (b) category of claimant and (c) amount of deduction of benefit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest figure available of the number of claimants in Scotland who have had deductions made from their income support as a contribution towards their community charge arrears is 760. The maximum deduction which can be made is 5 per cent. of the personal allowance for either a single person or a couple. The other information requested is not held centrally.

Hospital Advisory Service Reports

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to make the reports of the Scottish hospital advisory service more widely available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scottish hospital advisory service (SHAS) reports, in order to be effective, have always received wide circulation within health boards. Following a recent review of the role and operation of SHAS, undertaken in consultation with the director of SHAS, health boards and the chief executive, NHS, I have decided that SHAS reports should henceforth be available from SHAS as for sale publications as well as continuing to be made widely available to all health board staff with a direct interest in them.

Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on Scottish Office funding for designated places under the provisions of section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980;

(2) how many designated places have been created in Scotland since the passing of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980; and where these are located;

(3) if he will make a statement on future plans for the number of designated places under section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland;

(4) what funding will be available from the Scottish Office for the establishment of designated places under section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 in Strathclyde in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 May 1990]: One designated place, at Aberdeen, is currently in operation. This received a grant from the Scottish Office under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. Grant has also been approved for a designated place at Inverness on which construction is expected to start shortly, and was offered for another, at Dundee, which did not proceed because of local opposition.

The provision of designated places is a matter for local statutory bodies and voluntary organisations. I understand that initiatives are in preparation in Strathclyde and elsewhere in Scotland. Scottish Office financial assistance depends on the nature of the applications received and on other demands on available resources.

Victim Support

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what Government funding is currently available to Victim Support in Strathclyde; and whether he has any plans to increase funding.

Mr. Lang [holding answer Tuesday 1 May 1990]: The Scottish Office has assisted the Scottish Association of Victim Support Schemes for the past five years through a grant under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. Scottish Office funding for the victim support movement is in line with the Government's policy to improve services to victims of crime generally. Funding has risen from £600 in 1984-85 to £339,000 in 1990-91. In Strathclyde 10 co-ordinator posts in local schemes have been funded by this means.

Apart from a special grant of £13,000 in March 1989 to meet a specific financial difficulty, no central Government grant has been paid to the Strathclyde Association, a regional body representing local schemes in Strathclyde. Strathclyde regional council provides significant funding to the Strathclyde Association and actively supports the objectives of the Scottish association.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details for Great Britain and for the west midlands region, for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date, of the number of YTS trainees with employed status (a) in total and (b) with disabilities.

Mr. Nicholls: Details for Great Britain and for the west midlands region, for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date, of the number of YTS trainees with employed status (a) in total and (b) with disabilities are as follows:

	Great Britain		West Midlands
	Trainees with employed status	Disabled trainees with employed status	Trainees with employed status	Disabled trainees with employed status
At 31 March 1987	[1]49,200	[2]310	[1]4,400	30
At 31 March 1988	[1]95,300	[2]720	[1]9,500	70
At 31 March 1989	[1]118,500	[2]930	[1]13,400	90
At 31 March 1990	[1]117,300	[2]720	[1]13,700	80

[1] Rounded to nearest 100.
[2] Rounded to nearest 10.

Figures for 31 March 1990 are provisional and subject to adjustment.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people over the age of 18 years on YTS with special training needs endorsements there are in the Easington constituency attending Peterlee development and training association training centre.

Mr. Nicholls: On 31 March 1990 there were two young people over the age of 18 with special needs endorsements undertaking YTS at Peterlee development and training association training centre from the Easington constituency.

Textile and Footwear Industries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the textile and footwear industries, giving the figure by month, since 31 January 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of employees in employment in Great Britain were as follows:

Thousands (unadjusted for seasonal variations)

	Textile SIC class 43	Footwear SIC group 451
January 1990	213·2	44·9
February 1990	209·9	45·1

Employment Service Special Bonus Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give the estimated total maximum expenditure for the employment service's special bonus scheme in 1990-91;

(2) if he will make a statement on the categories (a) exceptional achievements, (b) the maintenance of operational effectiveness in exceptionally difficult circumstances and (c) particularly meritorious enterprise or intiative, as used in the employment service special bonus scheme;

(3) if he will give (a) the total number of employees who received an employment service special bonus scheme award, (b) the numbers by category and (c) the total expenditure involved for Great Britain and each standard region in the period 1989-90.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names of those employment training agents and managers that have been given approved status since the inception of employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The names of those training managers awarded approved training organisation status by the Employment Department Training Agency at 30 April 1990 are:

Birmingham Churches Managing Agency
Borough of High Peak
HPW Training Ltd. (Barnsley)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to grant approved training status to all employment training agents and managers.

Mr. Nicholls: Decisions on approved training organisation status for employment training, training agents and training managers are the responsibility of the Employment Department Training Agency, and where these are established, training and enterprise councils.

Those training agents and training managers who started employment training in September 1988 are due to achieve approved training organisation status by September 1990.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the existing employment training expenditure levels are running within the 1990-91 budget and volume requirements.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 April, Official Report, column 318.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the national budget for employment training in 1990-91 for (a) each of (i) mainstream and (ii) non-mainstream clients and (b) each region.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1990-91 the budget, excluding trainee allowances, for new mainstream clients and existing trainees is £468 million and for new non-mainstream clients the budget is £52 million. Regional budgets are for internal management information purposes only.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for employment training based on output-related funding from training and enterprise councils the target percentage of positive outcomes for Great Britain and each standard region for (a) mainstream clients and (b) non-mainstream clients.

Mr. Eggar: There are no separate targets for achievement of positive outcomes by mainstream and non-mainstream clients on employment training.

Agricultural Inspectorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the maximum recommended period between visits to (a) large and (b) small farm premises by the agricultural inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no maximum recommended period between visits to farm premises whatever their size. The Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate's programme of preventive visits to work premises, including farm premises, is planned on the basis of an inspection rating system which ensures that inspector resources are directed to those premises where the need is greatest.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many small firms have received loans under the loan guarantee scheme since its inception; what is the total value so far of these loans; and if he will state the average value of the loans and the estimated cost per job created.

Mr. Eggar: Between 1981 and 31 March 1990 the loan guarantee scheme has guaranteed 24,797 loans to more than 21,000 small firms. The total value of this lending has been £812 million, and the average amount of each loan was £32,700. The net exchequer cost of the scheme per person leaving the unemployment count is estimated to be of the order of £450.

Skill Needs

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total expenditure in 1990-91 on (a) identifying the scale of national skill needs and (b) identifying at national level measures to provide such skills in the tourism and leisure sectors.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 1 May 1990]: Information about the total cost of identifying the scale of national skill needs in 1990-91 is not available. The work done by the Training Agency's skills unit will cost £680,000, including £240,000 for research. Work is also done by other bodies including industry training organisations. The identification of skill needs in the tourism and leisure sectors and the identification of appropriate measures to provide such skills is the responsibility of the industrial training organisations in that sector.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics he has on the distribution of badgers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The most recent study of badger numbers was published in 1988 in the Mammal Review, Volume 18, No. 1, pages 1-9, a copy of which I am arranging to place in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his intention to replace his present badger control strategy with a policy of vaccination and live testing.

Mr. Maclean: The availability of these measures in a form that could be used effectively in field conditions would enable the present control strategy to be comprehensively reconsidered.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy with regard to the destruction of badgers in those areas without a badger panel.

Mr. Maclean: Badger removal operations may be authorised by my Department's veterinary staff in those parishes where there is a recent history of confirmed tuberculosis breakdowns attributable to badgers.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what economic assessment his Department has made of the badger eradication programme.

Mr. Maclean: An assessment of the costs and benefits of the badger control policy in operation from 1975-6 to 1983-4 was published in 1987 as Government Economic Service Working Paper No. 96. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Myxomatosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he records on the incidence of myxomatosis in wild and domesticated rabbits.

Mr. Maclean: No data are available on myxomatosis in wild rabbits although we are aware that the disease is still prevalent.

Among domestic rabbits, the veterinary investigation service recorded six outbreaks of the disease in 1989.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many warnings he has issued to poultry keepers on each of the salmonella control regulations; and how many prosecutions he has initiatied.

Mr. Maclean: Correspondence with poultry-keepers is dealt with largely from local Ministry offices throughout the country and it is not possible to say how many warnings have been issued. We can say however that replies to a number of letters have warned poultry-keepers of the consequences of non- compliance with the statutory salmonella controls. We will pass details of apparent contraventions to local authorities who are responsible for enforcement. We are not aware of any prosecutions having been undertaken to date.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has issued to local authority trading standards officers concerning the implementation of salmonella testing for poultry; and whether he has issued guidelines on the need for poultry keepers to maintain proper records.

Mr. Maclean: Our officials have discussed the implementation and enforcement of the testing and registration arrangements with representatives of the local authority associations, and have issued guidance on the orders to each authority. Information leaflets, which include guidance on record keeping, were circulated to 61 organisations including those representing poultry farmers when the present controls were introduced last October.

Markets and Abattoirs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any proposals to improve the level of inspection at markets and at non-European Economic Community approved abattoirs.

Mr. Maclean: The Farm Animal Welfare Council has made a number of recommendations relating to the enforcement of welfare legislation at markets and slaughterhouses. The Government are seeking views on these recommendations and will publish their response in due course. As regards meat inspection, rigorous post-mortem inspection requirements must be observed in both non-exporting and EC approved abattoirs. Ante-mortem inspection is to be introduced in non-exporting plants from 1 January 1991. Further measures to align arrangements in all plants will be developed having regard to decisions in Brussels on arrangements to be adopted for the completion of the single market.

Cynox 425

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has set any safety levels for the presence of Cynox 425 in pigmeat;

(2) what tests he has carried out on pigmeat to assess the levels of Cynox 425; and if he will publish the results of those tests;

(3) what action he has taken to ensure that pigmeat contaminated with Cynox 425 did not reach the consumer; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what assessment he has made of the risks of the consumption of pigmeat contaminated with Cynox 425;

(5) when he first learned of the contamination of pig feed by Cynox 425 in Yorkshire and Hampshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Cyanox 425 was first detected in suspect imported grain screenings by the central veterinary laboratory on 20 April as part of an in-depth investigation covering many possible categories of contaminants to determine whether any of them could be the cause of symptoms detected in adult sows and a few adult boars earlier in the year. No fattening stock was affected. In cases where sows had to be culled for welfare reasons the meat did not go into the human food chain. Pigmeat and fat from affected sows was analysed using gas liquid chromatography and mass spectrometry plus thin layer chromatography. These investigations indicated that Cyanox 425, although present in the feedingstuff, was not detectable in pig meat or fat. The European Commission's scientific committee for food has set a tolerable daily intake for this chemical at 0·025 mg/kg body weight; there is therefore no need for a separate United Kingdom level.

Investigations are continuing and we will consider publishing them when completed. I compliment my specialist staff on the remarkably successful detective work so far achieved.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total area in hectares designated under the ESA scheme in the south downs; what estimate was made upon the introduction of the scheme in the south downs of take-up; and what is the present take-up in (a) tier 1 and (b) tier 2; and if he has any plans to increase the levels of payment under the scheme in the south downs.

Mr. Maclean: The total area of the south downs ESA is 59,900 hectares. The initial estimates of potentially eligible land have been modified as more precise data have been obtained in monitoring the scheme. The targets for uptake are 75 per cent. of the 7,500 hectares of unimproved or semi-improved grassland (tier 1) and 10 per cent. of the 30,000 hectares of arable land (tier 2). The number of applications and agreements to date is 5,068 hectares under tier 1 and 3,034 hectares under tier 2. I have no plans at present to increase the payment levels under scheme.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the cost of increasing the payment under tier 2 of the ESA scheme in the south downs from £160 to £225 per hectare (a) assuming no increase in uptake, (b) assuming an increase in uptake of 10 per cent. (c) assuming an increase in uptake of 20 per cent. and (d) assuming an increase in uptake of 30 per cent.

Mr. Maclean: The table shows the cost of tier 2 agreements and applications to date in the south downs ESA together with the effects of an increase in payments from £160 per hectare to £225 with the assumed variations in the level of uptake.

Uptake to date Tier 2 (Hectares)	Annual payment £/Hectare	Annual cost £	Increase £
3,034	160	485,440	—
3,034	225	682,650	+197·210
3,337 (+10 per cent.)	225	750,825	+265·385
3,641 (+20 per cent.)	225	819,225	+333·785
3,944 (+30 per cent.)	225	887,400	+401,960

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the operation of the ESA scheme in the south downs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The environmental and economic impact of the south downs ESA scheme is being closely monitored. I will be evaluating the detailed reports early next year.

Arabidopsis

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been undertaken by or on behalf of his Department into the use of arabidopsis in biotechnological research and development.

Mr. Maclean: None. A major research programme on plant molecular biology, including a focused programme on arabidopsis in biotechnological research and development is being undertaken by the Agricultural and Food Research Council with funds from the Department of Education and Science.

North Yorkshire National Park

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much financial support he has given to the North Yorkshire national park for its recently announced conservation farm management scheme.

Mr. Gummer: This scheme is financed through the usual funding arrangements for national parks in which my Department has no involvement. However, farmers participating in the scheme will also be able to benefit from the farm and conservation grant scheme funded by my Department.

Animal Imports Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the number of (a) staff and (b) man years his Department's staff spent on monitoring the import of animals and animal products since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 27 April 1990]: The data set out in my Department's management information system (MINIM), indicate that the resources devoted to import controls of animals and animal products were as follows:

Financial year	Man years
1983-84	69
1984-85	72
1985-86	67
1986-87	70
1987-88	71
1988-89	84
1989-90	[1]84

[1] Provisional.

Data are not available before 1983-84. It is not possible to distinguish between number of staff and man hours.

In addition, and according to circumstances, other Ministry staff may be engaged in monitoring duties. Relevant information is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

North York Moors Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the operation and funding of the North York moors farm scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply. The North York moors farm scheme is managed by the North York moors national park authority and funded by £50,000 from its budget. Shell UK has made a contribution of £10,000. My Department provides 75 per cent. of this approved expenditure through NPSG which is paid to the national parks, the balance being met from local authority resources.

Storm Damage (Financial Assistance)

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether owners of woodlands damaged in this year's storms will receive financial assistance towards their restoration.

Mr. Gummer: Immediately after the initial storm on 25 January 1990, the Forestry Commission set up a forest windblow action committee based on the model of the successful committee it established following the storm in October 1987. The action committee was given the task of assessing the full scale of the damage to woodlands in those areas badly affected by the 25 January storm and those which followed, in southern England, Wales and the midlands, and making recommendations to the commission. Although storms occurred at this time in other parts of Britain, the damage to woodlands in these areas was not of the same exceptional nature.

In its recently published report, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, the action committee has estimated that the volume of timber blown down in woodlands in the areas concerned was of the order of 1·3 million cubic metres. This compares with nearly 4 million cubic metres blown down in the October 1987 storm. Most of the damage (some 82 per cent. by volume) was sustained in conifer woodlands, 55 per cent. of which were in private ownership. The damage to broadleaved woodlands, over 90 per cent. of which were privately owned, mainly affected mature and over-mature trees, particularly beech. The action committee recommended that special assistance towards replanting should be made available to the owners of the storm-damaged woodlands in the form of supplements to the Forestry Commission's normal planting grants.

In considering the action committee's recommendations, I have had regard to the effect that the additional volumes of timber arising from the recent storms are likely to have on the market price of wood in the areas concerned. Following the storm in 1987, timber prices were severely depressed as a result of the glut of wood on the market. It is clear that the salvaging and sale of the broadleaved timber arising from this year's storms will, in the majority of cases, again fail to provide a sufficient return to cover the necessary replanting, bearing in mind the extraordinary expenses that owners will face both in the difficult task of preparing the sites for planting and in the planting itself. Against this background, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided to provide a special supplement of £400 per hectare for broadleaved replanting in those woodland areas damaged by the storms, to be paid on top of the Forestry Commission's normal planting grants, on the same basis as the effective arrangement we introduced after the 1987 storm. By contrast, the softwood market is not much affected on this occasion and the conifer woods can be expected to pay their own way with the help of the standard planting grants.

The supplement for broadleaved planting, which is at the same level as that paid after the 1987 storm, will be available over the next four years for all eligible replanting carried out by applicants under the woodland grant scheme and by those who still qualify under the Forestry Commission's dedication schemes. Applications will be considered for those woodlands in the commission's East England, West England and Wales conservancies which were damaged in the succession of severe storms which occurred over the period from 25 January 1990 to the end of February 1990. The European Commission is being informed under the provisions of article 93 of the treaty of Rome.

Full details of the administrative arrangements for the new supplement will be set out in a Forestry Commission leaflet to be published shortly, copies of which will be placed in the Library. Any owners who have already taken steps to secure the replanting of their storm-damaged woods with broadleaves under the commission's grant schemes will not be placed at a disadvantage as we have agreed that the supplement may be applied to them retrospectively.

It is estimated that the total cost of the supplement will be £320,000 spread over the four-year period. This will be in addition to the estimated cost of the normal grants for replanting the damaged woodlands (including the conifer woodlands) of £1·68 million, also spread over four years. There will be no addition to the overall provision for public expenditure programmes set out in Cm. 1003.

The storms have left a trail of devastation, and we hope that the supplement now on offer, taken with the Forestry Commission's normal planting grants, will serve to encourage the restoration of well-loved woodland landscapes.

DEFENCE

Electromagnetic Interference

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to accidents caused to aircraft and other military equipment as a result of electromagnetic interference.

Mr. Neubert: All accidents involving United Kingdom military aircraft and other United Kingdom military equipments are fully investigated. None of the investigations so far has shown that electromagnetic interference was a contributory cause. I understand that other nations have lost aircraft in circumstances where the effect of electromagnetic interference was suspected. However, in the United Kingdom, there are strict rules which govern the minimum distances which must be observed when aircraft and other equipments approach emitters of high frequency radio transmissions.

Foreign Tank Manufacturers

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what talks his Department has had regarding (a) offset arrangements or investments or (b) other topics with foreign tank manufacturers in the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Export Services Organisation has negotiated an industrial participation (offset banking) memorandum of understanding with General Dynamics, the purpose of which is to encourage the US company to offer the British defence industry opportunities to bid for a share of the work on all General Dynamics' major defence programmes.

We have also had discussions on industrial participation with foreign tank manufacturers bidding for the Army Chieftain replacement programme. A formal agreement with Krauss Maffei is already in place.

Atomic Weapons Establishment (Unions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans to impose restrictions on trade union membership to the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Equipment (Environmental Impact)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what literature has been published by his Department on the environmental impact of equipment produced to his Department's specifications.

Mr. Neubert: The environmental impact of Ministry of Defence equipment is considered in a variety of departmental publications.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he takes to (a) evaluate the environmental friendliness of the production processes required to make equipment ordered by his Department and (b) set environmental pollution control conditions on the suppliers of equipment to his Department.

Mr. Neubert: The responsibility for ensuring that the production processes employed in making equipment for the Ministry of Defence meet the appropriate legislative and regulatory standards on environmental pollution control lies with the companies from which the equipment is procured.

Cappagh (Incident)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide full details of any injuries sustained by civilians or members of the security forces as a result of the exchange of fire on the evening of 24 March in Cappagh, County Tyrone; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 24 March at Cappagh, County Tyrone, terrorists, without warning, opened fire on a member of the security forces in civilian clothes travelling in a civilian car. The Royal Ulster Constabulary is investigating the incident, including the possibility of any terrorist injuries. However, I can confirm that no member of the security forces or members of the public sustained injuries as a result of this attack.

Turkey

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet the Turkish Defence Minister to discuss Turkey's defence capability in the light of the reduction in Bulgaria's defence forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will meet his Turkish colleague at NATO meetings later this month. A range of current defence issues will be discussed, including progress on conventional arms negotiations which would lead to reductions in NATO and Warsaw pact force levels in certain categories.

Longmoor Training Area (Hunts)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will revoke the licences that allow the Goschen foxhounds, Chiddingfold, Leconfield and Cowdray foxhounds, and the Hampshire hunt to hunt on the site of special scientific interest Ministry of Defence training area at Longmoor.

Mr. Neubert: It is the Department's policy to permit access to Ministry of Defence land for recreational purposes, including hunting, wherever operational and safety considerations permit, where it is consistent with the interests of tenants and licensees and where it does not unreasonably affect local amenities and the environment. In the case of Longmoor, those criteria, including taking into consideration the site of special scientific interest, have been met.

The site of special scientific interest was designated by the Nature Conservancy Council, whose staff closely monitor the area to ensure that users of the land do not damage the site. As this recreational pursuit is not causing any damage to the site of special scientific interest, we do not propose to revoke the licences that allow the Goschen foxhounds, Chiddingfold, Leconfield and Cowdray foxhounds, and the Hampshire hunt to hunt over this area.

Shackleton Fleet

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last reviewed the age and airworthiness of the RAF Shackleton fleet; whether he has any plans for a further review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The airworthiness of the Shackleton is kept under regular review. Age is not in itself a material factor.

Military Aircraft (Statistics)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many (a) crashes and (b) near misses have occurred for each year since 1960 in which military aircraft carrying radioactive material have been involved; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many aeroplane flights occurred in 1989 in United Kingdom air space in which radioactive material for military purposes was carried; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to give information of the kind requested on the transport of defence nuclear materials. I can confirm, however, that there has never been an accident involving transportation of defence materials in the United Kingdom which has led to the release or a serious risk of release of radiation or radioactive contamination.

Narvik (Commemoration)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why his Department refuses to provide support for veterans of the Narvik operation wishing to travel to Narvik for the 50th anniversary commemoration on 26 to 28 May.

Mr. Neubert: There is no provision in the defence budget to provide financial assistance to enable ex-service personnel to attend commemoration ceremonies and we are unable to offer any other assistance to veterans wishing to attend the Narvik 50th anniversary commemorations.

Radiation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will authorise a case control study in Fife to examine the possible link between nuclear radiation and the incidence of leukaemia or cancer.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The Government base their policy on these matters on the independent advice of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE). In its advice to Government on the Gardner report on 2 April 1990, COMARE said it did not wish to see multiple independent studies, which would cause undue inconvenience to the small number of individuals and families concerned. COMARE also recommended some form of co-ordination of research to ensure the best possible use of resources. Responsibility for that co-ordination, and for instituting any study of the sort proposed, is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health, whose Department has set up a co-ordinating group on which the Ministry of Defence is represented.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average individual radiation dose, whole body equivalent, for all Rosyth dockyard workers involved or who have been involved in the nuclear programme.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The average individual lifetime radiation dose for those workers currently registered as employed at Rosyth dockyard in the defence radiological protection service's record keeping system is 79·61 mSv. Data for employees who have previously ceased radiation work are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is reviewing the maximum permitted radiation dosages in milliSieverts for any one year.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 26 April 1990]: My Department takes radiation exposure matters very seriously indeed and continues to operate a limit of 30 mSv, which is substantially below the statutory limit of 50 mSv. Radiation exposures are authorised only on the basis that they are justified, comply with Ministry of Defence and statutory limits, and are as low as reasonably practicable. The Ministry's policy over many years has been based on the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total occupational whole body equivalent radiation exposure of Rosyth dockyard workers in milliSieverts, for each year since the onset of the nuclear programme.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 26 April 1990]: The cumulative radiation doses of all workers in Rosyth dockyard, for each of the years 1979 to 1989 inclusive, are shown in the following table. These figures include the cumulative radiation doses of employees monitored for exposure to ionising radiations by the local issue of direct reading dosimeters while employed under a written system of work. Figures for earlier years are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cumulative radiation dose—Rosyth dockyard

Year	Cumulative dose (mSv)
1989	4,202
1988	2,738
1987	2,294
1986	2,670
1985	4,197
1984	6,478
1983	7,811
1982	5,288
1981	5,818
1980	6,793
1979	8,144

SOCIAL SECURITY

Asbestosis

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the number of claims for asbestosis-related diseases made to each of the eight special medical boards during 1988 together with the respective numbers in which disease was diagnosed.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table.

Initial references and diagnoses of asbestosis-related diseases 1988

Medical boarding centre	Initial references	Positive diagnoses
Cardiff	174	77
Glasgow	270	131
London	400	238
Manchester	261	110
Newcastle	278	126
Sheffield	169	110
Stoke	69	44
Swansea	33	16
All centres	1,654	852

Notes: Prescribed diseases included are PD D1, D3, D8 and D9. Figures included for PD D1 relate only to references when the claimant had worked in the asbestos industry.

War Pensions

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement in respect of the application by Mr. HS, reference M8/221641, for war disablement pension, on the length of time it took the report from the war pensions committee of 28 October 1987 to be received by the social security central office, war pensions branch, in May 1989, and on the length of time it took to compile a report from the general surgeon concerning this case.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The war pensions committee which met on 28 October 1987 recommended that an independent medical examination should be carried out on Mr. HS and that his case should then be reviewed by the Department. The examination was arranged by the solicitors acting for Mr. HS and took place on 29 June 1988. A report of the examination was received by the Department in May 1989. As the report was inconclusive the Department's doctors decided in July 1989 that Mr. HS should be examined by a general surgeon. An examination was carried out in August 1989 but the surgeon's report was not received by the Department until February 1990. Unfortunately this, too, was inconclusive. The Department's doctors therefore requested a further consultant examination which took place on 4 April. As soon as this report is received it will be referred to the Department's doctors, and Mr. HS will be notified of the outcome as soon as possible afterwards. Of course, if Mr. HS's claim is successful payment will be backdated.

Cohabitation Rule

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he gives to local offices about determining whether a couple are living together for the purpose of assessing benefit entitlement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Secretary of State does not give advice on this matter. It is for the chief adjudication officer to issue such guidance, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the rise in real values of income support using the statutory uprating dates of September to September between 1988-89 and 1990-91 for (i) a single person aged 18 to 24 years, (ii) a single person aged 25 years, (iii) a couple, (iv) a couple with two children under 11 years, (v) a single parent with one child under 11 years and (vi) a pensioner.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table.

	April 1988 rates (£)	April 1988 rates at September 1989 prices[1] (£)	Actual rates April 1990 (£)
Single aged 18 to 24	26·05	28·69	28·80
Single aged 25	33·40	36·79	36·70
Couple (one aged 18 or over)	51·45	56·67	57·60
Couple with two children under 11	79·10	87·12	89·65

	April 1988 rates (£)	April 1988 rates at September 1989 prices[1] (£)	Actual rates April 1990 (£)
Single parent (aged 18 or over) with one child under 11	54·00	59·48	60·50
Pensioner aged 60 to 74	44·05	48·52	48·50
Pensioner aged 75 to 79	44·05	48·52	51·10
Pensioner aged 80 or over/60 or over and disabled	46·45	51·16	53·75

[1] Based on the movement in the index of retail prices less housing costs between September 1987 and September 1989.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the value of income support as a proportion of average net male earnings in 1990-91, using an estimate of average earnings for (i) a couple with two children aged under 11 years, (ii) a single person aged under 25 years, (iii) a single person over 25 years, (iv) a couple, (v) a single pensioner and (vi) a single mother with one child aged under 11 years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 1 February 1990 at column 347. Figures on which to provide estimates will not be available until July.

Erythropoletic Porphyria

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the United Kingdom are estimated to be suffering from the disease congenital erythropoletic porphyria.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider the introduction of a graduated system of income support payments to persons in residential care, with higher levels of payment being made available to those in smaller homes, as a means of reducing the financial incentives which encourage the establishment of larger homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Under the new funding arrangements for community care, taking effect from April 1991, local social services authorities will have discretion to determine the fees they are prepared to meet. Accordingly we see no need to consider changing the income support rules in the way proposed.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 36, he will provide such information as is available to him on a sample basis about the shortfall in residential and nursing home fees above the income support limits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to him on 4 April at column 682 and to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 15 February at columns 376-78. Centrally held data on actual charges are not statistically reliable, but in the year ended August 1989 it is estimated that just over half all claimants in residential and nursing homes had fees at or below the appropriate limit.

Social Security Spending

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the real rise in social security spending between 1978-79 and 1989-90 broken down into the different factors that have contributed to the rise.

Mr. Scott: Total social security spending increased in real terms between 1978-79 and 1989-90 by nearly £14,000 million, or around 35 per cent. There have been many reasons for this growth. While it is not possible to evaluate the exact effect of every factor, the Government's increased provisions for the elderly and for disabled people, and improved benefit schemes such as family credit, have been significant. So, too, have economic changes such as the increase in unemployment in the first half of the decade, and the rise in rents, and demographic changes such as the growth in numbers of lone parents and the steady reduction in the number of widows. The table shows, in real terms, spending on benefits for the various client groups, in 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Real terms benefit spending in 1978-79 and 1989-90 by client group
£ million at 1989-90 prices

Client group	1978-79	1989-90
Elderly people	20,460	25,550
Sick and disabled people	5,850	9,520
Family (including lone parents)	5,875	9,200
Unemployed people	3,210	4,740
Widows and orphans	1,615	1,240
Total	37,010	50,250

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much is unemployment benefit for a single person and a couple as a proportion of average net male earnings in 1989-90; and if he will estimate similar figures for 1990-91.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information for April 1989 is available from table 6.1b of the Department's "Abstract of Statistics for Index of Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security Benefits and Contributions." A copy of this publication is in the Library. The information for April 1990 cannot be estimated until the earnings figures for April 1990 are known.

Family Credit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much family credit rose in real terms using the statutory uprating dates of September to September between 1988-89 and 1990-91 for (i) a single parent with one child under 11 years and (ii) a couple with two children under 11 years old.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The family credit rates for 1990-91 represent increases over those for 1988-89 which exceed the rise in the RPI (excluding housing costs) over the two-year period to September 1989 by the following overall amounts:

(1) for a couple or lone parent with one child under 11: £2·70 or 6·4 per cent.

(2) for a couple or lone parent with two children under 11: £4·30 or 8·9 per cent.

Employment (21-hour Rule)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to the reply of 30 April, what steps he will take to make available to the public instructions to be given to his officials about the application of the 21-hour rule.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Existing information given to officials concerning the application of the 21-hour rule is published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in the "Adjudication Officer's Guide", volume 3, and in the "Income Support Manual", section 3, which are available in the Library. The clarification referred to in my reply of 30 April will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in an income support circular.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the housing benefit entitlement of a widow aged 75 years, living alone, whose sole income is £46 per week with savings of less than £3,000 paying rent of (a) £20 per week, (b) £25 per week, (c) £30 per week, (d) £35 per week and (e) £40 per week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A 75-year-old widow, with this level of income and capital, would be entitled to maximum housing benefit because her personal allowance (applicable amount) of £51·10 is greater than her income. On the assumption that all the rent was eligible for housing benefit, and that the accommodation was not unreasonably expensive, this means that each of the rent levels quoted would be met in full. Such a claimant would also be well advised to apply for income support to bring her income up to the full amount of £51·10 provided for in the income support personal allowances.

Family Incomes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish an analysis of the composition of the lowest quintile of income in 1979 on the same basis as in "Households Below Average Incomes" identifying the proportion of families that are (a) married pensioners, (b) single pensioners, (c) married with children, (d) married without children, (e) single with children and (f) single without children; and whether he will publish separate data before and after housing costs.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 12 March 1990]: The information requested is in the table.

Lowest quintile of equivalised household income in 1979

Persons by family type (percentages)	Before housing costs	After housing costs
Married pensioner	18	18
Single pensioner	17	16
Married couple with children	41	42
Married couple without children	6	6
Single person with children	10	10
Single person without children	8	8
All family types	100	100

HOME DEPARTMENT

Juvenile Offenders

6. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the success of community-based penalties in preventing juveniles from re-offending.

49. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of community-based penalties in preventing juveniles from re-offending.

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of community-based penalties in preventing juveniles from re-offending.

Mr. Waddington: The available information suggests that young offenders who receive community penalties are less likely to be reconvicted than those who receive custodial sentences.

21. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to make parents more responsible for crimes committed by their children.

37. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to make parents more responsible for crimes committed by their children.

44. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to make parents more responsible for crimes committed by their children.

Mr. John Patten: The White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" sets out proposals for strengthening the statutory provisions relating to parents' attendance at court with their children; parents' payment of their children's fines; and the binding over of parents of convicted juvenile offenders.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to enable young offenders to complete day centre requirements of probation orders while undertaking youth employment training.

Mr. Waddington: We are concerned that young offenders' training needs and benefit entitlements should not be adversely affected by their attendance at day centre programmes as a condition of a probation order. To this end, we have agreed with the Training Agency that day centre attendance should be integrated with the youth training scheme. Arrangements for this were promulgated in January. This should ensure that 16 and 17-year-old offenders do not lose their eligibility for income support as a result of attending a day centre.

Unemployed adult offenders attending day centres on weekdays remain eligible for benefit provided that they are seeking work at the same time as part of the day centre programme or on the days when they do not attend the day centre.

Prison Statistics

8. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current prison population; what it was one year ago; and what projections he has made for the prison population over the next five years.

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current prison population; what it was one year ago; and what projections he has made for the prison population over the next five years.

Mr. Waddington: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given earlier today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox).

20. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding the size of the prison population.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office has answered a number of inquiries about the current, and expected future levels of the prison population.

Her Majesty's Prison, Leicester

14. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning conditions in Her Majesty's prison, Leicester.

Mr. Mellor: Within the last 12 months we have responded to five parliamenary questions on conditions in Her Majesty's prison, Leicester. The governor of Her Majesty's prison, Leicester has also responded to a number of representations made by interested parties.

Cocaine

15. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of seizures of cocaine, in the most recent years for which figures are available, was of cocaine entering the United Kingdom from member states of the European Community.

26. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of seizures of cocaine, in the most recent years for which figures are available, was of cocaine entering the United Kingdom from member states of the European Community.

Mr. Mellor: Of the total amount of cocaine seized by Customs in 1989, some 64 per cent. by weight—equivalent to 267 kgs—was known to have been consigned from or routed through other member states of the European Community. These are provisional figures.

The corresponding final figures for 1988 and 1987 are 36 and 24 per cent. respectively.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

16. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now consulted the Lord Chief Justice on the Birmingham pub bombings case.

Mr. Waddington: I have not consulted the Lord Chief Justice on this case.

64. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to prevent material in police archives relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case from being destroyed or tampered with.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that the West Midlands police and the Devon and Cornwall constabulary have made arrangements to ensure that all material in their possession relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case is stored in secure conditions pending the outcome of further inquiries into the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six.

Rape

17. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average sentence imposed for the crime of rape for the latest period for which figures are available and for 1979.

32. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average sentence imposed for the crime of rape for the latest period for which figures are available and for 1979.

Mr. John Patten: In England and Wales, the average sentence length for rape was 6·2 years in 1988, compared with four years in 1979.

Car Security

18. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on efforts made by motor manufacturers in the last year to improve the quality of car security.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington).

Violent Crime

19. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes of violence against the person were reported to police forces in England and Wales in 1989; and by what percentage they changed over 1988.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 177,000 offences of violence against the person were recorded in England and Wales in 1989, an increase of 12 per cent. compared with 1988. In Cleveland, the increase was 2 per cent.—40 more offences. Some of the increase in recorded figures is the result of more crimes being reported to the police.

33. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of total crime is made up of violent and sexual crimes.

Mr. John Patten: Six per cent. Further information is given in Home Office statistical bulletin 10/90, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Neighbourhood Watch

22. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now established in England and Wales.

47. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now established in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of December 1989 there were estimated to be over 81,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales, compared to 64,000 at the end of December 1988, an increase of 26·5 per cent.

46. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now in operation; and what assessment he has recently made as to their effectiveness in crime prevention.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of December 1989 there were estimated to be over 81,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales.

Studies have shown that neighbourhood watch schemes, where carefully designed and implemented, have contributed to a reduction in crime and fear of crime in some areas. It has also been shown that members of neighbourhood watch schemes are more likely than others to take crime prevention measures and to report suspicious incidents to the police; and they appreciate a greater sense of security.

Religious Cults

23. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue a direction to the BBC to refrain from the broadcasting of matters likely to promote religious cults or their associated training organisations.

Mr. Mellor: No. My power to impose broadcasting restrictions on the BBC under clause 13(4) of their licence and agreement is exercised only in extreme circumstances and when it is in the national interest to do so. In other circumstances, programme content is a matter for the broadcasting authorities which operate independently of Government. The BBC is aware of its impartiality obligations, which mean that programmes should not promote any particular viewpoint on religious or other subjects.

Sunday Trading

24. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received recent representations on Sunday trading legislation.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. Since last I answered a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 16 March, 11 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and nine against have been received.

Dog Breeding

25. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the Breeding of Dogs Act 1973.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I indicated during the Adjournment debate on puppy farms on 21 December, the Government are considering amendments to the 1973 Act which would improve the way in which the Act is enforced and so bring illegal and unlicensed dog breeding establishments under the control of the law.

Prison Education

27. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was spent on (a) prison education generally and (b) prison education at Strangeways prison in the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Total expenditure on education in (a) prison establishments generally and (b) HM prison Manchester for the two most recent years available was:

Year	Total £'000	HM prison Manchester £'000
1988-89	25,200	246
1987-88	21,400	237

Remand Prisoners

28. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time now spent by prisoners awaiting trial on remand in custody in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: Provisional figures for 1989 indicate that the average time spent on remand in prison service establishments, prior to the finding of the court, is about 53 days for males and 45 days for females.

51. Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has any new proposals for the treatment of remand prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: Governors are to be given discretion to vary visits to unconvicted prisoners by relatives and friends. This will enable longer, less frequent visits to be allowed instead of brief daily visits, which often have to be limited to 15 minutes because of pressure on the facilities available.

A pilot scheme to reduce routine censorship of the correspondence of unconvicted prisoners to a 5 per cent. sample started on 1 February in three local prisons. We shall soon be assessing the results of the trial and considering whether the change should be extended.

Another pilot scheme is being established at Winchester prison to enable unconvicted prisoners to use cardphones subject to certain safeguards. If the scheme is successful, cardphones will be installed for such prisoners at other prisons and remand centres.

Prison Conditions

29. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with conditions in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: While modern prisons are built and operated to high standards, the conditions in some establishments—particularly local prisons and remand centres where the problems are exacerbated by overcrowding—leave a lot to be desired. Unfortunately, one effect of the recent disturbances is to increase the pressures, and thereby worsen conditions, elsewhere in the prison system. We are determined to see improvements as soon as possible.

We shall continue to tackle the problem of overcrowding by the dual strategy of encouraging the use of non-custodial sentences and prison building, which has proved successful to date. My right hon. and learned Friend has already announced his intention to place more emphasis on refurbishing existing prisons and, in particular, to speed up the provision of integral sanitation. At the same time, levels of regime activity are being improved, or where they are already good, sustained.

56. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what date he will end the practice of slopping out in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The Government are committed to providing access to sanitation in prisons. Already the majority of prison places have such access. We are looking at ways of providing access for three quarters of all places within the next few years, and of ensuring that the remaining places are provided with access as quickly as possible thereafter.

Police Pay and Conditions

30. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the issues on which he has, during the last year, declined to implement the results of arbitration on police pay and conditions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 4 January this year my right hon. and learned Friend declined to implement in full recommendations made to him on police rent allowance by the Police Negotiating Board after both sides of the board had gone to arbitration.

36. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the real increase in a police constable's pay over the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Medway (Dame Peggy Fenner) earlier today.

Prisoners (Europe)

31. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has made any assessment of the treatment of prisoners in other European countries.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office is regularly in touch with officials in other European countries, and views and information on the treatment of prisoners are exchanged.

Reporting of Offences

34. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the change in offences reported to police forces in England and Wales in 1989 (a) by total and (b) by percentage over 1988.

Mr. John Patten: The total number of crimes recorded by the police in 1989 was 154,000 more than in 1988, an increase of 4 per cent.

Prison Staffing

35. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on prison staffing levels.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 April 1990 there were more than 20,500 principal, senior and basic grade officers in post in establishments, an unprecedently high level. A total of 3,300 additional officers have joined the staff of the service in the past three years to enable new places to open and to meet in full management's commitment under the fresh start framework agreement. Plans are in hand to recruit up to 1,295 more in 1990-91.

On 11 April my right hon. and learned Friend announced plans for the speeding up of the recruitment of 200 of the officers who were due to join later this year, in recognition of the stress which the prison service is suffering as a result of the disturbances at Strangeways and elsewhere. Lord Justice Woolf has the task of looking into all the background to these disturbances and staffing levels will no doubt be an element of his inquiry.

Bill of Rights

38. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to enter into discussions with the political parties to discuss a Bill of Rights.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

West Midlands Police

39. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the special branch document reference No. 10368/74; and what action he has taken.

58. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the special branch document reference No. 10368/74; and what action he has taken.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone).

Drugs Intelligence Unit

40. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the establishment figure for the police national drugs intelligence unit; and what was the figure five years ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 25 January 1990 at column 870.

Firearms

41. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the incidence of crimes in which firearms are used with intent to injure.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have taken a number of steps to deter the use of firearms in crime and to prevent their availability to criminals which have continuing effect. These include the firearms amnesty in 1988 in which almost 43,000 firearms were removed from circulation; the stricter controls on the possession of firearms and shotguns, including the prohibition of the more lethal types of weapons, introduced under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988; and, under the Criminal Justice Act 1988, increased penalties for the illegal possession of a shotgun and for possessing or carrying a firearm in the furtherance of crime.

Criminal Damage

42. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes of criminal damage were reported to the police forces in England and Wales in 1989; and by what percentage these changed over 1988.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 630,000 offences of criminal damage were recorded by the police in 1989—6 per cent. more than in 1988.

Special Constabulary

43. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to increase the number of applicants coming forward from the ethnic communities to join the special constabulary.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of forces are taking measures to encourage members of the ethnic minority communities to join the special constabulary. The Government will be undertaking a national advertising campaign later this year to supplement local recruitment efforts.

Crack

45. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of the possession of the drug crack are known to the South Yorkshire police; and what further action he plans for South Yorkshire to deal with this potential threat.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures supplied to the national drugs intelligence unit, which may not be complete, show that the South Yorkshire police have made two seizures of crack. In addition, in the course of police investigations, a number of other people in South Yorkshire had admitted to the use of crack. The illicit supply and misuse of drugs will continue to be investigated by the police and, under the new drug prevention initiative announced last year, we are willing to consider the provision of assistance for the implementation of any local drug prevention measures.

Prison Governors

48. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in restructuring prison department management what importance he intends to give to the need for an enhanced managerial role for prison governors.

Mr. Mellor: A number of changes in the prison service over the past few years have been specifically designed to enhance the managerial role of prison governors in their establishments, most notably the introduction of devolved budgeting and the fresh start package of reforms.

Royal Commission on the Police

50. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now establish a Royal Commission on the police to set guidelines for the force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

Rule 43 Prisoners

52. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners by establishment are currently held on rule 43; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table.

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on sexual and physical abuse of rule 43 offenders and of deliberate contamination of their food.

Mr. Mellor: Allegations of assault on rule 43 prisoners during the recent disturbances at Manchester prison are being investigated. No information is available centrally or at regional level about complaints from other rule 43 prisoners of sexual or physical abuse. In the past year, six rule 43 prisoners at different establishments have submitted petitions alleging contamination of their food by other prisoners. Prison staff are alert to this possibility and take precautions to obviate opportunities for such action.

Crime Statistics

53. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many police force areas in England and Wales reported crime fell in 1989.

Mr. John Patten: Six. The information is published in table 8 of Home Office statistical bulletin 10/90, a copy of which is available in the Library.

61. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Northumbria to discuss crime figures.

69. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Dorset to discuss crime figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so at the present time.

Drug Demand Reduction

54. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what drug demand reduction activities the Government plan to follow up the world ministerial drugs summit in London on 9 to 11 April.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced in her opening address to the world ministerial drugs summit our plans to establish a United Kingdom task force to advise other countries on ways of reducing the demand for drugs. This task force will draw on the fund of experience and expertise which is available in the United Kingdom on such measures as community drug prevention initiatives, drugs education and publicity and programmes for the treatment and rehabilitation of drug misusers.

A detailed, 35-point political declaration, a copy of which is in the Library, was adopted unanimously at the conclusion of the summit. As well as committing all countries represented to give higher priority to demand reduction, the London declaration contains a host of useful practical guidance on specific measures which can or should be taken to reduce demand. We intend to honour fully the commitments undertaken on behalf of the United Kingdom, and we shall be looking to other countries and interested organisations represented at the summit to do the same. We are considering more specific ways in which the summit can be followed up.

Police (Amendment) Regulations

55. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from police officers regarding the Police (Amendment) Regulations; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations on this subject from police officers, from hon. Members on behalf of police officers and from police representative organisations. In response he has explained his reasons for setting aside certain aspects of the Police Negotiating Board agreement on rent allowance. He has also made a number of important changes to his original proposals to meet points which were raised.

Child Pornography

57. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to tougher penalties for child pornography.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to increase the maximum penalties for child pornography offences. The maximum penalty for some offences is already three years' imprisonment. In addition, a new offence was introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 of possession of an indecent photograph of a child with a penalty of a fine of up to £2,000.

Sound Broadcasting, London

59. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the prospective arrangements for competitive sound broadcasting in the London area.

Mr. Mellor: During the past few months six of the IBA's incremental radio contractors have come on air in London to provide alternatives to the existing BBC and IBA local radio stations. Four more are due to start later this year, one covering Heathrow and Gatwick. Under the Broadcasting Bill currently before Parliament the new Radio Authority will be able to advertise further licences in the future. The areas covered will depend on audience demand and frequency availability.

Immigration

60. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the total number of citizens of Macao who will be entitled to settle in the United Kingdom; and what is the scope of dependants and relatives who will be permitted to join such persons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that, under Portuguese law, about 90,000 residents of Macao are entitled to Portuguese nationality. Under European Community law a national of a member state is entitled to enter and reside in any other member state for the purpose of exercising rights conferred by the treaty of Rome. In the case of Portuguese nationals, however, these rights do not include the right to take employment in this country until 1 January 1993. A person exercising treaty rights is entitled to be accompanied by his or her spouse, descendants under 21 years of age and dependants in the ascending and descending lines.

Court Houses

62. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new court houses have been open since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Thirty-one, including the major improvement of existing buildings as well as new construction.

Voluntary Sector Funding

63. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations contained in the efficiency scrutiny report on Government funding for the voluntary sector.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office officials—and those in other Departments concerned—will be preparing action plans to review their grant programmes in the light of the principles set out in the statement of policy towards the voluntary sector given in my right hon. and learned Friend's answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 4 April 1990 at column 639 and of the recommendations of the scrutiny report.

Daylight Saving

65. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will introduce proposals to introduce daylight saving.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are still considering the results of the consultation exercise.

Terrorism

66. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the measures which are being taken to combat international terrorism.

Mr. Waddington: The Government remain fully committed to the fight against terrorism, and will continue to play a leading role in the various international bodies of which the United Kingdom is a member in order to strengthen and improve counter-terrorist co-operation. The Trevi group provides a forum in which information about terrorist threats and incidents can be passed rapidly between EC member states and agreement reached on effective, practical measures. The United Kingdom also conducts bilateral exchanges with a wide range of countries to strengthen further international co-operation. I recently had such meetings with the Ministers of the Interior for France and Czechoslovakia. I am meeting the Minister of the Interior for Portugal tomorrow, 4 May, and I shall be meeting European Community colleagues collectively at the next meeting of Trevi Ministers in Dublin in June.

Sexual Violence

67. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes of sexual violence were reported to the police forces in England and Wales in 1988.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published in table 6 of Home Office statistical bulletin 10/90, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Drug Traffickers (Confiscation of Assets)

68. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the value of drug traffickers' assets ordered to be confiscated by the courts in 1988; and what estimate he has as to the likely figure for 1989.

Mr. John Patten: The latest figures, which are in respect of confiscation orders made in 1987 and 1988, are given in table 7.25 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1988", a copy of which is in the Library. These show that £8·1 million was ordered to be confiscated in 1988. Data for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990. The current estimate by the national drugs intelligence unit of the cumulative total of confiscation orders made since the Drug Trafficking Offences Act came into force in January 1987, is in excess of £16 million.

Security Industry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will place the July 1989 report of the working group on self-regulation of the security industry in the Library; and when his Department expects to complete its consideration of this report.

Mr. John Patten: I hope that consideration of the report will be completed in the near future.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are members of the Commission for Racial Equality; and how many of them are of (a) black Caribbean, black African or other black, (b) Indian, (c) Pakistani and (d) Bangladeshi origin.

Mr. John Patten: There are 14 members of the Commission for Racial Equality, including the chairman and deputy chairmen, of whom three are of black Caribbean, black African or other black origin; two of Indian origin; one of Pakistani origin and one of Bangladeshi origin.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to reply to the letter dated 10 April from the hon. Member for South Hams concerning Laurent Derioz and his application for British nationality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to the hon. Member on 1 May 1990.

Security Services Commissioner

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is expected that the security services commissioner will be submitting his first report to the Prime Minister; and if he will indicate the information which the report is likely to contain.

Mr. Waddington: Section 4(5) of the Security Service Act 1989 requires the commissioner to make an annual report on the discharge of his functions under the Act to the Prime Minister: the format and content of the report are matters for the commissioner himself to determine. I understand that Lord Justice Stuart-Smith intends to make his first report as soon as is practicable after the end of this year.

Winchester Three

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total costs of the imprisonment of the Winchester Three.

Mr. Mellor: Based upon average weekly operating costs at each establishment in which they were held, the total cost of the imprisonment of the Winchester Three was £161,000.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) law officers were involved in the initial detention, arrest and the preparations for trial of the Winchester Three; and what were the costs in each case.

Mr. Waddington: The information at (a) could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Prosecution costs are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

Prison Management

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will postpone the implementation of the management structure review of the prison service pending Lord Justice Woolf's report on the riots in Strangeways.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 11 January that changes to the organisation of the prison service would be made at the end of September along the lines recommended last August in the report of a study by a joint PA Consulting Group and prison service team. The work needed to give effect to those changes is on course. My right hon. and learned Friend received a request from the Prison Governors Association on 3 April that the reorganisation should be reconsidered in the light of the Manchester riot and he will respond to the association shortly.

Fresh Start

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the public relations consultants employed by his Department in relation to the introduction of fresh start for prison officers.

Mr. Mellor: No public relations consultants were employed. Fresh start was developed and introduced by the prison service in consultation with PA Management Consultants.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held in police stations cells in England and Wales on 30 April.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 April 1990 there were 496 prisoners in police cells in England and Wales. All were male.

Public Relations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to appoint a public relations adviser.

Mr. Waddington: My principal advisor on public relations is Mr. Adrian Moorey, director of information, who joined the Home Office on 17 April 1990 following the transfer of his predecessor to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. I shall continue to seek advice from other sources as and when the need arises.

Parliament Square (Coach Parking)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been received by the Metropolitan Commissioner from parliamentary authorities concerning coach parking in the vicinity of Parliament square; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police devote considerable resources to enforcing the law on illegal parking. I understand that the Serjeant at Arms wrote to the Commissioner on 5 April about coach parking in the vicinity of Parliament square following a point of order raised by my hon. Friend. The assistant commissioner replied on 17 April.

Prisoners (AIDS and HIV)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prisoners and (b) remand prisoners in England and Wales are known to (i) have AIDS and (ii) be HIV positive.

Mr. Mellor: On 25 April 1990 the prison population of England and Wales included 41 sentenced and six unsentenced prisoners reported as having been identified as HIV antibody positive.

Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on the progress of investigations into the murder of Hilda Murrell, of Shrewsbury, on 21 March 1984.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The investigation into the death of Miss Hilda Murrell is an operational matter for the police. However, I understand from the Chief Constable of West Mercia that a suspect has been identified and papers have been forwarded to the Crown prosecution service which is considering the matter.

Police Recruitment Examinations

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to replace the police initial recruitment examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In February this year the Police Advisory Board standing committee on conditions of service agreed that a new initial recruitment test should be prepared. We hope shortly to be inviting tenders for a contract to devise the new test.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mentally ill offenders were given custodial sentences by magistrates courts in each year from 1985 to 1989; and what steps he is taking to reduce these figures.

Mr. John Patten: Such information is not available centrally.

Guidance to courts on avoiding sending mentally disordered offenders to prison is provided in "The Sentence of the Court" (HMSO), a new edition of which will be published shortly. This guidance has been revised to encourage courts to use their powers to remand to hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983 or making attendance at or admission to hospital a condition of bail. Statistical information on the use of such powers was published in Home Office statistical bulletin 28/88 "Statistics of Mentally Disordered Offenders, England and Wales, 1985 and 1986", a copy of which is in the Library.

Prisons (Deaths)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all deaths during 1989 and the first quarter of 1990 of persons detained in prison department establishments, stating in each case the age and sex of the inmate, the cause of death, the inquest verdict, whether the inmate was sentenced or on remand, the establishment where the inmate was detained, and whether the death occurred there or in an outside hospital.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table. Deaths occurred within the establishment unless otherwise indicated.

Deaths of persons detained at Prison Service establishments

Charity Mailing Lists

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to prevent registered charities' mailing lists from being used to tout for business from the members of such charities by banking service firms.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have no present plans to do so. If there is any evidence of a breach of the Data Protection Act, it should be brought to the attention of the Data Protection Registrar.

Prison Officers (Suicides)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers are known to have committed suicide in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: Before 1 January 1990 no central records were kept of the causes of death among prison officers and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Since 1 January 1990 one prison officer is known to have committed suicide.

Wakefield Prison

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total additional days' leave granted to staff at Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, arising from the temporary transfer of staff to Her Majesty's prison, Manchester;

(2) if he will allocate additional staff at Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield to enable prison officers who have undertaken duties at Her Majesty's prison, Manchester, to take the special trauma leave that they have been granted;

(3) what advice has been given by his Department to the governor of Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, as to how staffing levels in the prison can be maintained at safe levels while (a) prison officers who have been temporarily deployed at Her Majesty's prison, Manchester, take leave that they have subsequently been granted and (b) other officers who covered duties for those absent from Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, take time off that is due to them.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 27 April 1990]: The governor of Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield will assess locally the impact of both additional leave granted to staff attending the disturbance at Her Majesty's prison, Manchester (the amount of which is still being calculated) and additional hours accumulated at Wakefield by covering for colleagues on duty at Manchester. He will then, using this assessment and information from the staff planning and reporting system (SPAR), plan officers' leave and time off in lieu (TOIL). If he identifies any problems he will seek assistance from regional management. This process needs to be completed before regional management can assess whether additional staff might need to be sent to Wakefield on a temporary basis.

On 11 April my right hon. and learned Friend announced that, in recognition of the stress which the prison service has suffered, he would be bringing forward the recruitment of 200 officers originally planned for later this year. When these officers are available they will be posted following an assessment by management of which establishments are under particular pressure.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 4 May 1990

ENVIRONMENT

Wild Birds

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the reply the Minister for the Environment and Countryside promised to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 15 February, Official Report, column 409.

Mr. Trippier: Copies of my letter were placed in the Library today.

Returnable Containers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being considered by his Department to encourage the use of returnable containers especially with regard to those made from glass and plastic.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Environmental Protection Bill will require every local authority involved in waste collection or disposal to make plans that will give priority to the recovery of containers for reuse and recycling wherever practicable. Different systems of recovery will be appropriate in different areas, but it is our intention to review all systems in preparing the White Paper on the environment and we hope to publish guidance for local authorities to assist them in their choice of method. In doing so we shall take account of all the environmental implications, including storage, energy and transport costs, when comparing the use of returnable containers with those that can more easily be recycled.

River Pollution

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from the National Rivers Authority over the funding of its monitoring of pollution discharges; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 24 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett), at column 121.

Nitrates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the cost of the implementation of the European Community rules for nitrates in surface waters on British farms.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The European Commission has not published a compliance cost assessment for the proposed directive on nitrates. Without this it is difficult at present to assess the implementation costs for British farms.

Water Metering

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the additional progress report on the national water meter trials to be available in the Library.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report on the national water metering trials; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that the national water metering trials co-ordinating committee intends to publish a second interim report towards the end of June. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library.

Pollution Report No. 28

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the Department of the Environment pollution report No. 28.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Pollution report No. 28, "UK Blood Lead Monitoring Programme 1984-1987: Results for 1987", was published today and a copy of the report has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The report shows the detailed results of a programme of monitoring carried out by the Department of the Environment, in conjunction with local authorities, health authorities and police forces. Summary results were published in the Department's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" No. 11 in February 1989.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those Acts of Parliament since 1979 which have a direct application to local government, indicating those which are concerned with local government finance.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 1 May 1990]: Public general Acts of Parliament between June 1979 and the end of the last Session of Parliament which affect local authorities in England include:

[1] Concerns (at least in part) local government finance.
[2] Consolidation Act.

Not all the foregoing Acts were based on Bills introduced by the Government.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service (Language Skills)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many positions in the civil service are open only to those with a workable knowledge of one or more European Community languages other than English.

Mr. Ryder: The knowledge and experience required for particular posts in the civil service is a matter for the Minister responsible for each Department and the information requested is not held centrally.

Higher Rate Taxpayers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the last period for which figures are available how many wives whose husbands paid higher rate tax had no declarable income.

Mr. Lilley: Provisionally estimates are that in 1990-91 about 700,000 wives whose husbands are liable to the higher rate of income tax have insufficient income to be liable to tax. A small proportion of these have no earned or investment income. Estimates are based on a projection of the distribution of income between husbands and wives reported in the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes.

Taxation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the estimated income from a 1p in the pound extra levy on income tax on graduates earning in excess of £16,000;

(2) what would be the estimated income from a 1p in the pound extra levy on income tax on graduates.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Euratom Safeguards

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he received a copy of the report on the operation of Euratom safeguards, SEC(90) 452 final, dated 26 March; and what evaluation he has made of its accuracy in regard to its reference to nuclear activities and plants in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: My officials received the report on the operations of Euratom safeguards on 10 April and copies have since been placed in the Library of the House. The report does not refer specifically to Euratom's inspection activities in any one member state; however, paragraph 58 of the report notes that in pursuing its inspection activities during 1988 Euratom did not obtain evidence of diversion of nuclear material.

DEFENCE

Service Museums

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funding has been made available to museums operated by (a) the Royal Navy; (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Air Force during each of the last three years; and what funding is to be made available during the next year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Spending from Ministry of Defence votes for the years in question is as follows:

	1987-88 £ million	1988-89 £ million	1989-90[2] £ million	1990-91[3] £ million
Royal Navy Museums[1]	0·954	1·226	1·312	1·244
National Army Museum	1·582	1·722	2·607	2·974
Royal Air Force Museum	4·600	2·075	1·753	2·011

Notes:
[1]Includes: Royal Naval Museum.
Royal Naval Submarine Museum.
Royal Marines Museum.
Fleet Air Arm Museum.
[2]Estimated.
[3]Funding allocation.

All these museums are non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) sponsored by the Ministry of Defence and funded by means of grants in aid. The figures do not include any moneys which might have been made available to the museums from other sources.

In addition, there are around 100 Army regimental and corps museums which are funded either directly from MOD votes or by local authorities or private institutions. The costs to MOD are not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Women at Sea

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the WRNS have volunteered for sea service; what is his estimate of the number of Royal Navy personnel who are taking premature voluntary retirement or refusing to re-enlist because of the decision to employ women at sea in warships; and whether he has reviewed his policy on the posting of members of the WRNS to aircraft carriers and assault ships.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date 278 WRNS ratings and 90 officers have volunteered to go to sea this year. Of these, 147 ratings and 16 officers will be trained to serve on the first group of five ships currently being prepared to provide suitable accommodation. Further volunteers will be called for in due course and, from the autumn, all new entrants will have liability for sea service.

There is no evidence that RN personnel are refusing to re-enlist or taking premature voluntary retirement because of the decision to employ women at sea, and we do not intend to review that decision.

Turkey

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet the Secretary-General of NATO to discuss the level of Turkish defence forces in the light of defence reductions by Bulgaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will be meeting Dr. Woerner at NATO meetings later this month. A range of current defence issues will be discussed, including progress on conventional arms negotiations which would lead to reductions in NATO and Warsaw pact levels in certain categories.

SGL Defence Ltd. and Link Miles Ltd.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the contractual relationship between his Department, SGL Defence Ltd. and Singer-Link-Miles.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence has contracts with Link Miles Ltd. for a range of equipments, primarily aircraft simulators. It has no contracts with SGL Defence Ltd. Bilateral relations between Link Miles Ltd. and SGL Defence Ltd. are a matter for the companies themselves.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Breath Tests

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many annual reports of county constabularies the classification under the heading breath tests includes a category no requirement or impairment; what is the total number of such tests administered; and how this is classified in the annual tables published by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that four county constabularies specify a category of "no requirement" or a category of "impairment" in the details of evidential breath tests recorded in their annual reports under breath tests. These categories cover circumstances where a person who is required to provide a specimen for analysis at a police station has been arrested either because of obvious signs of impairment or for other reasons and has not been required before arrest to take a roadside screening breath test. In the Home Office statistics of breath tests, England and Wales 1988, a copy of which was placed in the Library on 7 August 1989, it is shown in figure 1 (page 12) that, out of 126,500 drivers required to provide an evidential sample for analysis, 9,500 were arrested for impairment or for other reasons. Statistics for 1989 are not yet available.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were in (a) long-term (b) short-term and (c) remand prisons, respectively, in May 1979; how many prisoners are held in each prison at present; and what changes in capacity for each category of prison have taken place since May 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information is not available in the form requested. Prison service establishments are generally categorised according to whether they hold young offenders or adults, sentenced or unsentenced, or a mixture of these. Long and short-sentenced prisoners are, in many cases, held in the same establishment.

Comparative information of population and certified normal accommodation (CNA) broken down by types of establishment is as follows:

	31 May 1979		March 1990
	Pop	CNA	Pop[1]	CNA[2]
Local prisons[3] and remand centres (male)	19,290	13,578	19,898	14,421
Training prisons[4] (male)	14,462	15,360	19,874	20,933
Young offender institutions[5] (male)	7,160	7,696	5,889	6,976
Female establishments[6]	1,457	1,256	1,643	1,823
Total	42,369	37,890	47,304	44,153

[1] Population figures for Friday 30 March 1990.
[2] CNA figures for Sunday 11 March 1990.
[3] Holds sentenced and unsentenced adults and young offenders.
[4] Holds sentenced adults.
[5] Holds sentenced young offenders.
[6] All types of establishment.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether consultants have now been appointed to provide detailed and accurate estimates of cost for the different options for changing the management structure and organisation of the magistrates courts service.

Mr. John Patten: Following the consideration of tenders from a number of consultancy firms, Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte have been appointed to undertake the task. The consultants are expected to report by the end of August 1990.

Wakefield Prison

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the number of uniformed prison officers at Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, to reach the agreed staffing levels.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 27 April 1990]: On 14 April there were 440 officers (including principal and senior officers and specialists) in post at HMP Wakefield. This was four officers below Wakefield's staffing requirement for 1990-91, although two of the posts are temporary and may no longer be needed. Regional management keep the staffing of HMP Wakefield under close review.

Court Houses

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish new guidelines on the construction of court houses.

Mr. John Patten: We hope to publish new guidelines in the summer.

WALES

Nursery Education

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of children in the three to four-year-old group are currently receiving pre-compulsory education in maintained schools in Wales.

Mr. Roberts: At January 1989, 82 per cent. of pupils aged three or four at 31 August 1988 were receiving education in maintained nursery and primary schools in Wales.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many publicly maintained nursery schools there are currently in Wales.

Mr. Roberts: At January 1989, there were 56 maintained nursery schools in Wales.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure by his Department on grants towards the cost of loft insulation under the homes insulation scheme for (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: Expenditure by the Department towards the cost of loft insulation under the homes insulation scheme amounted to £1·545 million in 1988-89 and £1·451 million in 1989-90. These amounts include administration fees to local authorities.

Badger Sett, Balgan

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to make the badger sett at Balgan a wildlife reserve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: The powers under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 and the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to designate sites as national or local nature reserves lie with the Nature Conservancy Council and the local authorities respectively.

Chernobyl

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make further provision to assist Welsh farmers still subject to restrictions on the sale and movement of their sheep as a result of radioactive contamination following the nuclear disaster at Chernobyl; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Adequate provision already exists.

Visual Arts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish a resource centre for visual arts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: We have no plans for doing so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Security Upratings

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the annualised notional provision made for poll tax in the April 1989 social security upratings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The amounts included in income support levels in April 1989 provided help during 1989-90 towards the community charge in Scotland and domestic rates in England and Wales. They were equivalent to 20 per cent. of an annual payment of £229 for single people aged 18 to 24 and for each member of a couple, and £338 for single people aged 25 or over. Following the general uprating of benefits in April 1990, the equivalent figures for 1990-91 are £315 and £356 respectively. This gives a weighted average for all income support beneficiaries of £340, which may be compared with an average community charge liability for claimants in Great Britain of £340, after transitional relief.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support declare earnings (a) within the earnings disregard limit and (b) resulting in some reduction of benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 20 April 1990]: The information is in the table:

	Claimant	Partner
Number of people with earnings up to the level of the disregard	32,000	5,000
Number of people with earnings above the level of the disregard	85,000	28,000

Note: These figures apply to individuals, not to claims.

PRIME MINISTER

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has sought to curb the award of Government contracts to accountancy firms criticised by the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

The Prime Minister: Not as a general act of policy and it would be wrong to do so. However, Government Departments are aware of the need before awarding such contracts to take into account all relevant considerations and to make such inquiries as are necessary to establish the professional competence of the firm concerned.

EC Economic and Political Union

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what steps her Ministers are taking to advise the general public on the implications of economic union and political union within the European Economic Community; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I and my ministerial colleagues speak regularly both in public and in the House of Commons on the implications of both political union and economic and monetary union.

Interception of Communications

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Prime Minister when the commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will present his annual report; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A copy of Lord Justice Lloyd's fourth annual report, for 1989 has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(7) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The confidential appendix to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(8) of the 1985 Act. I am grateful to the commissioner for his work in keeping under review the issue of warrants and note that he remains satisfied that the Secretaries of State involved continue to exercise the greatest care in issuing warrants. Careful consideration is being given to the whole of the commissioner's report.

HEALTH

Eye Checks

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had eye checks in March 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Data on NHS sight tests are collected on a six-monthly, not a monthly, basis. During the six-month period ending 31 March 1988, 6·1 million sight tests were paid for in England; the comparable figure for the six months ending 31 March 1989 was 6·7 million. Figures on the number of NHS sight tests only for the six-month period ending 31 March 1990 are not yet available. These figures will not include details on the number of private sight tests carried out during that period and will not therefore be directly comparable.

Transplant Operation (Killingbeck Hospital)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations have been made by his Department to either the Yorkshire regional health authority or the Leeds eastern authority regarding the recent heart and lung transplant operation performed on a three-year-old boy at Killingbeck hospital, Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have drawn the attention of the regional health authority to the Department's policy on the provision of heart transplant services. Our policy, which is based on the advice of the supra-regional services advisory group and the Royal College of Surgeons, is that heart and heart-lung transplantation should be provided within the designated supra-regional units.

Residential Homes (Television Cameras)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in the light of the recent decision by a registered homes tribunal in the case of Haughton v. Kirklees metropolitan council, he will make it his Department's policy actively to discourage the installation of closed-circuit televison cameras in residential or nursing homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The installation of closed-circuit television is a matter for social services authorities to decide with respect to homes under their own management and for registration authorities where it affects private and voluntary homes. Authorities need to be sure that their use is fully justified in any particular home.

The installation of closed-circuit television cameras in residential or nursing homes may have a role to play in resident security and safety but it may constitute an invasion of privacy and lead to a reduction in personal contact between staff and residents.

Hospitals (Food Safety)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by his Department to health authorities regarding monitoring the safety of food bought privately by patients, relatives or friends from outside premises for consumption within hospitals by patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for health authorities to make any necessary arrangements for monitoring the safety of food in hospitals including any food brought in privately. In doing so they will draw on the hygiene guidance issued by the Department.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 19 February, Official Report, column 544, if he will rank the regional health authorities according to the growth money (a) they received per head of population in 1989-90 and (b) will receive on current assumptions in 1990-91.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table gives the ranking for each regional health authority according to the amount of cash increase over the previous baseline for the region, allocated per head of population for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Region	Ranking 1989-90	Ranking 1990-91
Northern	9	8
Yorkshire	7	9
Trent	3	7
E Anglian	8	12
NW Thames	5	4
NE Thames	14	6
SE Thames	11	14
SW Thames	12	10
Wessex	1	11
Oxford	2	1
S. Western	4	13
W Midlands	6	3
Mersey	10	2
N Western	13	5

Notes:

1. 1989-90 is based on allocations for services provided within the region using the resource allocation working party formula. (RAWP).
2. 1990-91 is based on allocations for resident population calculated using the new allocation formula, adjusted for the effect of cross boundary flows, so that they are on comparable basis to 1989-90.
3. Both 1989-90 and 1990-91 are before the additions for SIFT, supra-regional services and other special items specific to individual regions.
4. Calculated using actual populations within regional administrative boundaries.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Dementia

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) of 2 February, Official Report, column 421, if he will estimate the numbers of deaths from Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia in each of the last five years by (a) county and (b) health authority; and what information is kept on the identity and medical history of CJD sufferers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Accurate information on numbers of cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease and collated records of individuals' medical history are not at present available for the last five years. The study to be conducted by Dr. R. G. Will, with support from the Department of Health, will attempt to gather together this information from the recent past, as well as to collect it prospectively.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes there have been in the nature of the whooping cough vaccine since it was first recommended for general use by his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 30 March 1990]: For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not the practice of the Department to disclose information about commercial products. Requests for such information about licensed products should be made directly to the company holding the licence.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated percentage efficacy of the whooping cough vaccine currently used in the United Kingdom; and from which research studies the figure was obtained.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 30 March 1990]: The estimated efficacy of the current British whooping cough vaccine in preventing clinically typical disease is 80 per cent. The figure derives from a national study carried out in England and Wales during 1978-80.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what comparative studies there have been of the efficacy and toxicity of the whole-cell whooping cough vaccine used in Britain as against the acellular one used in other countries;

(2) when, and for what reasons, his Department decided to investigate the value of whooping cough vaccines other than the whole-cell one.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 30 March 1990]: It was decided that acellular vaccines should be studied when it became known that such vaccines were becoming available. In a phase two trial, three acellular vaccines (one made in Britain, one in France and one in Japan) have been compared with British whole-cell vaccine for toxicity and immune response. A phase three (main trial) study to compare the protective efficacy of one or more of these acellular vaccines with whole-cell vaccine is now being planned in the United Kingdom. These investigations into whole-cell and acellular vaccines are being undertaken by the Medical Research Council (MRC), which is the body funded by the Government to support clinical research. The MRC receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science.

NHS Costs

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Livingston of 5 April, Official Report, columns 753-54, if he will publish the average cost figures shown there adjusted by the HCHS pay and prices index.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 April 1990]: Pursuant to the reply of 5 April 1990 at columns 753-54, following is a table which shows the figures at 1989-90 prices revalued by the use of the hospital and community health services (HCHS) pay and prices index.

The source and general notes to the earlier reply continue to apply.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average time in London that training agents take to assess employment training clients' training needs and draw up an action plan.

Mr. Nicholls: The length of time a client spends in assessment will always vary according to individual needs. Some clients may need to spend several days with a training agent before a realistic action plan can be agreed. Others with a clear and realistic idea of their own employment aims can be referred directly to training with minimal need for counselling, assessment etc.

The average length of time that training agents in London take to assess employment training clients' needs and draw up an action plan is about five hours spread over one to two days.

Energy Grant

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure by his Department on the administration of the energy grant through employment training in (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if trainees from ethnic minorities and trainees with special needs and projects covering both categories are excluded from the positive outcome criteria being used to deliver output-related funding for training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 May 1990]: No.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the profile of 1990-91 revenue support grant payments to Scottish local authorities.

Mr. Rifkind: Having considered the case submitted by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 9 April and in particular the points they put to me about the effect of the introduction of the community charge transitional relief scheme on their billing arrangements, I have decided that the profile of revenue support grant payments for 1990-91 should be advanced so that authorities receive 25·2 per cent. of their total entitlement to grant by the end of May.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Osteopaths

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has plans to introduce legislation to permit osteopaths to advertise by direct mail; what representations he has had against such advertising from professional bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Representations against direct mail advertising have been received from the General Council and Register of Osteopaths (GCRO). The Secretary of State is considering these in the light of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's recommendations on advertising by professionally regulated osteopaths.

Export Licences

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will set up an inquiry into export licence applications and the way in which these are vetted within his Department.

Mr. Ridley: The administration of export licensing by my Department was thoroughly reviewed in 1988 and the need for changes to ensure that the controls remain effective, and are efficiently administered, is kept under continuous study.

Internal Market Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Minister from his Department is to attend the EC Internal Market Council on 8 May.

Mr. Ridley: The next meeting of the EC Internal Market Council is on 14 May; the United Kingdom will be represented by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being considered for publishing nationally the advantages of recycling paper in order to stimulate demand for recycled paper products.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 3 May 1990]: We are considering a large number of options aimed at stimulating all parts of the recycling chain not just for paper but for a wide range of materials. The outcome of this examination will be put forward in the White Paper on the environment, due to be published in the autumn.

Obscene Telephone Calls

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive a report from British Telecom on the findings of its task force on obscene telephone calls; and if he will place it in the Library.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 3 May 1990]: This is a matter for the director general of Telecommunications, who has maintained a close interest in British Telecom's initiative on nuisance calls.

The report has been sent by British Telecom to the director general in view of his responsibilities under the Telecommunications Act 1984. He is currently considering the findings of the report.

"The Three Graces"

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will further defer a decision on the application for a licence to export Antonio Canova's "The Three Graces"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1990, c. 344]: On 2 March I announced that in considering whether or not to grant an export licence for heritage items I proposed from now on to take account of an offer to buy the object from any source, whether public or private. I then invited representations from people who might be affected by this change of policy. I received a number of comments on the proposal and, with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts, have considered them very carefully. I can now confirm that offers to an owner from any source, whether public or private, will be taken into account in making the decision on the export licence. I believe that it would be useful now to set out in some detail the context of this change of policy and the reasons for it.

The purpose of the policy for controlling the export of heritage items is to provide a balanced system for retaining the most important items of our cultural heritage in this country. Retention has been the main consideration underlying the policy and will continue to be so in the future.

The policy which I am confirming today will ensure that our export control system provides reasonable protection for our heritage in an increasingly competitive world art market.

The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 prohibits, with very limited exceptions, the export without a licence of goods manufactured or produced more than 50 years before the date of export. The responsibility for granting or refusing a licence is mine, as the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry; however, in exercising these functions I am advised by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts who in turn receives valuable advice from the reviewing committee on the export of works of art.

Our system is based on the procedures recommended in the report of the Waverley committee in 1952. This report proposed criteria for determining whether an object is of national importance. Where an individual licence is required and the reviewing committee considers that the item meets any of the Waverley criteria the policy up till now has been to defer consideration of the application for the licence for a short period, usually up to six months. The purpose of this deferral was to give a public institution in the United Kingdom the chance to make an offer to the owner at a specified price which the reviewing committee had recommended as the fair market price. The aim has been that an export licence should not normally be refused unless the owner has received an offer at the fair market price, or has made it clear that he would not accept such an offer were it to be made.

That such offers would be financed from public resources was assumed in the Waverley report. But it has always been possible for an offer to come from a private source. At all stages in the consideration of an application for a licence the applicant is free to accept, or indeed reject, an offer from any source at any price. There has never been any question of the Government having power to accept or reject offers or to make anyone else do so.

The new policy is much the same as the old, with one important difference. Under the new policy there will be, as there is now, a deferral to enable an offer to be made to the owner at the fair market price recommended by the reviewing committee. It may be an offer from a public institution or from a private source. As now, the owner will be free to accept or refuse any offer. He may also, if he chooses, make it clear that he would not accept an offer from any source. If he does this or if there is an offer in existence following deferral, whether from a public or private source, this will be taken into account and normally a licence will be refused. Of course, if he accepts an offer the application for a licence will lapse. The new elements are that the existence of an offer from a private source will be taken into account when the decision on the export licence is made, as will a general refusal to consider offers from either source in advance of their being made.

So the existence of any offer from any source will influence my decision on whether an export licence should be granted. I should emphasise that the only decision I am empowered to take is whether to grant an export licence or not. I have no power to decide who is to be the owner of the item.

I must emphasise, too, that where a private offer for a heritage item is successful and the new owner then, at any time, wishes to sell or take the object abroad, he will be subject to the normal export licensing requirements.

The consequence of public ownership, which was assumed and encouraged by the Waverley report, has been to ensure public access to the objects purchased. Obviously I am keen that the public should have access to important heritage items, and the extent to which private offers involve some kind of arrangement enabling the public to have access could be an important factor in my consideration. Indeed, my right hon. Friend will be glad to use his good offices to assist in establishing such arrangements. But even where a private offer does not involve any kind of public access we should not presume that ultimately such access would never occur or that the item in question would never be publicly owned. Where an owner of a heritage item wishes to export it and refuses an offer from a private source which involves significant and continuing public access arrangements, I believe that normally he should not be granted a licence to export the item and even when minimal or no public access is provided for in an offer, I will wish to take the existence of that offer into account in deciding whether to grant an export licence. But I must reiterate that the main purpose of the controls is to retain these few important items in this country.

I believe that this extension of our policy to take account of private offers can only enrich our heritage. We have a long and continuing tradition in this country of private collections of antiques and works of art. Private ownership in this as in all other spheres is to be encouraged. It is neither possible nor desirable for the retention of major items of our heritage to be dependent on one source of funding—the taxpayer.

By encouraging the continuing injection of private money into the acquisition of heritage items, we will be creating a greater funding base for them. I am confident that this will enable a larger number of these outstanding heritage items to remain in this country.

It is my intention in due course to issue a revised "notice to exporters" containing guidance on the detail of procedures which will be put into effect as a result of the change of policy outlined above. When issued, a copy of this notice will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I have carefully considered all the circumstances of the application for a licence to export "The Three Graces" by Canova, including the representations made by interested parties. I have noted the existence of the offer by Messrs. Barclay to purchase the statue at the price recommended by the reviewing committee. The choice before me, as I have said, is to refuse or to grant an export licence.

I have taken into account also the recommendation of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts that a licence be refused. In all the circumstances, I have decided that the new policy should apply to this export licence application and decided to refuse the licence. If I had taken a decision to grant an export licence "The Three Graces" would have gone abroad.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lithuania

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Sajudis, the pro-independence movement in Lithuania.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our officials have met members of Sajudis in London and the Soviet Union on a number of occasions.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any representations to the Soviet Union about the situation in Lithuania.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have constantly stressed the need for progress to be made through dialogue between the Soviet authorities and the Lithuanians, so that a settlement acceptable to both sides can be reached, enabling the Lithuanian people to decide their own future. We do not believe that coercive measures will contribute to such an outcome. We have emphasised that restraint is necessary on both sides.

Multiple Warheads

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other Governments and NATO about the possibility of agreement restricting multiple warheads on (a) land-based missiles and (b) sea-based missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Poland

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth of 27 April, Official Report, column 372, about Community support for Poland, if he will detail the specific measures which have been put in place by the Community to help Poland.

Mr. Maude: In order to support the political and economic reforms in Poland, the European Community has: removed/suspended all quantitative restrictions on Polish imports to the Community; donated £117 million of free food to Poland; granted generalised scheme of preferences status and reduced some associated tariffs/ levies on Polish imports; approved £210 million for structural project aid expenditure on agriculture, environment and training in Poland and Hungary in 1990; granted a £750 million lending facility with the European investment bank.

The establishment of the European Training Foundation, the TEMPUS student exchange programme and the European bank for reconstruction and development will also benefit Poland.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth of 27 April, Official Report, column 372, over what period the £117 million of free food has been provided to Poland; and what plans exist for further shipments of such food over the course of the next 12 months.

Mr. Maude: In the period August 1989 to March 1990, £117 million of food was delivered by the European Community to Poland. The Polish Government have not requested any further food aid.

Antarctica

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further protection will be given to Antarctica when the Antarctic minerals convention is ratified.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Antarctic treaty system currently provides no formal means of protecting the Antarctic environment against mineral activities.

The Antarctic minerals convention (CRAMRA) would provide for a rigorous regulatory mechanism to control, or prevent, mineral exploration and development. Consent to proceed with any mineral activity would, under CRAMRA, be permitted only after consensus agreement by all Antarctic treaty consultative parties (numbering 22) and then only if the activity in question was judged not to have a significant impact on the environment. CRAMRA incorporates some of the strictest environmental protection provisions known in international law and its ratification would greatly enhance existing provisions for the protection of the Antarctic environment.

Greenland

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's current relationship with Greenland; when a Minister of the Crown or senior official last visited there; and if any such visit is planned in the near future.

Mr. Maude: Greenland is an autonomous region of Denmark, with which the United Kingdom enjoys good relations. The last visit to Greenland by a senior United Kingdom representative was by Her Majesty's ambassador at Copenhagen in February 1990. During that visit, the ambassador installed the first honorary British consul. There are no plans for other visits in the immediate future.

CSCE Conference

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent conference on security and co-operation in Europe in Bonn.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answers given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 27 April and 1 May at columns 369 and 480.

Iceland

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's current relationship with Iceland; when a Minister of the Crown or senior official last visited there; and if any such visit is planned in the near future.

Mr. Maude: The United Kingdom and Iceland have close and friendly bilateral relations reflecting historical ties and common interests. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces visited Iceland in April 1989, and Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh are to pay a state visit to Iceland in June this year. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be in attendance.

Diplomatic Immunity (Drink-driving Offences)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals his Department has for amending the diplomatic immunity conventions to withdraw immunity from drink-driving offences.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Israel

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there are any negotiations to encourage Israel to support the amendment of the partial test ban treaty to a comprehensive test ban treaty at the test ban treaty conference, January 1991.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there are any negotiations to seek to persuade Israel to sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom is not currently involved in any such negotiations, but we have frequently made clear our view that the best way to achieve a nuclear weapons-free zone in the middle east is for all states in the region to accede to the non-proliferation treaty.

Know-how Fund (Seminars)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether seminars for Polish Members of Parliament funded through the know-how fund on introduction to British parliamentary concepts, took place in the United Kingdom or Poland; and how many British hon. Members were involved.

Mr. Waldegrave: A seminar for Polish Members of Parliament on British parliamentary and political organisation, financed by the know-how fund and organised by the Great Britain/East Europe Centre, took place in the United Kingdom last October. Approximately 17 British hon. Members were involved in either discussions in the House or constituency visits.

A further seminar for Polish parliamentary officials, requested by the Polish Senate, will take place in the United Kingdom later this month. It will also be organised by the Great Britain/East Europe Centre with the close involvement of the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the overseas office of the House of Commons.

Iraq

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Iraq's nuclear installations at Osiraq and Tuwaitha were last inspected by IAEA; and when they are expected to be inspected again.

Mr. Waldegrave: The most recent inspection of nuclear facilities in Iraq by the International Atomic Energy Agency was in the early part of April 1990. Dates of future inspections are treated as confidential between the state concerned and the IAEA inspectorate.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Drift Nets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list areas designated by the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea in which drift nets are used by United Kingdom fishing boats.

Mr. Gummer: United Kingdom vessels may use drift nets in any ICES zone save where there are specific provisions applicable to United Kingdom waters out to six miles.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the management measures applied specifically to the United Kingdom herring drift net fishery.

Mr. Gummer: All British fishing boats over 10 m overall length are prohibited from fishing for herring unless authorised by a licence. No new licences are available; to obtain one a fisherman would have to take over a licence given up by another fisherman, or buy an already licensed boat. In addition, boats 10 m and under need a licence to fish for herring in the Irish sea—including the area known as the Mourne—and the Thames and Clyde estuaries. Exceptionally in the Mourne and Thames estuary, fisheries drift netting is the only permitted method of fishing. Fisheries departments closely monitor uptake from all United Kingdom herring fisheries and regulate catches where necessary with the aim of maximising fishing opportunities to the extent compatible with national quotas and a responsible conservation policy.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average length of drift nets in use on United Kingdom fishing boats.

Mr. Gummer: The length of drift nets varies widely by locality. An average figure cannot be readily calculated, but it is estimated that a substantial proportion are between 200 and 400 m. These figures refer to the overall length of netting used which normally comprises several individual nets joined together.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there is a restriction on the total length of net which may be used or carried by United Kingdom drift net fishing boats.

Mr. Gummer: As the drift net fisheries around the United Kingdom are relatively small scale, they do not give rise to the same environmental concerns as the very large-scale drift netting operations for tuna in the Pacific, in respect of which restrictive action has been taken. There is therefore no general restriction, but some specific restrictions are provided for under legislation concerned with salmon, trout, freshwater fish and eels.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the incidence of drift nets in use on United Kingdom fishing boats being joined together in use to form a single length of a longer net; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is the common practice to join together a number of individual drift nets, each typically about 50 m in length, to form a longer net, most frequently between 200 and 400 m. This facilitates net handling and repairs.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the type of net filament in use on United Kingdom drift netting boats and the mesh size of these nets for each species fished.

Mr. Gummer: United Kingdom drift netters generally use either monofilament or multifilament nets. Monofilament nets predominate except in Scottish inshore waters where they are banned. The filaments are usually of nylon, but non-synthetic yarn is still used in certain areas.

The mesh sizes used normally range from 40 to 60 mm for herring and mackeral, 90 to 130 mm for bass and mullet, and 100 to 130 mm for salmon and trout.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 980, what conclusion he has drawn from the Stormont study's findings that the presence of a substantial population of infected badgers was not associated with tuberculosis breakdown in the study area.

Mr. Maclean: An internal study by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland concluded that the main origin of breakdowns in the limited study area appeared to be cattle-to-cattle contact. There is no reason to doubt the validity of this conclusion for the area studied. Nor is there any contradiction between this conclusion and the firm evidence that exists of badgers being implicated in outbreaks of tuberculosis in other areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the connection between local badger populations and the level of local cattle infected with tuberculosis.

Mr. Maclean: In 1989, badgers were implicated in 69 of the 96 new confirmed cattle breakdowns in south-west England and in one of the 28 occurring elsewhere in Great Britain.

Cattle Exports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions are currently enforced by West Germany on the import from the United Kingdom of live cattle or cattle products.

Mr. Maclean: Under a European Community decision, exports of cattle from the United Kingdom to West Germany and other member states are restricted to animals under six months which are slaughtered before they reach that age. West Germany did seek additional certification requirements for exports of beef and offal, which for a time restricted trade, but for the principal trade in boneless beef this is no longer required.

Salmon Netting

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to announce the results of his review into commercial salmon netting.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) on 26 April, at column 317.

Restricted Commodities (EC)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those commodities currently restricted in their intra-Community trade by the application of article 36 indicating in each case the state applying the ban.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 24 January 1990, at column 770.

Milk and Dairy Inspections

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the amount charged for milk and dairy hygienic inspections for each year from 1979 to the present; how many inspections were carried out during the same time period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Charges for inspection and sampling visits to farms to enforce milk and dairies regulations were introduced on 30 March 1987. Levels of charge since then have been as follows:

	30 March 1987 to 31 March 1989	From 1 April 1989
1. Routine dairy husbandry inspection visit
(a) higher rate	£90	£78
(b) lower rate	£80	£60
First follow-up visit	—	—
Second and subsequent follow-up visits
(a) higher rate	—	£78
(b) lower rate	—	£60
2. Routine sampling visit	£22	£26
Follow-up visit	—	—

Numbers of routine and follow-up inspection and sampling visits to farms in England and Wales over the same period were as follows:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
1. Dairy husbandry inspection visits	24,131	18,335	19,641
2. Sampling visits	8,379	7,442	6,899

My officials are currently consulting interested parties about proposals to increase charges.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 171

SESSION 1989–90

23 April—4th May 1990

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
